There are 19 separate references in the regulations to people in polygamous marriages. There is a special disregard for the earnings of part-time firemen or auxiliary coastguards and the schedule that provides for the disregard for part-time firemen and auxiliary coastguards has special mention and exemption for those part-time firemen and auxiliary coastguards who are in polygamous marriages. I invite the Minister to try to develop the computer package that could cope with such variety and diversity.

It is worth stressing those problems, because a number of local authorities have already been to the Government to say that they cannot do the work by next April. One of the local authorities that has notified the Government that it cannot deliver is Croydon, the borough which contains the constituency of the Secretary of State for Social Services.

I pause there to review all those people involved in critical decision-making in the Government, who are hitting their own constituents. The Prime Minister is hitting her own pensioners disproportionately. The Minister, who has a high rates burden in his constituency, is excluding his constituents from cover of the rates. Finally, the Secretary of State himself has a local authority that cannot implement his own scheme in time. To save the Prime Minister and the Minister from the consequences of their actions, I urge them to reconsider and at least to allow a transitional period for the introduction of their scheme.

We were earlier reminded of the shambles of 1983. It was, according to The Times, the biggest administrative fiasco in the history of the welfare state when housing benefit first began. I vividly remember it because in Edinburgh we had to call the police to remove 200 private tenants from the housing office where they were rioting because they faced eviction if they could not obtain their benefit in time. We shall be faced with similar scenes unless the Government recognise that they cannot possibly get the scheme up and running in time for 1 April and must consider transitional protection.

It is extremely moderate of me to seek transitional phasing for a scheme that I find deeply repugnant and objectionable. However long the Government take to bring in the scheme, its consequences are plain and will be harsh and unjust.

First, many ratepayers, especially the elderly, will find themselves in arrears with their rates. The penalties for rates arrears are severe. In Scotland they are warrant sales and the sale of furniture. In England they are appearance in court and fines on pain of imprisonment. As a result of this measure, some people will lose their furniture and others will face the threat of imprisonment.

The second consequence is that many private tenants will fall behind with their rents. Many of those will find themselves being evicted. They are the most hapless victims of a Government who cannot make up their mind between two contradictory impulses—on the one hand to let private rents go out of control and on the other hand to keep the cost of housing benefit under control.

Lastly, in the public sector local authorities will face a sharply escalating problem of rents and rates arrears. To put it in terms that Conservative Members may understand, the Government are shooting the local authorities with both barrels. On the one hand they are increasing their costs, and on the other hand they are diminishing their revenue.

I want to end with a specific illustration of the consequence for an individual family. It is an illustration provided to me of a real family—a couple with two children—in Newcastle on a gross wage of £110, which is half the national average, who have a current rent of £18, which is typical because £18 happens to be almost exactly the average rent for a three-bedroomed council house. That family, on their wage of £110, have a current weekly charge for housing costs—rents and rates—of £12·86. After 1 April that same family, on their same income and rent, will face a weekly charge of £26·39. Even if there is no rent or rates increase, they face that increase of £13·50 a week simply as a result of the changes in the regulations.

I invite those right hon. and hon. Members who think that new charge reasonable, who consider that increase fair and who are prepared to face that family and say that that increase is fair and that that new charge is reasonable, to vote for the regulations tonight. I invite all other hon. Members who regard such an increase as a scandal, to join me in the No Lobby.

Mr. Tony Favell (Stockport): Often when Parliament tries to help people to meet necessary or socially desirable expenditure, it overlooks the long-term effects that flow from the introduction of a benefit, subsidy or relief. For example, regional subsidies may well provide work for one city but take it away from another. Mortgage interest relief, to which the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) referred, often has unexpected effects. One obvious effect presently being experienced in the south-east is that it puts up house prices. The more people can borrow, the more vendors charge for properties. That was not expected at the time mortgage interest relief was introduced. However, it can still be argued that the advantages of that and of regional subsidies outweigh the disadvantages, but it is unwise ever to forget the other side of the coin.

Housing benefit is no exception to the rule that every benefit, subsidy or relief creates its own special problems. One problem that hon. Members on both sides of the House will immediately recognise is that of landlords who know that they can hoist the rents of those on low incomes or supplementary benefit, knowing that the taxpayer will pick up the tab. Landlords of that ilk are only interested in letting to those on supplementary benefit because most people in work would find it impossible to pay the rents they charge.

For every person who is entitled to help with his rent, there are two persons entitled to assistance with their rates. It is on that narrower aspect that I wish to concentrate, as it is here that the effects of housing benefit have been even more far-reaching. My hon. Friend the Minister pointed out that there are now 7 million ratepayers whose rates are subsidised under the housing benefit scheme. Of those 7 million, 2 million pay income tax. In reply to a recent question by my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Mr. Bowden), it was disclosed that 1 million occupational pensioners both pay tax and receive housing benefit.

With 7 million ratepayers being subsidised, it is no wonder that irresponsible local authorities have been spending as if there is no tomorrow. It is now widely accepted, certainly by Government Members, that too few voters with an interest in containing local government expenditure leads to higher and higher local government expenditure. In Manchester, for example, 57 per cent. of all ratepayers receive rate rebates. With 57 per cent. receiving rebate, quite apart from all those who do not pay rates at all, it is no wonder that Manchester city council is not interested in containing spending.

Mr. Robert Litherland (Manchester, Central): The hon. Member is paranoid.

Mr. Favell: He is also correct.

Until 1966, rate rebates were extremely limited, and local government almost invariably acted in a responsible and careful way. In 1966, a limited national rebate scheme was introduced and in 1974, that national rebate scheme was greatly expanded. Since then, the number of full ratepayers has gone steadily down while the number of irresponsible local authorities has gone steadily up. For the first time since 1974, my hon. Friend is now reducing the number of those on housing benefit. He is to be congratulated. That move, together with the community charge that is shortly to be introduced, will restore sanity to local government. Once again, town halls will be truly answerable to the voters, and as sanity returns to the town halls, spending will return to sensible levels. That is the only true and lasting way to assist those hard-pressed ratepayers who have been fleeced by town halls for too long.

Mr. Robert Litherland (Manchester, Central): A chill goes down my spine when the Government refer to reforms, because I substitute "reforms" for "cuts". I think that is what the whole exercise is about. I will not go down the same road as the hon. Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell) because I know that he is paranoid about Manchester city council. If he paid as much attention to Stockport, I am sure that his constituents would have their interests better cared for. I am concerned about the effects on my constituents of the change to the regulations. Why do we have benefits at all? Why are benefits required? Who are the people who need and depend on benefits? It is certainly not the Ministers who are putting forward the proposals to cut housing benefits, or the series of social security changes that has already been discussed. People in the inner-city areas claim because they depend upon benefit to exist.

Manchester spends well over twice as much on housing benefit as the national average. The reason is the extent of massive unemployment in the inner-city area, low pay, poverty, the crime of getting old and becoming a pensioner, sickness and disability. That is why rates and rents are above average in Manchester. It is because of Government cuts that the Manchester local authority has to provide extra resources. Manchester has made tremendous efforts to encourage residents to take up housing benefit entitlements. The city council has estimated that the cuts will hit its residents disproportionately and that the benefit loss will be at least £9 million, an average weekly loss of £1·50 for each household on housing benefit. It is also estimated that, on the basis of the Green Paper, 105,000 out of 112,000 people will lose some or all of their housing benefit, which is more than nine out of every 10 on housing benefit.

We had worked on the assumption that grant-aided students would be prevented from claiming housing benefit. Now we know the facts. Nearly 7,000 such grant-aided students receive housing benefit from the city council. The average amount is about £214 per academic year and the total cost of that help is £1 million. If, as we expected — we now know — the Government prevent students claiming housing benefit, that will either further penalise individual students or require additional expenditure from hard-pressed local education authorities. What will be the effect of that on the local authorities' resources? The city of Manchester has always taken the view that because of its income support role, the housing benefit scheme should be a national responsibility that should lie with the Department of Health and Social Security.

The imposition of transferring further work to local authorities, while reducing subsidies, implies that local authorities cannot be trusted with the discretion of assessing the needs of their community. Therefore, the Government are forcing incentives to maintain costs on local authorities. That is the crunch of the regulations and it is another blatant infringement of the democratic procedures that have been the prerogative of local authorities in the past.

It is considered inconceivable that two separate agencies should operate the assessment of need and income for the same claimants. My local authority rejects that nonsensical and bureaucratic set-up and believes that redistribution of income can be based only on a national programme. To overcome the severe local and regional disparities, we envisage that those responsible for expenditure must have the power to raise revenue on a national basis. I discussed that matter only this week with the officer in charge of the housing benefit department at Manchester city council. He informed me that his department will have to take on about 30 extra staff to administer the new regulations. It is essential that there are sufficient staff to protect the most vulnerable.

The council is also the major provider of benefits. Every year, 150,000 Manchester residents receive help with their rent and rates from Manchester's housing benefit office. In administering that complex scheme, the city council has resolved that the regulations should be interpreted for the maximum benefit of its residents — and rightly so. Since April 1984, the city council has twice resolved not to carry out national cuts in housing benefit. Instead, it has maintained the level of benefit by operating a more generous local scheme for Manchester residents.

What will be the consequences of the regulations for my constituents? I hope that in replying to the debate the Minister will answer some of the points that have been raised. My constituency has one of the highest percentages of people claiming supplementary benefit, free school meals and housing benefit. I should illustrate the massive unemployment in my constituency. In one area of the Manchester, Central constituency there is 46 per cent. male unemployment. It is now estimated that one third of all residents claim some form of benefit. As I think we would all agree that not everybody claims benefit, it is therefore estimated that about 50 per cent. of Manchester's population are below the poverty line.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) has said, some of the hardest-hit are pensioners. About 80 per cent. of Manchester's pensioners are now poor enough to qualify for supplementary or housing benefit. Many people who live close to the city centre are poor and depend on benefits. Indeed, 39 per cent. of personal incomes in Manchester come from welfare benefits and about £80 million is paid out in housing benefit.

In my constituency, people do not fall foul of the ups and downs of the Stock Exchange. They fall foul of loan sharks — those vultures and parasites who prey on the demise of the poor. That is a growth industry in Manchester, and the Government always welcome that type of entrepreneur.

There are no areas of escape from poverty and its humiliations. I could list the areas and districts in Manchester — for example, in Openshaw, 38 per cent. of my constituents receive benefit. In other areas, 50 per cent. of schoolchildren receive free school meals. That is the situation in Manchester and I hope that the Minister will be able to tell me how my constituents will benefit from the regulations. By imposing such cuts in the housing benefit scheme further hardship is being heaped on communities that are striving to survive. As about 1 million claimants are expected to lose all help with rent and rate payments, surely, as night follows day, many of my constituents will be affected.

I have already mentioned the massive unemployment in my area. There have been closures of steelworks, of heavy engineering factories and of the finest wire manufacturers in the world. Major employers in the area have thrown workers on the streets with only their redundancy money in their pockets to show for a lifetime of work. Many who are only in their 50s are possibly too old to gain full-time employment again and must now face the further indignity of losing their housing benefit entitlement. That is the Government's thanks to the workers of this country.

My hon. Friend the Member for Livingstone mentioned pensioners. Such people have devoted their working lives to creating the wealth of the City and the nation, but they are not excluded from the cuts. In my area 25,000 pensioners receive standard housing benefit and more than half the city's pensioners receive either supplementary or housing benefit. We recognise that not all elderly people are poor but many are clearly on low incomes and are forced to claim benefits.

National statistics suggest that the most vulnerable people are elderly people and those who live alone. As long ago as 1983 a survey showed that 54 per cent. of that group were dependent on state benefits. In Manchester there are more than 30,000 lone pensioner households — that is 17 per cent. of all households. As an estimated three quarters of a million claimants — mainly pensioners — will face benefit cuts, by the law of averages, the pensioners in my constituency will be severely affected. As my hon. Friend said, many are independent. They have scrimped and saved all their working lives for their retirement and for the possibility of enjoying that period of their lives. The cuts will inflict hardship and distress on them because of their thrift. That is the reward of the caring Government.

The Low Pay Unit calculated recently that there are about 430,000 low-income households in Greater Manchester. That means that 44 per cent. of the work force in the Greater Manchester area earn poverty wages. In the city, the percentage will almost certainly be higher and, as we have heard, many of those unfortunates will lose benefits. With £500 million being cut from housing benefit, there will be many losers who can ill afford further cuts in their living standards. How could it be otherwise when the number of Manchester council tenants taking up certificated housing benefit amount to 59 per cent. of the population, and about 34 per cent. of them are in receipt of standard housing benefit? Private sector households do not escape the need to claim benefit—one third of them claim standard or certificated benefit.

These facts, figures, percentages, estimates and forecasts cannot demonstrate the profound hardship that these human beings will suffer. That is an indictment of our so-called affluent society. Many kids in the Manchester area will face a barren Christmas, relying on charity handouts for presents. These things should be exercising the conscience of Scrooge-like Ministers, with little or no compassion. How can they claim to have compassion when the Government's cuts will add to the misery, poverty and sickness that already exist?

There is a recognised correlation between poverty and ill health in our area. In the Manchester inner-city area there are 80 per cent. more deaths among people under 65 than the national average. Not a single person there will be able to afford the luxury of being pampered in a private hospital at £195 a day like the Secretary of State who was instrumental in pushing through these provisions. That is an insult to the poor. We live in a sick society in which more resources can be heaped on the greedy while the lifeline for the needy is being cut. I hope that Tories with consciences will come into the Lobby with us tonight.

Dame Jill Knight (Birmingham, Edgbaston): I strongly resent the attack that has just been made on my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services. It was perhaps symptomatic of the Labour party's extraordinary view that those who already receive large salaries should receive still more to help them when they are sick. The Secretary of State earns his salary daily, and nightly, and it is right that he should spend some of it on paying for his own health care, so leaving a bed for someone who cannot pay.

Whenever the House debates matters of this type, we are regaled with a briefing from the Association of Metropolitan Authorities. We all turn eagerly, leaving aside the rest of our mail, to see what that Labour-controlled organisation has to tell us. Tonight's debate is no exception. I turn to my AMA parliamentary briefing and see in the first paragraph—surprise, surprise—that the association does not like the new benefit scheme. It says:

> "It will reduce benefits available to claimants, will be more difficult to administer, and result in further financial losses to authorities."

My hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell) has with admirable economy already dealt with the charge that there will be more financial losses for the authorities, so I shall not burden the House further with that. His remarks were extremely relevant and knocked the AMA case into a cocked hat.

The association says that the scheme

> "will be more difficult to administer."

That surprises me because the Government's aim is to simplify the system by making it easier for claimants to understand and staff to administer. That is a good aim. Often claimants do not know to what they are entitled because the system is so complicated. Therefore, our striving to simplify the system for people who cannot understand its complexity is a worthy and proper aim. We shall have a more clearly defined structure of income-related benefits, with help based on easily identifiable and understood criteria. The rules for assessment of income-related benefits will be standardised, and administrative rules across the whole range of benefits will be aligned.

The regulations simplify what has been a complicated matter in other ways, too. The evidence against the AMA's claim, and for the Government's view on the matter of simplification, is overwhelming. Aligning income support and family credit must surely make the system simpler, because the assessment will be on net, rather than gross, income.

Mr. Tom Clarke (Monklands, West): As the hon. Lady could not be present for the whole debate, she missed a telling intervention by her hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow), who expressed worries on behalf of his constituents. He asked how the Government arrived at the figure of £6,000, beyond which elderly people in his constituency will be penalised. His view is shared by the AMA. Does the hon. Lady think that her hon. Friend was wrong, too?

Dame Jill Knight: I cannot be responsible for the opinions of my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow). I can only be responsible for my own. Mr. Speaker was well aware of why I could not be in the Chamber for part of the debate. Heavens alive, the regulations have been before us for 16 days. I do not know what the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) does with his time, but I am capable of reading them in 16 days.

The system will also be fairer because people will be treated alike. That has not happened until now, but it is right that they should be. Whether they are in or out of work, they will be treated in exactly the same way. Providing people on benefit with a regular income upon which they can rely and plan seems a good idea. I am pleased to deduce from the regulations that that is what will happen. As an individual's income rises, his benefit will be reduced progressively, which seems perfectly sensible. The more he is paid, or the more money he receives, the less money the public will put in his pocket. It will be done by a fixed proportion of the amount by which his income exceeds a needs level. It is right that that level should be set by the Government at what the regulations call an applicable amount. That will usually be the same as the individual's income support level, which seems perfectly fair.

Mrs. Beckett: I have been following with interest the hon. Lady's argument that benefit should be withdrawn as income rises. Does she apply the same argument to the subsidies that are given to mortgage interest tax relief?

Dame Jill Knight: The hon. Lady brings in the most extraordinary red herrings from time to time.

No one who looks at the regulations will deny that they are extremely complicated. It is not an easy matter to establish one's entitlement to help. We are dealing with people who frequently do not find it easy to explain what their needs are. I am absolutely astonished that the AMA is apparently not aware of that. Most hon. Members have received a tremendous number of complaints about the complexity of the present system, so how the AMA can have the bare-faced nerve to describe the new scheme as difficult to administer I cannot understand, given that we are trying to make it simpler for ordinary people to claim.

Mr. Charles Kennedy (Ross, Cromarty and Skye): Will the hon. Lady give way?

Dame Jill Knight: The hon. Lady will give way to the hon. Gentleman, but I must say that this will be the third time. If I go on like this, I shall talk for far longer than I had wished, in courtesy to other colleagues who wish to speak.

Mr. Kennedy: I am grateful to the hon. Lady. This will be a brief intervention. The hon. Lady is making a great cry about the reform and simplification that the Government are introducing with this measure, but surely what they are reforming and trying to simplify is their own mess when they introduced housing benefit to begin with?

Dame Jill Knight: The hon. Gentleman must understand that the Government have already considerably simplified the complications that lay in their way after previous elections. This is one more step on the road and it is advisable for the sake of claimants.

The AMA document talks about the reduction of available benefits and paints a picture of gloom and doom. It says that more than 1 million people will lose eligibility to benefits. Shock horror. We are back to the stage where Labour keeps putting foward the curious view that public money should be lavished on the un-needy as well as the needy. Our simple point is that the money available for people in need should be restricted to them only. I know that that is a simple point, but apparently it is too complicated for Opposition Members to take in.

If one has savings of £6,000 or more, one really cannot be described as a poor person in need of public help. That sum does not involve a house or money tied up in jewellery or clothing; it is money available to spend there and then. I believe that there can be no possible justification for the argument that people who have quite a substantial amount of money in the bank, at their disposal, should be given more money out of the pockets of those who perhaps do not even have £50 in the bank. I do not know how Opposition Members justify that.

Mr. Keith Bradley (Manchester, Withington): Will the hon. Lady give way?

Dame Jill Knight: I have made it quite clear that I will not give way again.

The situation that I have just described is the system that is in operation at the moment. Many people who pay tax today have less than £50 in the bank. It is not fair to take their money and give it to those who already have a lot. The old Labour party of years ago would have been on my side about that. It would have said, "You don't give vast amounts of public money away to people who have got that money already and who don't have a need." I believe that the thrust of our tax reforms means that we are trying to alleviate the problem faced by those poor people — there are many — who are paying taxes. We want to raise the threshold. Again, we are always under attack from the Opposition about tax cuts, but we are trying to help the very people whom the Labour party ask to fork out to help those who have no need.

An important and significant shift for Britain is to try to get back to the days when healthy people, in work, shouldered their own burdens. [HON. MEMBERS: "Oh!"] Opposition Members may groan, but that idea makes a lot of sense to people outside the House. Of course there are people who cannot bear their burdens, and they must certainly be helped. The difference between the Conservative and Labour Benches is that we want to give more money to the people who cannot help themselves, but they want to give more money to the people who have already got it. That is absolutely crazy.

Currently, we are making fools of ourselves. For too long we have encouraged the view that the state will meet every reverse in fortune suffered by any individual from the womb to the tomb. We must return to the acceptance of the idea that we all have our own burdens. We should fight to carry them and not ask the rest of society to carry them for us.

Three great evils have arisen from the idea that the state will always meet every problem—an idea fostered for so long by the Labour party. First, it saps human will and initiative if someone else is footing the bills and solving the problems. Secondly, a system that allows such a thing to continue means that so much money is taken away in tax that people are incapable of carrying their own burdens. We should consider that. Thirdly, it leads to Government overspending all the time. That, of course, leads to inflation, and again we hit the very people who need to be protected.

The AMA document — hon. Members must understand that I have not had it under my pillow for the past three weeks, but at least I have read it extremely carefully since it arrived — complains about the change from 100 per cent. alleviation of the payment of rates to a mere 80 per cent. alleviation.

If we had a system whereby people who were lucky enough to get benefit could go into a shop and have everything free, it would be incredible. Even if they were told that they were being asked to pay only 20 per cent. of what everybody else paid, I think that they would cheer. I believe that that is a pretty good bargain if one gets one's rate bills settled by having to pay only 20 per cent. Many people would be absolutely delighted with that.

Mr. Favell: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Dame Jill Knight: I did say that I would not, but since it is three to one, I will.

Mr. Favell: My hon. Friend has come to an extremely important matter. What is the AMA frightened of? Is it perhaps that it is frightened of facing its electors?

Dame Jill Knight: My hon. Friend makes an interesting and valid point. I believe that that is probably one of the things that frightens the AMA.

When people pay even a tiny percentage — 20 per cent.—of the rates, they will be much more interested in how that money is spent. All the vast sums being spent on one-armed homosexual window-cleaners' social clubs will come to public notice. "Hallo," they will say, "that is not what I pay my 20 per cent. of rates for." That is a good thing. Let the searchlight of public understanding fall on some local councils' expenditure and we will be all the better for it.

I am extremely glad that the preferential treatment built into the income support for disabled people will be reflected in the housing benefit calculation. That gave me particular pleasure. [HON. MEMBERS: "Oh, yes!"] Opposition Members do not have a monopoly of care and concern for the disabled. They should also learn a few manners.

Those on income support will continue to get full help with rent, and that is right. Indeed, more than four fifths of those on income support will be either better off or stay the same as now. Having read about such provisions in the regulations and having listened to some Opposition Members' speeches, I cannot equate the two views. The hard cases that the hon. Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Litherland) discussed will surely continue to be helped in the same way as they have been until now.

Mrs. Beckett: No, they will not.

Dame Jill Knight: Oh yes, they will. Sixty per cent. of housing benefit goes to pensioners. One must examine their needs, because they will be the group most affected. I understand from the figures that half will gain and half will lose. However, those who lose will be the ones to whom I have already referred — those who have more than £6,000 in the bank.

I do not know how Opposition Members were brought up, but I would have thought £1,000 in the bank to be a fortune, let alone £6,000, when I was growing up. As long as people are able to meet their needs from their disposable income, how can it be right for the taxpayer to be asked to do it for them? I welcome the regulations, the thought behind them, the extra simplification and the recognition that some people need help and must continue to get it.

With great enthusiasm I shall support the regulations.

7.20 pm

Mr. Charles Kennedy (Ross, Cromarty and Skye): Before I follow the interesting excursion of the hon. Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston (Dame J. Knight) into the equity of the Government's behaviour, I must apologise to the Minister for missing the early section of his speech, because I was delayed in travelling. However, I must compliment the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on an analytical and excellent demolition of the Government's case. I fully associate myself with his comments.

Housing benefit is an issue which successive Conservative Ministers have come to the House to simplify, extend, alter and reform. They are still trying to achieve that aim this evening. It is nonsense for the hon. Member for Edgbaston to boast about the Government's magnificient achievement in bringing forward this simplification. All hon. Members who have dealt with constituency cases involving previous simplifications tend to say, "We will see what happens with this one." It is a bit much for the hon. Lady to hold this up as a great achievement, when the Government are trying to sort out the entrails of their predecessors' efforts to minimise and restructure the system, which have resulted in shambles, as the Minister is aware.

The Minister was determined to talk about the plight of pensioners. Hon. Members on both sides of the House know that several years ago many pensioners who had never been in debt in their lives received notification from local authorities of considerable debts about which many of them were almost worried to death. They came to hon. Members and asked what could be done about it. That was the administrative nightmare that the system introduced.

Although any simplification will be welcome — and we cannot make a final judgment on that tonight — the Government should be a little more careful when claiming so much credit for what is, after all, a mess largely of their own making. The hon. Member for Edgbaston kindly took an intervention from me, but told us that she did not want to take too many others. I was less worried about the interventions. Indeed, the quality of her speeches would be improved by more interventions from Opposition Members and fewer contributions to the detail of her speeches from what I presume is Conservative central office. I found the image of society in Britain that she painted to be far removed from the lives of too many people in Britain.

Dame Jill Knight: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for giving way. I suggest that he has no right to tell me whence I get my material. The main thrust of my argument was that it was ridiculous and wrong to give public money to people who do not need it. Does the hon. Gentleman agree or disagree with that?

Mr. Kennedy: Every hon. Member will agree that public money should be effectively used. There is no argument about that. In an intervention during the speech by the hon. Member for Livingston, the hon. Lady's hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell) asked how many millions more people will be on housing benefit. The Prime Minister talks about the evils of a nanny state and people being too dependent. Because of their economic policy, the Government have made more people than ever before dependent on the welfare state.

Dame Jill Knight: That is nonsense.

Mr. Kennedy: I do not understand how the hon. Lady can say that that is nonsense, given the present levels of unemployment and dependency. Many Conservative Back Benchers complain about the number of people who are eligible for housing benefit. They should ask themselves why so many people are eligible, even under a scheme that successive Ministers have attempted to restrict. It is because so many people have an income that is so low that even this Government are forced to concede that it is inadequate in a civilised country like Britain. Government policies have caused that situation and the humbug and hogwash that we hear about targeting resources most effectively is like looking at a glass of water and arguing that it is not half full but half empty. The Government are standing logic on its head by claiming credit for a situation to which their own policies have been the major contributors. The oozing self-congratulatory selfishness that comes from Ministers and Conservative Back Benchers does not commend itself to the millions of people who will be affected by these proposed changes.

I shall touch briefly on one or two of the main points that arise from this measure. I shall deal first with the 20 per cent. rates contribution. The hon. Member for Edgbaston is attracted to this, but I doubt very much if those who will have to pay it will be attracted to it. The hon. Lady will not find the public fascination with this 20 per cent. rates contribution that she predicted. The level of interest on the part of the public will be restricted to those poor people who will be aware that they will have to pay a 20 per cent. contribution that at the moment they do not have to pay. The interest will end there. It will not extend, as the hon. Lady said it will, into a higher level of participation in scrutiny of local authorities.

We are told that this extra payment will be offset by increased income support. I think that the amount being discussed is about £1·30. However, that does not take account of areas in which there is high rating and in which, obviously, that offsetting amount in income support will be inadequate.

I have no more brief than the hon. Lady for a Labour organisation. However, I listen to experts. The Association of Metropolitan Authorities has argued with considerable force that we could well end up with a nonsensical scheme that is difficult and expensive to administer compared with what it brings in. As the hon. Member for Livingston said, in Scotland that will lead to an increased likelihood of warrant sales which must be one of the most offensive and unacceptable things on the local government statute book —if I may put it that way—north of the border. We do not wish to see that happen.

The rent taper is increased by 5 per cent. to 65 per cent. Obviously, its application on net instead of gross income is sensible and welcome. However, the 65 per cent. rent taper amounts to a cut of about £150 million in housing benefit. It will also mean an increase in the poverty trap, because the marginal tax rates for households paying tax and 9 per cent. national insurance and receiving help towards rent and rates has risen from 61·75 per cent. over the past four years. As a result of this measure, it will go up to 91 per cent. The highest rate of income tax over the same period and, indeed, before is now down to 60 per cent. and is paid on only taxable income above £41,200 per annum. That shows that there is a gross distortion in the way in which the Government are dealing with and handling public finance in terms of the distribution of wealth in Britain. That is why the double standards of the Government are so unacceptable.

In terms of the capital rule, the hon. Member for Edgbaston thinks that £1,000 is a great deal of money and that £6,000 is an absolute fortune. When Invergordon aluminium smelter closed in my constituency several years ago, there were significant redundancy payments. However, alternative employment for those people made redundant has not found its way to that part of the country and they have been living on dwindling assets. For that reason, the £6,000 capital limit that the Government propose is not in any way related to the reality of the predicament in which those people find themselves.

On average, local authority rents have increased by 155 per cent. since 1979. Over the same period, housing benefit has been reduced on four occasions and another cut is due in April. Given a track record like that, there is no guarantee that further cuts will not follow. The Government's record on that is deplorable and it shows consistent negligence on their part that they have not addressed the housing benefits system with a good deal more equity and fairness than this measure suggests.

The Government's White Paper on housing proposes decontrol of rents. In areas such as London, rents will be all too liable to rocket if landlords are able to charge an amount that the market will bear. There is a contradiction in that because, in a sense, the Government, given their market fascination, wish that to be allowed to happen while at the same time restricting the degree of application and support of housing benefit. That is a mark of the inconsistency of the Government's approach. That will mean a reduction in living standards unless housing benefit goes up accordingly. Four cuts since 1979 and another one promised in April is hardly the basis on which we can have much confidence that that will happen.

My final point is about the recovery of overpayments. In many ways this is one of the most remarkable sections of the publication that is before us. It would have been wonderful to sit in at the meetings between civil servants and Ministers when they decided on the definition of an overpayment. To have the gall to institute measures to recover overpayments from this category of person is quite remarkable. At the moment the maximum that can be taken from benefit to recover an overpayment is £4·65 a week. The limit—surprise, surprise—is one of the few things that will go up because of this measure. Another is the taper percentage increase. Therefore, people receiving supplementary benefit or income support, when it is introduced, are already on the poverty line, according to the Government's own official definition; otherwise they would not be eligible for such support. To talk about increasing the amount for the recovery of an overpayment for people in that income category is ridiculous.

We shall certainly oppose these regulations. They highlight the great distortions in housing policy in Britain, in that those who are unfortunate enough to be in receipt of income which enables them to be recipients of housing benefit are castigated by hon. Members such as the hon. Member for Stockport. It is said that people at the worst end of the income spectrum are going cap in hand for support from public finance, but the public finance should be there by right to alleviate their distress.

People like me who are in employment and at an age when overheads in terms of dependants are not high and who benefit from mortgage interest relief continue to enjoy a straightforward subsidy. Mortgage interest relief should continue, but not at the higher levels that we see at the moment. It should be restricted to people who pay standard rate income tax. It would be equitable if the Government were to come forward and do something even-handed like that while trying to restrict housing benefit or simplify the system. Of course, that would inevitably lead to losers.

If the Government acknowledged that many people are doing very well while many of their fellow citizens continue to get poorer, they would get a more reasonable hearing in the House. However, they will not do that. All their energies are concentrated on restricting the rights of the poorest people while not addressing Britain's tax distortions. They need to be addressed and I hope that the Chancellor will yet address them. The Government's attitudes point to inconsistency and a completely irreconcilable conflict in the approach that the Minister is taking. I cannot believe that the Minister is proud of these regulations or can take much satisfaction from them. He has a reputation as a humane man. I hope, therefore, that he will implement them in that manner.

7.35 pm

Mr. Chris Butler (Warrington, South): It has been accepted by Governments of all political persuasions that budgets should be set and then adhered to. There is no unlimited pot of taxpayers' money that the Government can spend. Therefore, as the global total is limited, it is hon. Members' responsibility to ensure that that money is spent wisely and that the best priorities are placed upon it. I hope that Labour Members will not regard the proposition as jejune, but I believe that taxpayers' money should be concentrated on those who are least well off in society. If not, those least well off will be penalised and those relatively better off will enjoy the extra benefits.

It is remarkable that the Labour party has sought to defend the relatively better-off sections of the community in this respect. There is a natural tendency for social security expenditure to expand beyond the limits originally conceived. This can happen for a variety of reasons. For example, the original legislation may have unforeseen consequences. Often people use human ingenuity in exploiting the flexibility of the regulations. There is also a tendency for the creeping establishment of precedents by social security commissioners as they respond to the reasonable and understandable human difficulties before them.

We have had help with housing costs for many years. Back in 1975-76, the Labour Government spent £259 million on rent rebates for 1 million households and helped with housing costs for a further 1 million households through the supplementary benefit system. However, in 1979-80 the Government helped 5·5 million households with housing costs at a cost of £1·24 billion. In 1986-87 the Government are helping 7 million households at a cost of £5·1 billion. That is equal to one third of all households in this country.

I would like to ask the Minister an important question. What was the original concept of housing benefit in this respect? What was meant to be the original catchment of housing benefit? As an ex-civil servant, I ask myself whether this may have been yet another example of, "Yes, Minister". When such a benefit extends to a third of the population, it seems to have engendered a remarkable expansiveness. Of course, housing benefit will be a welcome addition to the income of those who are relatively well off. I do not dispute that. I am sure that some of my constituents will nag me when they lose that benefit, but few of them would be content to be regarded as financially disadvantaged or poor. Indeed, some would be quite offended by that.

At present, real, personal disposable incomes are at record levels and, in all parts of the income distribution, standards of living are higher than they were in 1979. The Opposition may prefer to talk about cuts rather than targeting. I agree that savings of £640 million are implicit in the measure. That too has to be set in the context of an increase in social security expenditure of 35 per cent. since we came to power in 1979. Of course, some of that will be demand-led but a large proportion of it is due to real increases in benefits to those in need.

The Opposition have said that pensioners will be hit, particularly those with capital of £6,000. I was surprised that the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) defended the income rule instead of the capital rule. That would mean that a pensioner could have £100,000 underneath his or her bed and still get housing benefit. What kind of Socialism would that be?

Mrs. Beckett: I am not sure that I heard the hon. Gentleman correctly. Did he understand what my hon. Friend the Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) was saying? My hon. Friend said that people with large sums of capital should have the income from that capital taken into account. It would be unlikely, unless he had an extraordinarily unwise adviser, that anyone with £100,000 would have so little income that he was entitled to housing benefit.

Mr. Butler: In that case what is the objection to a capital rule? If income is to be taken as a strict analogue of capital, why was the hon. Gentleman pressing for an income rule?

I would have more sympathy with the Opposition if they concentrated on those deeply in need of benefits and if, instead of belabouring my hon. Friend for taking away benefit from the relatively well off, they belaboured him perhaps for not targeting these benefits more precisely.

I am the son of a general practitioner. He has undertaken a large number of assessments for attendance allowance. I have read many of those assessments and I have been greatly moved by the dedication and selflessness of the families of the claimants. Year after year they show altruism that makes me proud to be a human being. They save the National Health Service millions, or perhaps billions, of pounds a year. I shall regard my work in the House as incomplete if at the end of my days here attendance allowance does not reflect more closely its deserts. I hope that I shall always be careful to distinguish between defending benefits for the better off and the sensitive prioritisation of expenditure on those who desperately need it.

7.42 pm

Mr. George Howarth (Knowsley, North): The regulations have to be judged by the House against two crucial tests—who will gain and who will lose, and what general effect will the change have on the provision of decent housing for those in housing need? As to who will gain and who will lose, the Government must concede that when more than £500 million is taken out of the system some groups will lose. One group that has been discussed in detail is the elderly who may have problems following retirement.

In that context I should like to quote from a letter from Mr. Michael Corp, the group director of Anchor, a housing association, a body which has a fine record in providing suitable houses for the elderly. So far as I know, Mr. Corp has no connection with the Labour side of the House and has no political axe to grind. He felt moved to write to hon. Members in these terms:

> "We estimate that at least 50 per cent. of our 22,000 tenants (a far from wealthy group as you may know) will lose benefit entirely or suffer a considerable reduction in entitlement. Unlike those in employment older people have no option or opportunity to increase income to meet the shortfall."

That is an objective comment by someone who is heavily involved in providing housing for the elderly. I find that comment disturbing. The Government have to be more convincing about who will lose, particularly among the elderly, before they will get sympathy for the changes in the regulations.

My hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Litherland) has described vividly the effect of the change on the residents of Manchester. Knowsley and Manchester are not dissimilar. We have unemployment, urban deprivation, low incomes and all the usual desperate problems that urban areas have been confronted with since 1979. I have done research on the effects of the change on the people of Knowsley. I want to give two examples, although I shall not give the names. A couple of pensioners on a small occupational pension which brings their overall income to £1·03 above the supplementary benefit level will lose £5·98 a week. Another single parent with two children and a net income of £81·44 a week will lose £5·19 a week.

Of the 30,000 people in the borough of Knowsley currently receiving housing benefit at varying levels it is estimated that 7,500 will lose because of the changes in April. Of those 7,500, 2,000 are pensioners. That is the effect that the changes will have on people in the real world outside.

We have to be realistic about the situation nationally. About 1 million of the 7 million who receive benefit will be taken out of the system. The hon. Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) talked with some pride about the fact that 7 million people receive housing benefit. Why have 7 million been drawn into the system? The truth is that poverty among the old, the low paid and the unemployed has increased inexorably since 1979. That is why 7 million people qualify for housing benefit.

I shall not shrink from dealing with one further subject in detail. One cannot consider housing benefit without contrasting it with the system of mortgage tax relief which runs parallel to it. Currently £4·75 billion of revenue lost to the Exchequer is spent on mortgage tax relief for owner-occupiers. Fifty-five per cent. of those who receive mortgage income tax relief earn between £10,000 and £20,000 a year. Worse still, 26 per cent. of those who receive mortgage subsidy through the tax system earn over £20,000 a year. That is the reality of the two systems that are operating side by side.

Mr. Andrew Rowe (Mid-Kent): Is the thrust of the hon. Gentleman's remarks that the Labour party is now advocating the removal of mortgage tax relief?

Mr. Howarth: I will state my opinion on that in a moment. I do not purport to speak officially for the Labour party on this subject.

It is incredible that the two systems operate in parallel and that the major benefit of the two systems goes to high earners. Basically that is the reality of the statistics. I am in pretty good company for a change in my views on this subject. The Archbishop of Canterbury's report "Faith in the City" recommended a total and thorough-going review of the whole system of housing subsidy, and the National Federation of Housing Associations' inquiry into British housing made similar recommendations. Indeed, that inquiry was chaired by Prince Philip.

In response to the point raised by the hon. Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe), I support the proposals of the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors, and that is not a great revolutionary or Left-wing body. It recommended that mortgage income tax relief should be phased out and a single universal system of housing allowance phased in. Sooner or later this Government—like a future Labour Government—will have to bite on that bullet because of the growing and spiralling costs of mortgage tax relief. Any Government of whatever political complexion will have to consider that proposal seriously.

My next point relates to the effect that the proposals will have on the provision of good quality housing for people with housing needs. We must consider what the experts have said. The Merseyside regional council of the National Federation of Housing Associations—a group of professional people who are concerned about the provision of decent housing—stated:

> "Associations will be looking at levels of Housing Benefit payable over the next 5 years, and what tenants can afford to pay. With private finance, the level of voids and fear of losing resources, associations will be looking for safer tenants, those able to pay."

In other words, because of these and other measures in train, instead of seeking to help people in greatest need, the housing association movement will be looking for those who can afford to pay for housing that was originally designed for people in need. That is rather strange.

Ministers, including the Prime Minister, have applauded the development of housing co-operatives around the country and particularly on Merseyside for providing good quality housing for rent. Indeed, they have applauded them because there is an element of self-help and they claim that co-operatives are wonderful since they enable working class people to have the opportunity to design, run, manage and maintain their own homes. I agree with that praise. I am very concerned about that issue.

However, the National Federation of Housing Co-operatives is also concerned about the regulations. It is concerned because housing co-operatives do not have the resources of housing associations or local authorities and the delays that the system will inevitably introduce in terms of registration will lead to difficulty in planning, and uncertainty and difficulty for housing co-operatives. The federation also believes that the confusion over the reasonableness of market rents and the effect that that will have will cause problems in attracting private finance for new schemes. The proposals are set out in the White Paper shortly to be presented to the House in the new Housing Bill. Those bodies are deeply concerned about providing rented housing. They are desperately worried about the consequences of the regulations and the proposals in the impending Housing Bill.

The regulations and the proposed Housing Bill are shoddy measures. The regulations will affect the old, the poor and the low-paid very greatly. By continuing to subsidise those who do not need assistance in terms of mortgage tax relief and withdrawing subsidy from those in need through the housing benefit system, the Government are operating a shoddy system that discriminates against those in need in favour of those who need less. The regulations are disgraceful and they deserve to be thrown out by the House. Sadly, that probably will not happen.

Mr. Andrew Rowe (Mid-Kent): This debate takes place against the background of a topic that is very seldom discussed in the House — the doctrine of relative deprivation. It is perfectly true that there are psychological disadvantages when one's neighbours can afford rather more this year and even more next year than oneself. That is clearly difficult to put up with. However, the introduction of the doctrine of relative deprivation—and when I used to teach social policy, relative deprivation was a great talking point among the students—has meant that without fail there will be a block of the poor so defined because there is a moving boundary.

It is very important for us to remember that, as one of my hon. Friends has already explained, by and large there is growing prosperity and there are more prosperous people in this country than ever before. In those circumstances it is entirely absurd to have one household in three, some 7 million people, drawing a benefit that was clearly designed to ameliorate some of the difficulties encountered by what was always imagined to be a small minority of people in a hostile housing market.

Mr. George Howarth: Is it not equally implausible to have a benefit through the tax system for owner-occupiers which is equally undiscriminatory?

Mr. Rowe: I believe that it would be good if the Conservative party could return with more zeal to the pursuit of what the party originally came to power to achieve, the removal of all forms of perk. All perks distort the working of the economy and I have often said in this House that I believe in a guaranteed minimum income which would remove many of those specific allowances and grants — for example, mortgage relief or housing benefit — the effect of which is always to distort the market. Given that we are a long way from achieving that now, I want to support the tenet of my hon. Friends to reduce the number of households dependent on housing benefit.

The rates payment is particularly absurd. The idea that one should meet public expenditure costs out of public expenditure by paying for it through an administrative system which adds enormously to the cost of the whole system is wholly absurd. The hon. Member for Knowsley, North (Mr. Howarth) said that the cuts in housing benefit will affect the quality of housing provision. One of the most disquieting features of the housing benefit system as a whole is that many people are making a very fat living out of providing substandard housing, simply because they know that the state will meet the cost. This is not the debate in which to try to work out ways of preventing that, but I consider it one of the weaknesses of the system.

The hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) made much of the poverty trap in which the young may find themselves. In my view, people over 50 or 55 who decide, with perfect rationality, that it is not worth getting up early, waiting for a bus and paying a large fare to go to a job that will yield them only £5 or £6 a week more than they would receive on benefit are fully entitled to remain at home. However, that is surely the worst decision that young people can make. Hon. Members who tell them that they have no need to go to work and that it is disgraceful to expect them to do so, because they will receive only £5 or £6 more than the benefit level, are doing them a serious disservice.

I realise that, in some parts of the country, young people experience enormous difficulty in finding work. In my part of the world, however, work is plentiful at present. Young people who decide to work, even if it is for a very small net reward at the beginning, frequently rise quickly to a level of wages considerably higher than the level on which they began. They also find it very much easier to move from one job to another. It is the old story: it is far easier to get a job from a job. It may sometimes be very tempting for young people not to work, because they are told by their elders, and by those who ought to know better, that it is not worth it because the differential between wages and benefit is not enough. Such people are doing themselves and their future careers considerable harm.

A curious outcome of the widespread and radical reforms gradually being introduced in the system of income support, rating and so forth is that some of the poorest of my constituents will receive considerable benefits. By a strange quirk, when the community charge is introduced, they will be reimbursed on the average level for the 20 per cent. they are expected to pay. That is because the frugal local authorities, which are very well run in my part of the world, have succeeded in keeping down their expenditure to a remarkable degree. I realise that that does not operate throughout the country, but it nevertheless underlines the enormous benefits to be derived from living in an area with a good record of frugal local government.

We are aiming not only for clarity, but to reduce the number of people in the trap — for trap it is. While, as always happens, some unfortunate families and individuals will lose considerably, and others will lose slightly, the majority of those who will be excluded from housing benefit will find that they can survive far better than they ever expected. One of the emasculating effects of a large benefit programme is that more and more people are sucked into it, because it becomes less and less attractive to make the effort to avoid it. I do not blame them; it seems an entirely sensible thing to do. Nevertheless, it is a worrying phenomenon that the number of people eligible for housing benefit is rising, at a time when unemployment is falling sharply.

I remind hon. Members that, although the capital sum is low, it is higher than it was before the introduction of the regulations. One of the hardest questions of public policy is, "How do we look after the frugal ant, rather than the frivolous grasshopper?" How do we persuade those who have carefully set aside — often with considerable difficulty — a proportion of their earnings over many years, and built up a small sum against a rainy day, that it is just to give virtually the same benefit at the end of the day to someone who has not done that, and may even have gloried in not doing it?

The more that my hon. Friends can do to secure a higher capital sum over the years, the better I shall be pleased. I agree with Opposition Members that £6,000 is not a very large sum, although many more people now have such a sum, partly as a direct consequence of the present Government's taxation policies. I shall be delighted if I discover that the new-look Labour party's policy is so to operate the taxation system that it too will increase the number of people who find it relatively easy to build up substantial lump sums. We have already heard that the Opposition's target would be a much higher sum.

I should prefer to move in one fell swoop to a guaranteed minimum income, of which housing benefit would be just a part, rather than an entirely separate benefit. However, I support the regulations.

8.7 pm

Mr. Keith Bradley (Manchester, Withington): Before I discuss the regulations in detail, let me make one or two comments about the surprises I received from the Minister's opening remarks. For instance, I was surprised that the hon. Gentleman suggested that the measures would simplify the previous system, without pointing out that it was the present Government who caused chaos throughout the country with the regulations that they brought in in 1982-83. They are responsible for the misery that many claimants suffered in my city of Manchester at that time.

I believe that the new regulations will again cause misery and chaos, because not enough time, thought and effort has been allowed for local authorities to introduce them properly.

I was also surprised that the Minister tried to isolate housing benefit from housing policy in general. Only recently, the Minister for Housing and Planning, when discussing the move to deregulate all rents in the private sector, said publicly and openly that he would turn to the Department of Health and Social Security to support that deregulation through housing benefit. The Minister denied any relationship between housing benefit and the Tory Government's general housing policy.

I was surprised to hear that the hon. Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston (Dame J. Knight) believes that, if one has £6,000 in the bank, one should not receive any benefit from the state. Does she say that, if one has £6,000 in the bank, one should not receive mortgage tax relief? It is exactly the same. She wishes everyone to have an open-ended commitment to mortgage tax relief, but she denies poor people's rights to housing benefit if they have £6,000. What hypocrisy we hear from the Tory Government.

I distance myself from the comments that were made by the hon. Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell), who said that one goes cap in hand to receive benefit if one is poor. Before I was elected to the House, I worked for the Stockport health service. I saw the poverty and the needs of the people of Stockport. To make ends meet, they rely on income support through the housing benefit. It is deplorable for the hon. Gentleman to represent such people, claim that they go cap in hand, and, at the same time, accuse Manchester of helping needy people. We should dissociate ourselves from such remarks.

I shall identify the proposed changes in the backdating arrangements for housing benefit, the provision for extra housing benefit in exceptional circumstances, and the abolition of the local housing benefit scheme. Before I refer to them in detail, I associate myself with remarks made by the hon. Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Litherland), who made a strong case for Manchester. I also represent a Manchester constituency. My hon. Friend said that the cuts, which are estimated at £500 million—the Minister admitted that we are talking about £640 million—will seriously affect the people of Manchester. On the basis of the £500 million cut, we estimated that nine out of 10 Manchester claimants will lose some of their housing benefit, and that one in 10 such claimants will lose the benefit altogether. The Government claim that the combination of the changes in income support, family credit and housing benefit will alleviate the effects of the cuts and that no one will be made worse off. The Minister admitted that his figures do not give a realistic impression of the amount that will be cut from housing benefit.

We in Manchester computed the effects of the combination of the changes to family credit and housing benefit. We found that practically all low-income families will be no better off and that many will be worse off. Taking into account different combinations of family types, incomes, rents and rates, we found that there were poverty traps. No one on a low income will gain anything from the changes. Also, taking into account the Government's unforgiveable decision to limit free school meals to families who receive income support, the effect of the changes will be even more dramatic. In Manchester, families will lose £2·25 per child each week. We have estimated that 11,000 children will suffer. That will compound the effect of the cuts that we are discussing.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mr. Michael Portillo): Does the hon. Gentleman agree with the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher), who believes that benefits should be paid in cash and not in kind?

Mr. Bradley: We are talking about income support for all families. A crucial element of income support is free school meals. Up to 80 per cent. of schoolchildren in my constituency rely on free school meals. The cuts will cause them severe hardship. Free school meals will be denied to them.

Furthermore, housing benefit claimants will be the only ones to suffer no transitional protection from benefit cuts. That will seriously undermine the budgetary arrangements of many low-income families.

Pensioners will be seriously affected by the cuts. One in five people in my constituency are pensioners. Many of them live on state retirement pensions. Many of them have been thrifty and have managed to put a little money in the bank. Conservative Members claim that £6,000 is a lot of money. It is not a lot of money for pensioners who have worked throughout their lives. Their benefit will be removed and they will suffer because they have put some money in the bank for emergencies or for peace of mind in old age. The Government are attacking the peace of mind of old people in my constituency of Manchester, Withington.

The regulations presently allow a local authority to backdate a claim for housing benefit for up to 12 months, if, in its opinion, the circumstances are exceptional. The regulations allow authorities a wide discretion for backdating to alleviate hardship. I have sat on numerous housing benefit review boards. They have used that discretion to ensure that people who are entitled to their benefit receive it. We have used it to ensure that their hardship is alleviated. From April 1988, when the regulations come into effect, backdating may be used only if the claimant proves that there is good cause for his failure to make that claim throughout the period for which the backdating is sought. That is a much more restrictive measure.

Many of the circumstances that are currently used for backdating will be denied. Many local authorities will not be able to use the circumstances that now constitute the interpretation of good cause. For example, ignorance of entitlement—I stress the word "entitlement"—will not be considered to be good enough cause for backdating. Matters such as illiteracy or limited English in respect of the interpretation of forms will no longer qualify a claimant for backdating. I hope that the junior Minister will say that backdating will be used as widely as it currently is used by local authorities.

It is hard to understand why such restrictions are considered to be fair when they refer to a person's legal entitlement to benefit. For example, a taxpayer is allowed seven years in which to rectify the backdating of his income tax assessment. So he may refer back seven years.

without penalty, to receive the income tax refund to which he is entitled. We are talking about restricting housing benefit for 12 months. It is another example of the Government looking after the rich and denying the rights of the poor.

Backdating is further exacerbated by the change in subsidy arrangements. Currently, backdating attracts a 90 per cent. subsidy. From April 1988, it will be cut to 25 per cent. The Government have stated that their objective is to encourage responsible administration by local authorities. The effect of the subsidy change will be precisely the opposite. It will discourage authorities from carrying out their legal duty to pay backdated benefit, even when the regulations require it.

I now refer to the extra housing benefit for exceptional circumstances. Currently, extra housing benefit can be paid to cover all general and water rates. With the draconian decision to force all claimants, however poor, to pay water rates and 20 per cent. of eligible rates, it is not clear to me whether local authorities will have an opportunity to give extra help to poor people who cannot afford such bills. If this facility is not made available, many more people will suffer severe hardship. But if it is, since no subsidy is payable on such extra help, the cost to hard-pressed local authorities to alleviate such hardship will be astronomical and prohibitive because of the cuts in support that they have suffered. I hope that the Minister will clarify what is eligible for housing benefit payment over and above the 20 per cent. that local authorities now have to pay.

My next point, which is crucial to Manchester, concerns local housing benefit schemes. The present legislation allows local authorities to operate schemes on a more generous basis than the national model scheme. Since 1984, Manchester has used that power to enhance standard housing benefit claimants, thus benefiting such claimants. In 1986-87, it cost £1 million. It did not attract subsidy, but we considered it essential to eliminate hardship among low-income families and to allow local needs to dictate how we interpret and use the housing benefit scheme. That power is removed by these regulations. The loss of such a local scheme will increase the general losses of claimants in Manchester. We have estimated that over 30,000 claimants will be worse off and will lose benefit because of the abolition of the local scheme.

In Manchester we shall publicise these changes because we believe it right that people should know what their entitlements will be. We know that the Government will support that view because we have seen, time and time again, how keen they are to publicise changes in legislation. They spend thousands, if not millions, of pounds on advertising new policies such as the right to buy or those in other sectors of social security payments. Will the Minister confirm that the Government will spend the same amount of money to tell people exactly how much benefit they will lose under these regulations?

We have been told that we should not consider these changes in isolation, and I certainly will not. I was elected as the Member of Parliament for Manchester, Withington, in June. It was a seat that we won for the first time, and that was precisely because over the past eight years many people have been ground down by cut after cut in pensions, benefits and housing benefit. Cut after cut of housing benefit has ground them into poverty, so they reacted by kicking out the Tory at the election.

Since I have been in the House I have witnessed a continuation of that policy. In the past few weeks there have been further miserly increases in pensions, the freezing of child benefit and cuts in the real value of benefits. We are now debating the introduction of further cuts in benefit. People in Manchester have said that enough is enough. We shall oppose the Government all the way on these issues. We in Manchester will ensure that people understand that when their rents or rates increase and they are in financial hardship, the blame should be placed squarely on the shoulders of the Tory Government.

Mr. James Arbuthnot (Wanstead and Woodford): I have enjoyed the style of Labour Members' speeches, but I have been increasingly surprised by their content. Nobody could deny that the existing rules on income-related benefits are anomalous and odd. The rules on eligibility for supplementary benefit say one thing and those for housing benefit say another. For supplementary benefit, investment income is ignored, but more than £3,000 of capital deprives one of benefit altogether. For housing benefit, capital is ignored but investment income is taken into account. That is not particularly sensible, and it creates anomalies. However, just as important, it creates confusion in the minds of people who need housing benefit. We must remember that we are talking not of want but of need. People at the poorest end of the income scale are not often best placed to be able to understand the welter of different regulations that apply to different benefits. I can say with confidence that few people understand the differences between these regulations and still fewer understand any need for them.

I welcome these new regulations because, by drawing together income-related benefits, the differences disappear and the rules are simplified. They are welcome and long overdue. However, there must be a rider to that. Confusion can be created not only by regulations, which themselves are complicated, but by frequent changes to them. The more the law is changed, whether by statute or statutory instrument, the more those who need benefits and those who administer them are kept in a state of bewilderment. It is all very well to have a new law that is simpler but it does not help if the people who administer it have just caught up with the old one.

Frequent changes generate a cost in themselves, even if in the long run they are simpler and cheaper to administer. They need new books and forms, and extra training for those who administer them. That extra cost must be taken into account and cannot be ignored.

While I welcome the new regulations, I hope that they will be the last changes for a long time. There may be imperfections in them—no law is perfect—but as long as we can live with them we should leave well alone.

I welcome the regulations for several reasons. The main one is that they concentrate available resources into the hands of the poorest of our society. In that regard, the Government have two duties. The first speaks for itself—to provide support for those who cannot provide it for themselves. The second duty is just as important—not to provide support to those who can support themselves. They have a duty not to provide support to those who can rely on their own resources. If we provide support to those who have their own resources and for those who do not need it, we create a dependence on that support and on Government. I congratulate the Government on being the first to have the courage to challenge that dependence.

Protests will be made about these regulations — we have heard some this evening. The reason for them is that dependence on Government support has already gone too far and continued for too long. There will be protests from those who feel that the Government should give an ever-increasing amount of money to an ever-increasing number of people. In a sense one can accept that the motives and intentions of those people are good. However, one must remember that the Government have provided more money for social benefits than any other in history. Increased money for social benefits is a commodity that is more valuable than the promises of Labour Members. Further, the extra money that the Government provide is valuable in itself.

Broken promises and promises that cannot be kept — one has to be fair about this: promises have been broken by the Labour party whenever it has formed a Government — are not only valueless but are cruel and disillusioning. Unkept promises of extra money build expectations that cannot be fulfilled. They create hopes and spending patterns. They lead to dashed hopes, debt, disillusion and misery. That is why the Government's approach, an approach of cautious support for the poorest in our society and a support that can be delivered, is one that I welcome. It is in the interest of our society. It is the right approach, it is valuable and it works.

8.30 pm

Mrs. Audrey Wise (Preston): I was interested in the remarks about debt made by the hon. Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot). None of us likes the idea of people getting into debt. The hon. Gentleman might be interested to know that under his Government the situation in my constituency is such that the citizens advice bureau has told me that the biggest increase in the category of advice being sought is that related to debt. Therefore, I suggest that he should have a word with his right hon. and hon. Friends on that matter.

We have had a bracing doctrine advocated by Conservative Members. It is the doctrine that, by making people worse off, we are spurring them into action. That doctrine was advocated by the hon. Member for Wanstead and Woodford and by the hon. Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe), who represents what must be the one constituency in the country where work is plentiful. That bracing doctrine seems to overlook the fact that, of the 5 million households that will lose money, over half are pensioner households. I wonder what extra efforts Conservative Members intend to spur those pensioners to — or are they not being considered in the matter? Perhaps they are being overlooked by Conservative Members. I suggest that they should brief themselves a little better on that subject. When they do they will learn in addition that 300,000 pensioners will lose all their housing benefit. Therefore, that bracing doctrine is faulty.

During his opening speech, the Minister was asked two questions by one of his hon. Friends. As they were asked by one of his hon. Friends, I listened hopefully with the conviction that they would be answered. However, they were not. I want to return to those questions in the hope that the Under-Secretary of State will answer them in his reply. The first was: what is the maximum amount that will be lost? We did not receive any answer to that. I do not know whether the Minister has not bothered to work it out or whether he did not want to tell us. The Minister said that, however much people were losing, they would be the better off among claimants. He brought forward no evidence to substantiate that. We are entitled to ask the Minister to take the question more seriously.

The second question was: what would be the Minister's answer to a thrifty pensioner with £6,000? Again, there was no reply. There was an attempted justification for the capital cut-off, but there was no answer that hon. Members on either side of the Chamber could use as guidance when approached by constituents on that matter. My answer to such constituents will be that they should blame the Minister and the Government for taking a wholly unreasonable attitude. The Minister asked what our cut-off point would be. He was told that it is not necessary to have a cut-off point, because the income from capital is taken into account. That is by far the most sensible, flexible and reasonable way to approach the matter. It obviates the need for constantly looking at rigid capital values and altering them through the House or by ministerial diktat. We have not heard a word as to what is wrong with the present system of taking income from capital into account rather than having a draconian cut-off point.

Instead of answering the questions, the Minister engaged in some diversity tactics. He talked about complexity, especially the complexity of housing benefit supplement. We all know about that complexity. We are not saying that housing benefit supplement is the perfect answer to the problems of our constituents. In fact, we object to housing benefit supplement. Although I was not a Member at the time, I have no doubt that my right hon. and hon. Friends fought it at the time on the grounds that it was wholly unreasonable and far too complex.

Conservative Members like to engage in simplification processes, but with the result that people always lose money. There are always more people who lose than gain from their simplification. It is handy to have simplification, which saves having to give housing benefit at the present level to 5 million households and saves having to give housing benefit at all to 1 million households. What a handy disposition of events. I am sure that the people in those households would swap simplification for a little more complexity giving a little more money in their pockets.

Another red herring was the statement that implied that the coming of computerisation justified these regulations. I am waiting with fascination to hear the reply to the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook), who said that local authorities' computer programmes will not be working in time to operate these complicated matters. I remind the Minister of that question because I am interested in the answer.

We have heard a lot about the fact that somehow people are well off, that they should not need the benefit, that, if they do, it is because they are in some way feckless and that, if they pulled their socks up, they would see that everything is for the best in the best of all possible worlds. I do not know what sort of problems are taken to Conservative Members when they hold their advice sessions. I can tell them that in Preston one of the biggest problems is that of fuel poverty. I think that that is the case in most of the constituencies represented by my right hon. and hon. Friends. Fuel poverty is a real killer, and it will be exacerbated by the provisions in the regulations.

Rent arrears are a difficult problem for local authorities, and it is a fact that the incidence of rent arrears will increase, because of the regulations. I wait with interest to hear the Minister's answer to those points.

Conservative Members repeatedly say that there is no bottomless pot. They examine stringently the benefits that go to the poorest members of the population and engage in the fine tuning of such benefits. They are perpetually changing the regulations. The hon. Member for Wanstead and Woodford, who said that he did not want many changes, must be sorely disappointed in the Government whom he supports, because they produce changes every year in Bills of greater and greater complexity, as some of us know to our cost.

Against that background, it is remarkable that for the Government there is an absolutely bottomless pot when it comes to mortgage interest tax relief. We have two kinds of income-related benefits in this country. We have the kind of benefit that is cut when one's income increases —the kind of benefit dealt with in these regulations— and the kind of benefit that increases when one's income increases. Mortgage interest tax relief falls into that category.

Let me make it perfectly clear that I do not advocate the abolition of mortgage interest tax relief, but that I certainly advocate that mortgage interest tax relief should be granted only at the standard rate. [Interruption.] The point is that it increases at a greater rate. One gets it at the top rate. If one's taxable income is more than £41,200 and one pays 60 per cent. tax, one gets mortgage interest tax relief at 60 per cent. The rate goes up. That position is untenable. I see the Under-Secretary of State nodding. I hope that he will have a word with his right hon. Friend the Chancellor about this.

Mr. Portillo: No.

Mrs. Wise: Oh, he is not nodding. I am disappointed.

Mr. Tom Clarke: He is just being rude, as usual.

Mrs. Wise: In that case, I shall take no notice.

Mr. Favell: Does the hon. Lady accept that while mortgage interest tax relief has been fixed at £30,000 for eight years, housing benefit has taken more and more people into the net?

Mrs. Wise: We have heard the figures relating to mortgage interest tax relief. Mortgage interest tax relief now costs £1,100 million more than housing benefit. The cost of mortgage interest tax relief has increased, and the gap between one kind of help and the other has widened at an enormous rate. I have the utmost confidence in the figures cited by my hon. Friend the Member for Livingston. I shall be more than interested if Conservative Members wish to rebut those figures, but I doubt very much whether they will.

The fact is that the social policy that says that it is useful to help people to buy their own homes — I do not quarrel with that—is not extended to those people who cannot become owner-occupiers because they cannot take on the onerous burden of a mortgage. Those people must suffer the most. They are in a poverty trap so deep that when the regulations are introduced they will suffer a marginal tax rate of 91 per cent. if they get help with rent and rates only and of 98 per cent. if they also get family credit. As my hon. Friend the Member for Livingston pointed out, no hon. Member suffers a marginal tax rate of 98 per cent. or even of 91 per cent. Therefore, the Government's idea of targeting is partial.

In his opening remarks, the Minister appealed to us to consider the large issues and told us not to look at the detail. It is difficult to follow that advice because topics such as this involve a mass of detail — even after the Government's so-called simplification. It is especially difficult not to focus on the detail, given that the Minister's definition of detail includes the 20 per cent. contribution to be made to the rates. I know that he includes that in his definition because, when asked why he rejected the advice of his housing benefit review team, he said, "We cannot be expected to follow it in every detail." In the Minister's eyes, the 20 per cent. contribution to rates that is now to be levied as a minimum on all households is a mere detail.

There is something deeply sinister about the 20 per cent. proposal. All of a sudden, the Minister and his hon. Friends stop talking about targeting — a word that has dropped from the lips of Conservative Members over and over again during the debate but which does not seem to apply to the 20 per cent. rule. In relation to that rule, it appears that it does not matter how poor one is. One can be the poorest of the poor, but one still has to find 20 per cent. of the rates. With that proposal, targeting goes right out of the window. The Minister's justification for that is interesting — even threatening. He talks about the need to keep local government accountable and says that unless people pay towards the rates and feel the impact of the rates, local government will not be truly accountable. That is a dangerous doctrine, and it ignores the fact that one feels financial impact very differently according to one's income. I contend that the impact of having to pay 20 per cent. of rates, if one is extremely hard up, is much greater than the impact of having to pay 100 per cent. of the rates if one is comfortably off.

The yardstick that the Minister uses is extraordinarily crude. It becomes even more crude when the poll tax looms on the horizon. Then targeting goes even further into the distance because, no matter how well off one is, one will pay a flat rate. The idea that one should pay according to one's means and still have the Government accountable to one is abandoned at that stage. That doctrine is dangerous as well as unfair. Every hon. Member has been elected in part through the votes of those who do not pay income tax. It could therefore be held that there is not sufficient national accountability of Government to people.

The logical extension of their doctrine of accountability in local government is that only those who pay income tax should have a vote in national elections or alternatively that everyone, regardless of income, should be brought into the income tax act.—[HON. MEMBERS: "What about other taxes?"] There is, of course, indirect taxation, and even the poorest of the poor cannot escape VAT. That is one reason why Labour Members are hostile to indirect taxation and why it is always easy to obtain our support for pleas to the Government not to extend VAT to other goods and services or to increase its rate.

We dislike indirect taxation, but surely even Conservative Members would agree that the link in the public mind between the tax they pay on the goods they buy and Government policies is tenuous. Indirect taxes are popular on the Conservative Benches because they bear on the poorest, regardless of their ability to pay, and there is no direct understanding of the burden being placed on so many people by the Government.

If Conservative Members are saying that indirect taxation is sufficient qualification for people to fulfil some democratic criterion, why can they not stretch that to cover local government as well? Why do they say that there need be no minimum income tax payment in order to qualify for a vote, yet there must be a minimum payment of rates, or of poll tax when it comes, to ensure the accountability of local government?

This is an attempt to interfere with the results of local government elections. The Conservative party has tried time and again to bring local government into disrepute by focusing attention on the high rates that they have created by the withdrawal of rate support grant. Higher rates in Britain do not derive——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. The hon. Lady is going very wide of the regulations before the House.

Mrs. Wise: I apologise, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but the Minister made a strong point that the 20 per cent. minimum payment, which is part of the regulations, is justified by the need to make local government accountable. In referring to the rating system, I am really only following along the track that was first opened for me by the Minister, and, indeed, by the regulations. I promise not to go too far along that track. I understand your worries and I do not intend to treat this as if it were the Second Reading of the Bill which will implement the poll tax, which I hope will be long delayed. However, the extent of the increase in rates, and the need to remind people of the fact that it is their local representatives who fix them, has all been brought into much higher relief simply because of the withdrawal of so much rate support grant. Had it not been for that, less attention would be placed on the rates and the position that we face would be quite different.

Local and national Government are accountable to people as citizens. They are accountable not to taxpayers and ratepayers but to those human beings who make up the community. It is disgraceful that the Government and the Minister should make accountability appear to depend on any other yardstick. In the future, can we expect a new Representation of the People Act entitled "Representation of the Taxpayers Act". Any move in that direction is retrograde.

The Conservative party should remember its own emphasis on the importance of targeting when it comes to rates payments. I wish that the Conservative party would realise that, without enough income, people will be unable to pay 20 per cent. of the rates or the poll tax. That is why there will be an increase in debt — an increase in fuel debts and in rates, rent and mortgage arrears. Even now people are unable to maintain their mortgage payments. That will be the result of our passage along the road on which Conservative Members are taking us tonight. It is extremely reprehensible and unfair, but I know that it is no use asking them to think again.

The Labour party will give any Conservative Members who are seriously interested in targeting — in particular, I have in mind the hon. Member who identified himself as a son of a general practitioner and who referred approvingly to the attendance allowance — an opportunity to improve targeting of the attendance allowance by extending it to babies, and perhaps some will join us on that particular issue, if not in our views on housing benefit.

We are entitled to answers to the questions which have been put to the Minister not only by ourselves, but even by some Conservative Members also.

8.55 pm

Mr. Hugo Summerson (Walthamstow): I want to echo the concerns voiced by my right hon. Friend the Member for Aylesbury (Mr. Raison) and my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) and I want to concentrate on one aspect of the regulations.

Aylesbury and Eastbourne are, comparatively, rich areas. My constituency of Walthamstow is not. It is getting more prosperous but it is not yet the Mayfair of the east end. Between 20 and 25 per cent. of my constituents are pensioners. The numbers of the elderly living alone are projected to increase. The numbers of the very elderly—those aged 85-plus—are also projected to increase.

Those pensioners have worked hard all their lives. Many of them have fought for their country. They have saved. They have a pretty poor view of those who do not work and who sponge off the state. They have retired, owning their own homes and with the income from their savings to supplement their pensions. Their savings will not be very great. They will not be greatly in excess of £6,000 but they will in many cases be more than £6,000.

So far, so good. But in April this year their friendly Labour council increased the rates by a disgraceful 62 per cent. The average rates per household soared from £450 to £720. Many people have been forced into accepting help and it is not surprising, with the increase in the pensioner population across Britain of over 1 million since 1979, and the enormous increase in rates in many Labour-controlled areas over the past 10 years or so, that the cost of housing benefit has soared.

The answer lies in the community charge, which will bring accountability to all the Labour-controlled areas. That is the short-term answer. In the long term, the answer lies with a negative income tax.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am getting a little lost. The hon. Gentleman is talking about the community charge and the negative income tax, neither of which is directly relevant to the regulations. I hope that he will address himself to those.

Mr. Summerson: I will return to the pensioners of Walthamstow who have looked to the Government with hope and confidence to shield them from the effect of the rate increases. Many of my constituents have been hit hard, but they will now be hit again by the changes to housing benefit. They do not want supplementary benefit. They do not want income support. All they need is help with their rates. But now the Government are going to take that away. The community charge will help them, but that is not due until 1990. There is a gap of two hard years which will cost them dearly. How is that gap to be filled? I ask the Minister for an assurance that that limit of £6,000 will be reviewed at the earliest available opportunity.

8.59 pm

Mr. Ian McCartney (Makerfield): This evening we have been treated to two appalling displays — first, of ministerial incompetence, and secondly, the violent prejudice of the Champagne Charlies on the Conservative Back Benches. The Minister so comprehensively rubbished his own legislation that I thought that I was listening to an Opposition Front Bench spokesman. In comprehensively rubbishing his own policies and regulations, he then twisted the knife because, in outlining the changes that were necessary — the so-called simplifications — he indicated that those simplications are not to assist those on benefit, but to assist the Government in taking benefit from 1 million people and substantially reducing the right to benefit of a further 4 million people. The agument is not about simplification for those entitled to housing benefit but about the ability of the Government to use regulations to reduce the rights of many households.

It is not the first time since 1982 that the Government have tampered with passported housing benefit. This is the seventh attempt by the Government to cook housing benefit resources. It is also their second major attempt to transfer responsibility for administering housing benefits to local government, not to improve administration or to make it easier for claimants, but to put local government at the sharp end of the Government's attempt to reduce resources in the public sector and to those most in need. It is the local authorities that will face the brunt of those changes. The Government have not even got the courage of their own convictions to tackle the system of benefits and to administer that themselves. Through the regulations, they are trying to pass on the responsibility for the shambles that will ensue.

The Makerfield constituency is situated in the south Lancashire coalfield and for historical reasons has a large number of people who rely on housing benefit. In some estates, between 70 and 75 per cent. of households are on some form of housing benefit. We have the highest number of sickness benefit claimants in the United Kingdom. It is those people that the Government will affect most by the changes announced in the regulations. There has never been a Government who have made so many attempts to transfer responsibility for administering poverty from central to local government. The Government are in the business of divesting themselves of their social and moral responsibilities. Having first created massive unemployment and pools of pensioners who live in poverty, they seek to transfer responsibility for that to local government. In doing that, they hope that local government will be blamed for the loss of income, the loss of resources and the chaos that will ensue.

Conservative Members — who have shown so much prejudice this evening—have suggested that some of my constituents are frivolous grasshoppers. There are imperfections, but people go cap in hand. A Conservative Member even suggested that the lash of poverty will somehow give them the opportunity to do something better with their lives. The reality is that the lash of poverty does not provide opportunities but denies opportunities to thousands of people in my constituency. My constituents do not want to live on benefits, they want the opportunity of jobs, a decent pension and to live in dignity in their old age. We do not want to have to go through complicated legislation or continual attacks on housing benefit.

We want dignity, the right to equal opportunities and to fairness. The benefit regulations attack that. On the one hand, there are unfettered allowances for mortgage tax relief, but the benefit regulations attempt further to erode the rights of the poor in our communities. I believe that the Government will return later in this Parliament to erode even further people's rights to housing benefit. They will do so because they will have to tackle the problem of the continuing bill for mortgage tax relief. I should like that benefit to be scrapped and replaced by a universal benefit that is related to housing need, whether one lives in private or publicly owned housing.

Four groups of people in my constituency will be affected by the regulations. The first such group are low-paid single people, many of whom have been on YTS and, having come off that scheme, are now working in low-paid jobs and receiving between £70 and £80 per week gross. Such people live in housing that is hard to heat, often on council estates. As they have come off YTS after a certain date, they are now not entitled to heating allowances and, because their properties are difficult to heat, a large proportion of their income is taken up in heating costs. However, that group will be further attacked and their income further eroded.

Secondly, I should highlight the fact that in my constituency a huge proportion of families who are on benefit will receive a cut in their rights to free school meals some time in April. That will amount to a loss of about £1·80 in real benefit per week per child to families who need that service.

The third group are pensioners on occupational pension schemes. They include miners and people who have worked for Heinz and the other big manufacturers in Wigan. Those people's rights to benefit will now be severely curtailed and they will lose benefit because of their occupational pension schemes.

The fourth group has been much discussed this evening — persons with capital above the £3,000 and £6,000 limits. At present rates, £6,000 results in about £12 per week interest. In my constituency many people of pensionable age have that so-called little nest egg for two reasons. First, they use it to help the family, to help with the grandchildren, with Christmas presents and holidays. That is something simple which, in the last years of their lives, gives them a little dignity for all the work and effort that they have put in over the years, often in industries that have exploited them throughout their working lives.

The second reason why they keep their little nest egg is to pay for their funeral. I have seen many people at my surgeries, both when I was a councillor and since I have been a Member of Parliament, and one of the concerns of many elderly people involves the changes in benefit that erode their little piece of capital and thus the possibility of them having the dignity of proper funerals at the end of their lives. When one considers that the average cost of a funeral in the Greater Manchester area is over £1,000, the limit of £3,000 does not go a long way. However, the Government are attacking the whole concept of maintaining that allowance.

The invidious and insidious part of the legislation is that the Government are attacking the concept of those people having capital in the first place. The Government are forcing them to get rid of that capital and until they do so their rights to benefit will either be eroded or taken away altogether. That is an insidious attack on a group of people who have contributed so much to our society in terms of wealth creation, and by their ability to fight for our freedoms in the second world war.

The taper system is an infamous piece of legislation. There is a real attempt to use it in a sharp way so that people, by the smallest change in their personal circumstances, will either lose their rights to benefit or suffer some reduction. By that simple change in the mechanism, a huge number of people will lose their right to benefit. It has been calculated that about 700,000 pensioners will come into that category. In April next year, more than 1 million people will lose their right to benefit altogether — about one in seven of all claimants. The Minister has already said tonight that the loss of overall benefits will accumulate to £640 million — £140 million more than my hon. Friends and I had calculated. So the Government have admitted that the reductions in benefit are even more severe than we had at first thought.

Contrast this with the Prime Minister's ability to earn a great deal of tax relief on her mortgage and to enjoy a £40 a week reduction in her rate bill with the introduction of the poll tax. My hon. Friend the Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) went into great detail about the way in which the taper operates and forces people into the poverty trap, forcing them into a marginal rate of taxation in excess of 90 per cent. That is a real attempt to change the balance of wealth in this country. It is part of the Government's overall policy to take away from the poorest members of the community and redistribute the money to those who already have so much.

Some of the other provisions locked away in the regulations are probably some of the most insidious of any with which we have had to deal—for example, amenity charges in sheltered accommodation. Such charges are now included in some certificated cases, but, following the introduction of the regulations, fixed charges for heating and water will be phased out. That is an attack on pensioners because it is they, almost exclusively, who are in sheltered accommodation, public or private.

My hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley) highlighted the way in which the regulations will affect water charges. From 1 April, people on supplementary benefit will be unable to have them taken into account. On the issue of unreasonable costs, I recently received a letter from the director of housing of Wigan metropolitan borough council, who said that the authority is concerned about these changes, because they take into account the Government's changes brought about by the deregulation of rents in the private sector. The private sector landlord will allow rents to rise to such a level that the claimant will be penalised, because the landlord will be able to charge whatever market rent he can get.

According to the regulations, claimants will have to pay rent levels that the local authority will not be allowed to cover because of unreasonable rent levels. So the Government are reducing people's rights in the private sector to have a fair rent fixed and, by means of another piece of legislation, they are trying to prevent local authorities from taking account of the fact that landlords are unleashing market rents on us. A large number of young people in the private sector will be affected by that.

I turn now to local government administration, which will be a shambles, just as it was before. Local authorities will be short-changed by £25 million for the introduction of the new scheme. They will spend £50 million on introducing computer systems and training staff, yet their reimbursement will total only a maximum of £25 million. Rent and ratepayers in the local authority areas will have to make up the difference.

Furthermore, the draft regulations were originally six weeks late. Then the guidance notes were a month late, and the regulations have only now reached us. Yet local authorities will have to implement them by 1 April next year. It has taken the Government two years to reach this point, but they expect underfunded and under-resourced local authorities to make this major change so quickly. They are doing it in such a way as to blame the local authorities if difficulties arise. I say to rent and ratepayers: "Do not blame your local authorities — blame the Government for their incompetence and malevolence towards local authorities, tenants and ratepayers."

In my constituency, part of the Wigan metropolitan borough council, the authority stands to lose something like £40,000 because of the total cost of the introduction of the scheme. That £40,000 will be borne by the local ratepayers. The people stand to lose between £900,000 and £1 million a year because of changes in the benefit regulations. That represents a massive reduction in the resources available to my constituents. It is totally unacceptable and unrealistic that Wigan should bear such costs and it represents a major attack on local government finance. At the end of the day, those least able to pay and least able to gear themselves to the changes will be most affected. Those on low incomes and young people trying to make a start in life and trying to make something of their lives will be handicapped by the introduction of the regulations.

Conservative Members will be condemned by the introduction of the legislation. We shall not let them forget what they intend to do to pensioners. We shall ensure that the constituents of every Tory who has spoken today will know what they have said about pensioners and the so-called workshy, lazy young people. We shall make sure that, back home in their constituencies, the constituents know what their Member of Parliament thinks about them.

9.15 pm

Mr. Lewis Stevens (Nuneaton): I shall be brief. First, I must say that some of the comments by Opposition Members appear to be from people still fighting not only the election of 1987, but that of 1983, and even as far back as 1935.

The hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise) suggested that we are trying to bring local government into disrepute. I totally reject that. However, the Labour party has managed to do that extremely successfully.

The policies that have initiated the regulations were established in the Social Security Bill in 1986 and were put to the electorate this year. Those policies were well understood, both in general concept and in practical effects. The simplification that has undoubtedly been brought about is important. People can now understand far better how their housing benefit will relate to them. The assimilation of the various housing benefits on to the same base is important. It is also important that those benefits will be on a net base rather than a gross base. That will give help to many people.

Although with any changes it is right to say that there will be losers and gainers, within the proposed Social Security Act there will be a considerable number of gainers. It is not surprising that the Opposition have almost totally ignored the fact that many disabled people will gain as a result of the Act and as a result of the housing benefit regulations. It is also not surprising that the Opposition easily omit the fact that the family credit system that we have introduced will also extend help to far more people than was expected or was available under FIS. It was necessary to do something about housing benefit. My hon. Friends have said several times that, with one third of households receiving that benefit, it had got out of hand.

Some people may suggest that the large number of recipients of that benefit was due to our economic policies, but they should consider the economic policies that were followed in the late 1960s and between 1974 and 1978. Those policies were likely, at some point in the future, to bring about a significant and dramatic change in the industrial life of our community. The effect of those policies was to bring about redundancy and unemployment. That was the catalyst that led to great change in the amount of social security benefits that had to be paid.

Various Acts have tried to bring about the best results and the necessary targeting of those benefits in the best way. The social security measures which will be implemented in the spring next year will achieve that to some extent, although not to the extent that many of us would wish. They do not go far enough. There are certainly some reservations about the £6,000 capital limit. It is strange that Opposition Members who once said that £1·80 was a lot of money now say that £6,000 in capital is not. Surely there is a contradiction somewhere along that line.

If we sensibly examine further attempts to put money where it is most needed, housing benefit, with some reservations, is the target at which we were aiming. I know that the House will give it the support which it deserves.

Mrs. Margaret Beckett (Derby, South): I concur with the last few words of the speech of the hon. Member for Nuneaton (Mr. Stevens). I wish that the House would give the regulations the support that they deserve, which is to be roundly defeated.

The Minister of State expressed the hope that Opposition Members would set these provisions in the wider context of the whole policy. I shall try to oblige the Minister by examining in a wider context the Government's claims that these regulations and the framework of changes target help on those in greatest need. The hon. Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston (Dame J. Knight), who no doubt we shall see in her place shortly, asked, in the bewildered manner that suits her so well, how anyone could oppose such a goal. I will tell the hon. Lady, and she can read it in the Official Report.

It is a question of how such groups are defined and where such a policy leads. The Second Reading of the Social Security Bill revealed that those excluded from the hon. Lady's category of needs include epileptics, the young unemployed, those with small occupational pensions and others. We accept meekly the accusation that some of our categories of need are, by her standards, far too wide. Indeed, we thank God that it is so. I shall examine what the Government said about targeting.

Several hon. Members spoke about the early years of the housing benefit scheme. Few Conservative Members have examined its wider context, as the Minister suggested. When the Government came to power, they expressed all the concern that Conservative Members could want about what they called the indiscriminate subsidy to public sector housing. They announced their intention to reduce that subsidy—and, indeed, the Government have been as good as their word. The subsidy to council housing has fallen by more than £1,500 million, and the figure must now be substantially more. When the Government made that commitment, it was pointed out that if the subsidy for council housing were reduced, council house rents would rise and that might cause problems to those in the community who are less well off. Indeed, that was the result. Equally, at the time, we were reassured that, as rents rose, those in need would be protected through housing benefit. We were told that it would be all right because housing benefit would be targeted on those in greatest need and they would be protected against rent rises.

My hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley), in what I understand was an excellent speech, which I regret I did not hear, said that he had heard the Secretary of State for the Environment talk about housing benefit as a cushion against rent rises. Many Conservative Members argued against the cushion of housing benefit protecting those in the greatest need, and asked how it came about that still, today, 7 million households receive housing benefit. They suggest that the fact that 7 million households receive housing benefit proves that the scheme is over-generous. I can understand how hon. Members find it strange that 7 million households should still be getting housing benefit when the Government have made seven attempts during the past few years to cut housing benefit, yet so many people remain entitled to it. The answer to hon. Members' questions—which, unaccountably, the Government did not offer—is that they appear to have failed to notice that, while council house subsidies have been withdrawn, council house rents have increased by 155 per cent.

During that period when the withdrawal of the public sector housing subsidy gave rise to this colossal increase in council house rents, not only have the poorest not been protected by the targeting of housing benefit, but steadily, year in year out, and occasionally even twice a year, the Government have cut housing benefit.

As rents rise, more people become entitled to housing benefit—more money—and the Government have used the consequences of their cut in general subsidy as an argument for cutting the specific subsidy that is supposed to help the poor. That, indeed, puts the Government's devotion to those in greatest need in the wider context. That leaves aside the impact of the rise in rents, the impact on those who are entitled to housing benefit, and the effect on the millions of people who can no longer afford to pay their rent at all because they are unemployed. We have seen the numbers of such people rise substantially in recent years. Under this Government, targeting has proved to be a euphemism for cutting public support.

I shall now turn from the main issue of targeting to some of the details of how the Government are targeting in these regulations. A number of those details have been highlighted in the debate. There is the bar, about which my hon. Friend the Member for Wigan (Mr. Stott) spoke, to meeting the cost of alarms that are intended precisely for those who are living independently and who are unable to take advantage of sheltered housing which, because of the way that the Government have cut housing subsidies, is in short supply. Those people are living independently in the community. That is what the Government say they wish to see, but now those people face the prospect of the withdrawal of support for the provision of the alarms that will help them to remain independent. By living independently, those people save the community hundreds, if not thousands, of millions of pounds, because that is what it would cost if such people lost their cherished independence and had to go into homes or hospitals. The loss to those people could well be about £5 a week, because that is the amount of the payment for such alarms.

The Minister of State talked about the treatment of lone parents. He spoke with what appeared to be some pride about the way in which lone parents have a slightly higher premium in housing benefit than in income support. For some reason he did not think it necessary to say that the increased housing benefit premium under the new system in no way compensates for the loss to those people of having the same base for the treatment of benefit as a couple. That applied under a previous scheme.

There is the treatment of what are known in the Government's scheme as non-dependants. A non-dependant is somebody who is not of school age or in full-time education but who is in work. He will now be expected to contribute £8·20 a week to rent alone, and that amount will be deducted from his family's housing benefit. The total contribution that such a non-dependant would have to make on rent and rates together means that two working teenagers would probably be expected to contribute almost the whole housing cost for their family home. That is the proposal by a Government who say that they believe in the unity of the family. The Under-Secretary of State told us the other night that the Goverment believe in giving the family moral support. No doubt that is in lieu of any other kind of support.

Some hon. Members drew attention to the difference between the way the Government treat those who seek public support through housing benefit and those who seek it through the subsidy given in mortgage interest tax relief. I have just highlighted the way in which the non-dependants of people drawing housing benefit are treated. One of the issues not mentioned in the debate is that there are about 1·25 million non-dependants in households that receive mortgage interest tax relief, but those non-dependants are not liable for a single penny.

Some hon. Members spoke about the recommendations of the housing benefit review team. The Minister of State was rather misleading when he spoke about that. It is from the work of that team that these proposals stem. His comments were a little misleading, although my hon. Friend the Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) in an intervention corrected him in two respects. He omitted to mention the complete opposition of the review team to the suggestion that 20 per cent. of rates should be payable by those on even the lowest income. The review team said:

> "it would be unrealistic to suppose that even a small proportion of housing costs could be met at the expense of other personal requirements. We believe that 100 per cent. help with housing costs for those on the lowest incomes is the only fair way of meeting their needs".

That could scarcely be more at variance with the Government's proposals.

I listened with astonishment to the hon. Member for Edgbaston when she suggested that people on income support should be grateful that 80 per cent. of their rates were being contributed. Presumably she had not studied with care the comments of the Social Security Advisory Committee and the housing benefit review team. That review team was handpicked by Ministers and given a remit of no increase in the scheme, so it was not falling over backwards to be generous to claimants.

Hon. Members have referred with approval to the way in which the rates taper is being increased and asked why owner-occupiers with an income or a small occupational pension should be protected in this way. I would like to — I hesitate to say remind — draw hon. Members' attention to the fact that the housing benefit review team, which studied these matters in detail, was not as restrictive as Conservative Members have been this evening. It recommended a rates taper along the lines of the Government's proposals, but it did so in the context of another recommendation—that the Government should explore the possibility of extending housing benefit support to those very individuals towards the cost of their mortgages. It was a quid pro quo that there should be support through housing benefit for those with mortgages and that, therefore, it would not be so harsh if the rates taper were at the level proposed. Again, we have deviated substantially from the Government review team's suggestions, although I recognise that the Government were not bound by those recommendations. They have taken only the less generous recommendations and ignored all those that might have been more generous.

There have been some references to the thresholds at which housing benefit ceases to be payable. I want to make just one comparison because so many others have been drawn tonight. Before April 1983, a single pensioner would have lost entitlement to housing benefit when he had an income of £94·35 a week. From next April, he will lose entitlement to all housing benefit when his income reaches £64·51 a week. The level of income at which housing benefit is payable has fallen in cash terms, never mind real terms, by £30 a week during the past few years in which the Government have been steadily cutting housing benefit.

In some cases, the marginal tax rate of households paying tax and national insurance and receiving rent and rate rebates would rise by 90 per cent., and even up to 97 or 98 per cent.—a 97p or 98p in the pound withdrawal for every pound increase. I would like to contrast that with the highest rate of tax payable at 60p in the pound and with the fact that it is paid only on taxable income above £41,200 per year. That is an interesting contrast with the level at which a single pensioner begins to lose rebate—£3,354 gross, not taxable, income per year.

My hon. Friend the Member for Wigan asked what would happen to the housing benefit scheme in the future. Like other hon. Members, I have been contacted by a number of housing associations and by the National Federation of Housing Associations. As the Minister of State asked, I am considering the wider context of these regulations. Those organisations are desperately worried that the combination of the Government's proposals to force them to raise money on the private market, and therefore to raise their rents will seriously disadvantage the very people whom they exist to serve.

We have a couple of interesting examples of what housing associations fear will happen once they have to charge the rents that they expect to have to charge if this package of measures goes ahead. They suggest that a London bus driver on average rostered earnings for driver-operated buses, aged about 30, married, with two children aged 7 and 11, with no other earned household income and paying the rent that they expect to have to charge of about £45 a week, will get no assistance in rent or rate rebate. In the context of the remarks made by Conservative Members about the scheme being too generous, that is a most interesting comparison.

The housing associations also use the comparison of a nurse who similarly would lose all entitlement to support at a gross wage of £158 or £159 a week. They point out that, in the case of the bus driver, the amount he is expected to contribute has gone up from 12 per cent. to 22 per cent. of his income since 1982, and, in the case of the nurse, from 20 per cent. to 38 per cent. Those figures put in clear focus the observations of Conservative Members about the over-generosity of the housing benefit scheme.

There has also been reference to the lack of transitional protection. In the income support scheme the Government made much of the fact that transitional protection will be offered and that those drawing benefit at present will continue to receive the same cash sums. Of course, that does not apply to housing benefit where, in the overall package and in the wider context, some of the worst losses will arise. I remind the House that in 1983, when the scheme was introduced, because it involved substantial taper changes and losses of £1 or £2 a week in some cases, the Government thought it right to introduce transitional safeguards. Today, when some individuals are facing losses as large as £10 and more a week, no transitional safeguards are offered. That is because the Government think they can get away with having a saving as their overall target.

Apart from the uncomfortable facts of what the Government are doing in the regulations under the cloak of targeting, a second major question arises in the wider context — the direction in which the pursuit of this policy is slowly but inexorably taking us. I want to set it clearly on record that that direction is no less than the demolition by stealth of the welfare state. The hon. Member for Edgbaston and other Conservative Members continually ask in these debates how we can object to the theory of targeting help on those in greatest need. What they seem not to appreciate is that they are targeting help not on those in need but only on those in the greatest need.

I understand that the hon. Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot) favoured the House earlier with a definition about giving cautious support to the very poor. It is that which sets apart Conservative Members from hon. Members on the Opposition Benches and which sets apart a welfare state that tries to prevent poverty and enhance independence from a scheme of poor law relief.

Those schemes of the past in their many forms were based on excluding from help all but the destitute and refusing help to the merely desperate until they became destitute. The hon. Member for Edgbaston talked about it sapping human initiative if someone else paid the bills. Had the hon. Lady been here for the end of the debate —she was not here for the opening—I could have told her that it saps human initiative to see everything that one has worked for and achieved—in the case of a pensioner for the whole of his life—stripped away bit by bit by bit in the name of targeting help only on those in the greatest need.

The hon. Lady referred to the old Labour party and wondered what it would think of us criticising the Government for a cut-off rate for capital of £6,000. One could see the hon. Lady on a board of guardians. Of course, it was the meanness of the means test and the effect it had on families to which the old Labour party objected so much. The hon. Lady and any other hon. Member who attempts to make a similar observation should realise that the old Labour party, today's Labour party and any conceivable Labour party exists because its members reject with every fibre of their being that tight, narrow, smug, vicious definition of means. The echo of those definitions which created humiliation and fear for so many in generations past, makes us certain that we are right to reject the regulations.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mr. Michael Portillo): My hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and the Disabled opened this debate by posing a series of questions to the Opposition and hoping that they would contribute by spelling out some of their proposals. My hon. Friend the Minister is an incorrigible idealist because, unfortunately, we have listened very carefully and hearkened to what the Opposition have said, but we have been disappointed.

The Opposition Front-Bench spokesman, the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) informed us that he had proposed some negotiations between the Opposition and the Government. I assumed that he was indulging in some kind of fantasy. He seemed to believe that the election had resulted in a hung Parliament and that we were in some sense negotiating the Government's policy. The Government's policies are quite clear. However, the Opposition's policies are unclear.

While I am on the subject of the fantasy of a hung Parliament, I want to welcome back in his absence the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye (Mr. Kennedy). He has returned to our debate having lost his leader and his party. He was therefore unmuzzled and his contribution was all the more interesting for that.

I notice that the hon. Member for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien) is in the Chamber. My hon. Friend the Minister said that he would ask me to comment on concessionary coal. The position with regard to all the benefits that we are aligning is that if the family or person concerned receives cash, that should be taken into account in assessing their resources over and above the various levels of disregard that are set down. It has long been the case that concessionary coal delivered in kind has been disregarded, and it will continue to be disregarded under the new system. However, if the payment is made in cash instead of in kind, it will be treated as a resource and taken into account.

That seems to be absolutely right. Why should there be an advantage for one group of people who receive cash and no advantage for another group? The anomaly is that the coal is not valued and taken into account. However, the hon. Member for Normanton will realise that there are good reasons why valuing it would be very complex.

Mr. O'Brien: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for replying to my question. Will he also consider the fact that some of the chronically sick and disabled people from the mining industry who receive payments in lieu of fuel receive it because of their chronic illnesses? Those illnesses do not qualify for additional payment through the DHSS. Therefore, it is important that the payment in lieu of fuel sustains additional health care for retired miners and their widows. Will the Minister have some compassion for those people?

Mr. Portillo: There is no shortage of compassion. However, we must be concerned with fairness. If money is received by one set of people that is not available to others be disregarded, it is very unfair.

My hon. Friend the Minister asked that hon. Members should not treat housing benefit in isolation during the debate. Some hon. Members were good enough to follow that good advice. The hon. Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley) offered us some figures which he said took account of overall effects. We shall be interested to see them, but I have some doubts about them. The hon. Gentleman embarked on a discussion about family credit in which he referred to the ending of free school meals, yet he did not mention the fact that we are building into the family credit rates of compensation for the loss of free school meals which are more generous than the free school meals. The hon. Gentleman's starting point for his argument was extraordinary.

As a number of hon. Members did not take the good advice offered by my hon. Friend the Minister and consider all the benefits together, perhaps I should remind them of the figures. We have been perfectly frank. We have set out all the figures in tables. Taken together, the reforms will produce about 3·65 million losers, of whom about 2 million are pensioners. On the other hand, they will produce nearly 5 million who will either gain or experience no change, and about 2·32 million of those are pensioners. Whether we take pensioners as a group, or take all claimants as a group, there will be more gainers than losers. Let us therefore nail the Opposition's assumption that the reforms will produce more losers.

The hon. Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Litherland) wanted to know what advantages he could offer his constituents. The expenditure reduction in housing benefit is matched by new money going into income support and family credit and many claimants will gain more from those benefits than they lose from housing benefit. The hon. Gentleman mentioned the difficulties that his constituents face, not only in claiming housing benefit but in claiming other benefits. The new capital rules are more generous to those on supplementary benefit, and to those on housing benefit with only smaller amounts of capital, whose investment income will be ignored for the first time. Moreover, an extra £220 million will go into family credit. The hon. Gentleman can tell his constituents about that, as he specifically said that many of them were on very low wages.

The steeper rent taper, which has been discussed a good deal in today's debate, must be seen in context. The Opposition Front Bench looked a bit puzzled when my hon. Friend made this point. It must be seen alongside the fact that the starting point for calculating rents under the new system is 100 per cent., whereas under the present system it is only 60 per cent. That is a crucial difference. It means that, even with the steeper taper, those with unavoidably high rents—for example, twice the national average — will receive more help all the way up the income scale, and poorer households, below the current needs allowance, will receive more help, even at below average rents.

The hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett), in her wind-up speech, produced a document from the National Federation of Housing Associations. The document, I am afraid, is entirely wrong, because it misses that crucial point. It applies the taper which will be introduced in April as though the starting point for rents were still 60 per cent. I am sorry to say that the hon. Lady's examples, gripping though they were, simply are not correct. The changes that the people whom she cited will actually experience are minimal.

The hon. Member for Livingston came up with his own example. He talks about a couple in Newcastle with, I believe, two children, and the loss that they would sustain on housing benefit. The hon. Gentleman has fallen into the trap of regarding housing benefit in isolation. He clearly did not bear in mind the family credit advantage that that family is likely to have.

Mr. Robin Cook: That family's current income is £110·90 net. Taking account of housing costs, loss of free school meals — that is perfectly fair, as the Minister mentioned an offset in family credit—and family credit entitlement, its net income on 1 April next year can be estimated at £99·54. That is a loss of £10·40, even allowing for the other elements of the package, and taking account of the fact that its housing costs will rise by some £3 on top of the present level. Not only does that family face a savage loss in housing benefit; it also faces a savage loss in net income.

Mr. Portillo: If, by any chance, those figures were calculated for the hon. Gentleman by the National Federation of Housing Associations——

Mr. Cook: They were not.

Mr. Portillo: —they may be open to a certain amount of doubt. But we shall examine them carefully.

Mr. Cook: They were provided by Newcastle council.

Mr. Portillo: I am afraid that Newcastle council has not put me entirely at ease on the matter.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. One hon. Member at a time.

Mr. Portillo: Many Conservative Members were extremely interested and concerned about capital. My right hon. Friend the Member for Aylesbury (Mr. Raison) and my hon. Friends the Members for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) and for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) were concerned about the capital limit. My hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) asked how the Government will explain to the thrifty that money will not be payable to them through their housing benefit if they have more than £6,000 in the bank. That is a real dilemma. If we have a system that gives money to people in need, how do we ensure that giving it to people who actually need it does not then discourage people from being thrifty?

My hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston (Dame J. Knight) made the point to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne that we must ask how we justify to taxpayers, many of whom may be extremely poor and have nothing in the bank, the proposal that they should pay money to provide benefits to people who have more than £6,000 in the bank. The Government have got that balance just about right. Some of my hon. Friends have asked us to look at that level. Of course, in common with all other aspects of the reforms, we shall be sensitive to the way in which they apply in practice.

I found it difficult to take the criticisms from the hon. Members for Livingston and for Preston (Mrs. Wise). They elucidated the principle that we should take account only of people's investment income. I am bound to ask why, under a Labour Government, for supplementary benefit purposes, any income over £1,200 was assessed on a tariff income — not on the basis of what people actually earned — of 25p for every £50 that people had in the bank. That is a much higher rate of tariff than we are assuming in the regulations. Of course, we are operating from a much lower level of capital.

Mr. Robin Cook: Not for housing benefit.

Mr. Portillo: The hon. Member says, "Not for housing benefit." My goodness, we invited him earlier to tell us whether he believed in aligning the benefit. I, possibly wrongly, inferred from his silence that he wants to align benefits. If he wants to align benefits and he sticks by what his Government did when they were in office, which is to have the crippling tariff income system, he must be confused.

The hon. Member for Withington had a similar shot at his own foot. He vigorously complained that, with the housing benefit, we are introducing an overpayment restriction for back claims for 12 months, and that we are introducing the concept of needing to show good cause. If he wishes to find the inspiration for that, he will find that the concept is perfectly clear in the Social Security Act 1975. We have simply extended that principle into the present housing benefit regulations.

In his thoughtful remarks, the hon. Member for Livingston was a trifle disappointing in regard to marginal tax rates. He seems to ignore the basic dilemma. If one is trying to direct help to the people at the bottom, establish a family credit system that helps people who are in work, and target any of the benefits, one will end up with high marginal rates of withdrawal. We recognise that. That is the dilemma with which we have had to wrestle. In wrestling with it, we have achieved a great deal, but the hon. Member for Livingston did not care to refer to that.

We have abolished marginal rates of withdrawal of over 100 per cent., with which the hon. Gentleman's Government happily lived. I can see no defence for withdrawing more than the amount that people are receiving in benefit, thus making them worse off as they earn more money. However, that is a position that the hon. Gentleman and his hon. Friends put up with. After April, rates of withdrawal of more than 100 per cent. will have been abolished, and overall the total number of people with marginal tax rates over 90 per cent. will fall from 112,000 to about 70,000, which is a cause for some congratulation.

The hon. Member for Livingston referred to three creatures that crawled out of the legislation when he shook them. For the sake of hygiene, as much as the hon. Gentleman's enlightenment, we should knock some of them on the head and deal with them. Help with service charges for people in rented accommodation can be provided through the housing benefit system. The regulations do not change the conditions that presently exist. The only confusion that may have arisen is if local authorities have not been applying the regulations as they exist.

The majority of people, including pensioners who live in the community, are owner-occupiers and, by definition, qualify for any help with service charges under the rules of rent rebates or allowances, which is the main source of help within the public sector. In providing help for people on low incomes in rented accommodation there has been scope for including, within the eligible rent service charges, four amenities that are an essential part of the accommodation. Such amenities may include heating and lighting and communal sectors of maintenance such as lifts. Our policy has been to include alarm systems within this provision, where they are an essential part of the accommodation. That is carried forward in these regulations.

For those who do not live in such accommodation, but who may have a special need for alarm systems and other personal services, the main source of help, as with owner-occupiers, must come from local authorities.

Mrs. Beckett rose——

Mr. Portillo: The hon. Member for Livingston mentioned help with heating charges, which he claimed were being excluded from housing benefit. The hon. Gentleman should look more carefully at the regulations. Heating charges are not generally eligible for help under housing benefit. The current scheme gives help to some people on supplementary benefit who pay fixed fuel charges with their rent. People on standard housing benefit receive no help with fuel charges.

Thus, apart from anything else, an important matter of equity arises — the unfairness between one set of people and another. If some people in accommodation are being forced to pay unusually high charges for electricity or heating, it cannot be right to increase subsidy through housing benefit. The important aspect must be to deal with the root causes of why the charges are high and to introduce new systems so that electricity and heating are not wasted. That is why we are phasing out these benefits over a five-year period.

The hon. Member for Livingston was wrong in his sweeping generalisation about the effect on housing benefit of a period spent as a patient in hospital. I do not think that the hon. Gentleman has understood the present provisions or those that we are discussing. It is not an unthinking alignment with income support. It has been recognised — this is what I said to him from a sedentary position — for 40 years that, where the state is providing for a patient in hospital and for that person's maintenance, double provision should not be made from the public funds for that maintenance.

That has been a long-established principle, and if the hon. Gentleman looks at the regulations he will see that housing benefit will not be automatically withdrawn. If the patient is receiving income support there will be no change in his housing benefit. I think that he was far too sweeping in his assumption in that regard. Those who are not receiving income support will have their entitlement reassessed and single claimants will usually find that their benefit reduces but, because the new assessment takes account of reduced social security benefit, couples where one partner is in hospital will also find that their housing benefit does not change.

I said at the outset that I was disappointed by the fact that the Opposition did not tell us what they would do about housing benefit. They have not set out their stall for us at all. All we have heard is a good deal of whingeing about the cuts that the Government are allegedly making. We have heard a whole load of hyperbole, a great deal of wrongly directed comment and a refusal on their part to look at the reforms in social security as a whole. Those reforms are putting as much money back into the system as they are taking out. They are giving a better deal to people and are directing money to those who are most in need. It is for those reasons that I commend the regulations, which are the final element of the three packages we are putting before the House.

Gipsies (South Leeds)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Kenneth Carlisle.]

10.18 pm

Mr. Merlyn Rees (Morley and Leeds, South): I have 15 minutes in which to raise a matter that is of the greatest concern to my constituents. I have agreed with my hon. Friends the Members for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) and Normanton (Mr. O'Brien) that they may intervene briefly, because the matter does not concern just south Leeds. I seek not publicity, but change. The publicity has existed for over 25 years. The Morley part of my constituency is not affected. To put it bluntly, the people in south Leeds have had enough. They think that nobody in authority cares. The consensus in south Leeds is that if those in authority lived in south Leeds, something would be done. I warned that there was a danger of violence, and there was recently. I warned that we were on the brink of violence. I will not go into it, but there was such violence.

I have chosen the title for this Adjournment debate carefully. I have chosen not only the word "gipsies" but because all sorts of words are used. My first question to the Minister is, "What is a gipsy?" I do not know what a gipsy is, although I remember that years ago I thought I knew what a gipsy was. However, these people in my constituency have JCBs, E-registration cars and patio furniture, but they do not pay taxes. They do not fit into the category of gipsy that I thought I knew about years ago.

"travelling people, itinerants and tinkers"

What is the law? I have received letters from the Secretary of State saying that local authorities have a duty to provide areas, but for what? How is a gipsy defined? Is it anybody who does not want to live in a house? If a person goes to an area, does the local authority have a duty to provide the encampments—or whatever they are called? I know what the word means because we have one in south Leeds.

I can tell the Minister what the problem is because I have gone through all my correspondence. The problem is the illegal extraction of electricity from lamp posts; the illegal extraction of the water supply; refuse; lavatory use; defacation outside the windows of ordinary people; JCBs breaking down the mounds that have been put there by the local authority; the clean-up costs of moving the tarmac; the smell and the causes of the smell that I encountered on the West Granges in the summer, and the ruination of a new rugby league pitch on which the local authorities have spent money. If anybody else had dug up that pitch there would have been hell to pay, but because it was done by gipsies nothing happened. I can tell the story of the Hunslet athletic institute. Parents are not keen on young girls going there in the evening and if they do so they must be accompanied. I can tell of packs of dogs, and of factory owners who have told me about break-ins. Shop stewards have banded together to tell me that something must be done. I can tell also of the noise from generators. Something must be done.

The local authority's job is to remove the gipsies under certain conditions. However, these days when in Hunslet in south Leeds, the local authority seeks to remove "the people"—the itinerants and the travelling people—to a site a solicitor steps in because those people have their own lawyers. They then go to court and the judge, of course, knows exactly what he is doing, but he does not know much about Hunslet and it is two, three or four weeks before anything is done about the problem. Imagine what the people around there think when they see what is happening. They say to me, "If we park a car on a pavement somebody tells us that we must move it, but this lot can stay here for weeks on end before anything is done." The problem is more difficult on private sites than it is on public sites—whatever is meant by that—although there has not been such a case recently, because to all intents and purposes British Rail property is private.

In a letter the Secretary of State has told me that it is

"a duty on local authorities to make adequate provision for gipsies residing in or resorting to their areas."

That is what the law says about gipsies, but I do not know what it means. The letter went on to state:

"The Leeds City council are at present pursuing a programme of site provision to cater for the large numbers of gipsies illegally camped in the area".

That does not mean a thing. I quite understand that when Leeds city council, which is Labour-controlled, comes up with a scheme for sites in all parts of the city, those parts of the city do not want to know. I can understand that and can understand why, at local elections, people say, "Keep them in Hunslet where they have been for 25 years. The people of Hunslet do not count. The people in south Leeds—the old industrial area—can lump it." In effect, that is what has happened and the people in Hunslet and in south Leeds have had enough.

My neighbour north of the river—the hon. Member for Leeds, North-West (Dr. Hampson) — told me something that I did not know. There is a site in the old city of Leeds—in south Leeds. It is a designated area, and there are stronger controls on gipsies there. You could have fooled me, Mr. Speaker. If the gipsies move in and camp in the new parts of the city, there are now powers to remove them because there are no sites there. I did not know that. In the Morley part of my constituency, and, I suspect, in the Rothwell part of the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Normanton—which is the new part of the city—since 1974 the powers available have not been strong enough to remove them.

Mr. William O'Brien (Normanton): I am grateful to my right hon. Friend for allowing me this brief intervention. The description that my right hon. Friend has given of these people exactly fits those in my area—the Bell Hill site in Rothwell. They, too, destroy fields of vegetables, and the area is blighted by their destruction and despoliation. The people in my area are fed up to the teeth with the impression that is being given to people who enter Rothwell from the motorway and the city of Leeds. So I concur with everything that my right hon. Friend has said. It is time there was some action on this issue.

Mr. Rees: There is enormous anger in Hunslet about this matter. As I have said, I understand why nothing is done in the rest of the city. There are arguments in the city council, so there is no movement. Nevertheless, something will have to be done.

We need more small sites. We have done everything possible in south Leeds and people there have had enough. People do not bother about us about education or anything else in south Leeds. We are not a middle-class area in which people write letters to the papers about education. We get the fag-end of the stick on everything in Leeds, and the gipsies are part of that. If there are extra sites in other parts of the city, they come out of Government grants. If Leeds spends money on gipsy sites, there is less money for other things. It is important there should be a separate grant for gipsy sites, because that is a national problem. The money should not come out of Leeds' budget.

Dr. Keith Hampson (Leeds, North-West): The situation in south Leeds is deplorable. People elsewhere in the city can see the circumstances that the right hon. Gentleman and his constituents have had to face. That is why, when the city council proposes to put a large gipsy site into the green belt in my area—in Meanwood—there is so much opposition and anger because of the intrusion into a beautiful area. Does the right hon. Gentleman agree that, as the city council has met the statutory requirements for the provision of sites, we are possibly in danger now of appearing to be an authority that is so positively geared to providing help for these people that we are attracting more and more of them? The more we provide sites, the greater the problem becomes.

Mr. Rees: That may be so in the future. However, there is only one site in the constituency of the hon. Member for Leeds, North-West (Dr. Hampson). The reason why the itinerants are attracted to my area is that it has eight or nine unofficial sites, and, because of a weakness in the law, nothing is done about that.

My second point concerns police powers, about which the Leeds city council will have to do something. The other evening I praised the work of a woman police inspector when we were heading for real trouble. Six weeks ago the position was reminiscent of Juliet Bravo. In a letter to me, the Home Secretary pointed out that there are new powers under the Public Order Act 1986. He said:

> "The new power applies only to trespassers who intend to reside on land"

—the travellers or gipsies certainly intend to reside on land. They are not just popping in for an evening.

> "The police can only act after the landowner has requested the trespassers to leave and they have refused. In such cases if the police reasonably believe that damage has been caused"— that is not difficult to come by—

> "that the landowner or his family or employees have been threatened, or that 12 or more vehicles have been brought on to the land"—

Twelve vehicles? We have had 60 or 70 vehicles. The police, because of shortage of manpower, have not been involved because they have been waiting for all the legal stuff to go through the courts. It goes on and on. The Home Secretary continues:

> "even if the trespass itself is not in breach of the criminal law the police can still take action if other offences are likely to be committed."

I should have thought that that is pretty difficult to prove.

I had a letter from someone in Surrey who told me that when a camp was established in his area the police went in one evening and found 21 stolen vehicles. That is the nature of the problem. These people are not the gipsies for whom I want to do something. There is a real problem for the people who live near such camps and police powers are insufficient. I am asking for the necessary powers for the local authorities and for the police.

On 13 October 1987 one of my councillors, Ian Hugill, wrote to Leeds council. He pointed out that the gipsies had been camped in eight areas all through the summer. He wanted to know what would happen at Hunslet Grange where houses have been knocked down and the ghastly blocks of flats have gone. What would happen at the waste ground at West Grange, the waste ground at Stourton Grange and the land adjoining Lakeside court? What would happen to the land at the station at Hunslet Moor and the space behind the properties 319-327 Hunslet road? What would happen to the waste land adjacent to Middleton Broom tip? My hon. Friend the Member for Normanton will know that area, because a colliery used to be there. Ian Hugill also asked about the spare land adjacent to the industrial estate in Government street. I checked with the council last Saturday and it said there were no travellers on those sites except at Bell Hill, which is on the edge of the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Normanton. However, what will be done? All my people say that the so-called gipsies will come back to those areas and nothing will be done by the local authority and the police. The problem will go on and on.

Will the Minister meet all the parties of Leeds city council and ask what they intend to do? I hope that there can be a meeting of all the councils in west Yorkshire because when the so-called gipsies leave my area they will probably move on to the area of my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, West. They have speed of movement on the motorway so while we are shot of them for a short time the problem still goes on.

This week I was given a document from local councils, parish councils and similar bodies. It contains a list of what they want the Government to do. In conclusion, that document states that the minimum requirement is the rapid provision of suitable sites. However, there is not the faintest chance of the rapid provision of such sites. Therefore, I hope that there may be a meeting in west Yorkshire to discuss this matter. I do not want to be vindictive, but these people with their money and cars are not gipsies and I want to be absolutely sure that the people of Hunslet should not face the same problem with those people year after year.

A few weeks ago the vicar of Hunslet wrote to me and said that Hunslet is under siege and that he and the councillors had done all that they could. That is a cry for help.

This is the first time in 25 years that I have had an Adjournment debate. I have sought the debate because something must be done, yet nobody has bothered about the problem. I ask the Government to do something quickly because those eight sites will fill up extremely quickly. There ought to be small sites in different parts of the county. However, there should be no more sites in south Leeds at Hunslet. We have had enough. I ask the Minister to listen sympathetically to what I have said.

Mr. Max Madden (Bradford, West): I am grateful to my right hon. Friend the Member for Morley and Leeds, South (Mr. Rees) for allowing me to contribute to the debate.

In April, I led a delegation from Bradford to see the Minister's predecessor, the hon. Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey). He wrote to me in May and his letter says:

> "You raised the question of whether other Districts in West Yorkshire were making adequate provision for gypsies. The 1968 Act requires that each Metropolitan District should provide adequate accommodation for gypsies residing in or resorting to their areas. The minimum requirement is that each District should provide not more than 15 caravan pitches . . . The Regional Office has, however, already written to both Kirklees and Calderdale seeking details of their proposals to make adequate provision for gypsies."

[Mr. Max Madden]

Coincidentally, the present Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, who is to reply to this debate, wrote a letter to me which I received this morning. Her letter says:

> "As a follow-up to your meeting with Dick Tracey earlier this year the Department's Yorkshire and Humberside Regional Office wrote to the Districts of Calderdale and Kirklees about the provision of gypsy sites in their areas. Their responses indicated that both Councils are currently considering the provision of sites;".

I can tell the Minister that they have been considering sites for a very long time. I repeat what my right hon. Friend the Member for Morley and Leeds, South has said, that there is an urgent need for Kirklees and Calderdale to make some provision. If those councils would make that provision, it would alleviate the pressures on Bradford and Leeds and on the other districts that have complied with the law. The authorities in west Yorkshire that have flouted the law that has been in existence for 20 years, are intensifying the problems in areas that have made provision and have complied with the law.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mrs. Marion Roe): I am grateful to the right hon. Member for Morley and Leeds, South (Mr. Rees) for raising the issue of gipsies in the south Leeds area. I know that it is a subject close to his heart and one that he has raised before in the House, in correspondence with my Department and other Government Departments, and elsewhere in his local press. I have also noted the contributions to the debate by my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-West (Dr. Hampson) and by the hon. Members for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) and for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien).

I share wholeheartedly the right hon. Gentleman's concern for the residents of south Leeds and for the need to ensure that public order is maintained and the law upheld. It is common ground between us that gipsies, like any other people, must comply with the law. I hope that it is also common ground that the way forward is through the provision of adequate sites for gipsies. The Government are fully committed to this approach. Indeed, we see the adequate provision of official sites as the key solution to resolving problems of the sort raised by the right hon. Gentleman.

This debate comes at an opportune time, because it was only last February that my right hon. Friend announced his conclusions following the review of policy for the provisions of gipsy sites. He concluded, after a painstaking examination of responses to a consultation letter and after considering the analysis of those responses by an independent adviser, Professor Gerald Wibberley, that the way forward was to continue for the time being with the present legislative duty to provide sites coupled with the additional controls available through designation. This was also the consensus, but we accepted that there was a need for better information on gipsies in order to establish better targets at which authorities could aim. We intend to tackle this vigorously as soon as we have the necessary research facilities.

However, I am convinced that already in the last six months we have become much more aware of the situation regarding gipsies and other groups, not only in south Leeds but elsewhere in the region and nationally. This improved information will be of great use in our discussions with the relevant local authorities on the provision of sites. I must say how grateful I am to the right hon. Member for providing much useful information to my Department, not only in this debate, but on the other occasions on which he has raised this issue with us.

I think it might be helpful if I were briefly to outline what the law has to say on the subject of gipsies. County councils, London borough councils and, as in this case, metropolitan district councils, all have a duty to provide sites for gipsies in their areas. In London boroughs and the metropolitan districts, that duty is restricted to a duty to provide for up to 15 caravans at a time. However, it is the case that in a number of London boroughs and metropolitan districts there are many more than that number of gipsies who have by long custom been encamped in those areas. Where this is so, and authorities can arrange for their accommodation, they should do so.

When my right hon. Friend can be satisfied that adequate provision exists for the accommodation of gipsies in a particular area, or that in all the circumstances it is not necessary or expedient to make adequate provision, he will be able to consider an application from the local authorities who have the statutory duties to provide accommodation that the area should be designated under the provisions of the Caravan Sites Act 1968. Designation gives the authorities greater powers to control unauthorised camping by gipsies in their areas.

We recognise that there is a problem of interpretation of the statutory definition of gipsies. The Act defines them as > "persons of nomadic habit of life, whatever their race or origin".

Local authorities have generally been able to decide who meets this statutory definition for site provision, but the definition is wide and there is increasing concern that other groups may seek the benefits which the Act provides.

Dr. Hampson rose——

Mrs. Roe: I am sorry; I cannot give way. I have a lot to say in a short time.

We are committed to examining the scope for further clarification of the issue and we are at present working on a circular which we might issue, after consultation, to local authorities to give them further advice on this and other matters. But I have to stress that the onus of deciding who is a gipsy for the purposes of the statutory duty will have to rest with the local authorities themselves, in the light of the statutory definition.

The question was raised whether gipsies with flashy cars are gipsies. The statutory definition does not make a distinction but authorities providing sites can, and do, make charges for rent and rates.

I do not wish to minimise the difficulties that exist in some areas, but I think it would be right that the House should recognise the progress that has already been made in the provision of sites. At the beginning of this year, there were about 245 local authority sites in existence, providing approximately 4,000 pitches for gipsy caravans. Additionally, we believe that at least 2,000 pitches are being provided on private sites. We recognise, however, that there is still a need for as many as 3,000 to 4,000 pitches to accommodate the considerable number of gipsy caravans for which there is as yet no legal provision.

It is also relevant to refer to what the Government already do to help local authorities to carry out their statutory responsibility. I must draw the right hon.

Gentleman's attention to the fact that we make 100 per cent. Exchequer grant available for sites provided by the local authorities, and we have currently set aside £5 million this year for that purpose. We have issued advice to local authorities, in circulars and in research reports, as a result of which there is now a considerable weight of advice on the location, design and management of sites, as well as on the promotion of private site initiatives.

We supplement the formal advice with regular and informal liaison between my Department and individual local authorities, as they may require, to help them to move towards the fulfilment of their statutory duty. We shall be ready to offer such informal advice to any of the west Yorkshire authorities which seek it regarding the adequacy of their proposals for sites, but we cannot set arbitrary quotas for individual districts.

In short, we have a legislative package which balances a duty to provide sites with the availability of special controls on unauthorised camping. We try to operate it sensibly, and we are convinced that it can be made to work, if there is the will to make it work. As I have said, we are considering what further general advice we can give to local authorities to help them to do the job; and we shall continue to examine within the Department the procedures that are operated, in order to see how we can make them operate more smoothly and efficiently in support of the work that local authorities have to do in this matter.

Unfortunately, the position in south Leeds is complicated, as we have heard from the right hon. Member. There is a history of conflict in the area and an unmet demand for further sites in the city. Partly for historical reasons, only the old Leeds county borough area has presently designated district status.

I understand, firstly, that Leeds city council is pursuing a programme of site provision for the large numbers of gipsies currently illegally camping in the south Leeds area. This extra provision, together with the 36 pitches already being provided at the authorised site at Cottingley Springs, could bring the overall position up to a level where a designation order for the whole of Leeds might be considered. If this is granted, Leeds will be in a much stronger position to deal with illegal encampments and sudden increases in the numbers of gipsies. I say this, of course, without prejudice to any decision that my right hon. Friend takes, should an application for designation come before him.

The House will be aware of my earlier statement on the effectiveness of the current legislation in controlling gipsy sites in local authorities designated under section 12 of the 1968 Act, in the answer I wrote to my hon. Friend, the Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor) set out in Hansard of 13 July.

The provision of official sites by the private and public sector is also crucial in helping to identify quickly the circumstances in which eviction and possibly legal action might be appropriate. I have already explained that designated district status would help to take more effective action on illegal camping.

On the more specific charges of breaches of the law and public order, the right hon. Member has, to my knowledge, already sought advice from my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. The Government's attitude on this is quite clear and firm. We fully understand the annoyance and nuisance that can be caused by itinerants and other trespassers. We are well aware of the general distress that can be caused to ordinary citizens by groups of people who have scant regard for the laws of our society.

The new powers introduced in the Public Order Act 1986 may be relevant for the circumstances outlined by the right hon. gentleman, although I have to say that, in general, we consider that the powers available under the caravan sites legislation are the proper solution to unauthorised camping by gipsies, since they are coupled with provision of sites. Just as clearly, the onus is on the landowner to consider whether such trespassers should leave their land. On those sites owned by Leeds city council, where illegal camping occurs, it clearly falls to the council to consider whether to instigate such action or decide whether there are other temporary measures that could be taken to ease matters. The right hon. Member will no doubt be taking this point further with his friends and colleagues on the city council, where such circumstances exist.

The right hon. Member has referred to vacant sites in south Leeds which are attractive to gipsies. He mentioned the site of the former Hunslet Grange flats. Leeds city council intends to carry out an open space scheme. It also intends to use a site in Middleton, where some Reema blocks are to be demolished, for further open space schemes to improve the environment of the surrounding estate.

Consequently, I trust that the right hon. Member will accept my contention and belief that there are grounds for optimism, although we all recognise the real problems that are occurring in south Leeds. I have set out how we have fairly and squarely faced up to making adequate provision for gipsy sites, not only in south Leeds, but throughout the city and also nationally.

The current framework for provision allows suitable sites to be set up with little financial cost to the local authority, and our experience is that well run sites, meeting the likely demand generally, do not give rise to conflict in the way that unauthorised sites do.

That conflict occurs now on illegal sites is undesirable. We have heard some evidence of the types of real problems facing the residents of south Leeds. Conflict, of course, adversely affects not only the permanent residents in conventional housing. I am also concerned that the vast bulk of the gipsy community, who are as law-abiding as the average citizen, should also have the opportunity to live in a safe and ordered environment.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at thirteen minutes to eleven o'clock.

House of Commons

Friday 20 November 1987

The House met at half-past Nine o'clock

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

BILL PRESENTED

EDUCATION REFORM

Mr. Secretary Baker, supported by Mr. Secretary Walker, Mr. Secretary Ridley, Mr. Secretary Rifkind, Mr. John Major, Mrs. Angela Rumbold, Mr. Bob Dunn and Mr. Robert Jackson, presented a Bill to amend the law relating to education: And the same was read the First time; and ordered to be read a Second time upon Monday next and to be printed [Bill 53].

Coalfield Communities

Relevant documents: First Report of the Energy Committee, Session 1986-87, on the Coal Industry and the Memorandum setting out the Government's Response to that Report (House of Commons Papers Nos. 165 and 387).

9.36 am

Mr. Kevin Barron (Rother Valley): I beg to move,

That this House recognises the specific problems of the coalfield areas, the high levels of unemployment, lack of job opportunities, falling investment and increasing poverty; regrets the Government's failure to respond to the plight of people as described in the Shelter report on housing, entitled Pits and Mortar; and calls on Her Majesty's Government urgently to look at ways of helping the coalfield communities as recommended by the Select Committee on Energy in its report on the Coal Industry, of Session 1986-87 (House of Commons Paper No. 165).

I hope that hon. Members on both sides of the House have read the motion in great detail. It is not about the coal industry—it is about the effects of changes in the industry and, more importantly, the effects on coalfield communities and the villages that surround coal mines that are working now or that have closed in the recent past. Not only Opposition Members represent people in coalfield communities. At the moment, 105 hon. Members represent constituencies that have coal mines, or have had them in the past five years.

The motion is critical of the Government's lack of action and of an economic policy that is adequate to sustain the coalfield communities after the rapid changes of the past five years. In 1981, 6·5 million people lived in coalfield areas of the United Kingdom. In each area, there are substantial local concentrations. The heaviest concentration is to be found in Yorkshire, where more than 1·3 million people live in coalfield areas.

The coalfields are unique in many senses. Mining has been highly localised in areas that have become almost exclusively dependent on this single form of employment. Close-knit communities have grown up alongside it, and the environment of our communities has been determined by the nature and history of the coal industry. The communities of the coalfield have relied on work in that industry being passed on from generation to generation, because there is not always diversity of industry in the coalfields.

Anything that affects the industry affects the whole community. In the areas in which the coal industry has declined irrevocably, new opportunities for work must emerge, but that will not happen as long as the environment is not conducive to the growth of new enterprises. There must be suitable sites, adequate services, good access to motorways and good living conditions—for homes, schools and leisure. There must be people with appropriate skills, and positive support for new industries.

In most of the older coalfields, these conditions do not exist. In 1981, about 250,000 people were directly employed by the industry. In addition, there were 70,000 to 100,000 jobs in related service industries. The severity of job losses in recent years has been unparalleled in the history of the coalfields. In recent years there has been a rapid acceleration in colliery closures. Between 1982 and 1987, 23 collieries have closed in the Yorkshire coalfield alone and in the six years from 1981 to 1987, 50 per cent. of total jobs nationally have disappeared.

Obviously, different regions have suffered different levels of job loss. In those few years Scotland has lost 72 per cent. of all its mining jobs, Kent has lost 70 per cent. and Wales has lost 55 per cent. That has left many areas with substantial unemployment problems. In my Rotherham area, more than one out of two coal mining jobs have been lost since March 1978. There are currently about 5,600 mining jobs in the Rotherham area. The threatened closure of the Manvers complex and the rundown of the Treeton colliery in my constituency will push employment in the industry down to below 4,600.

Mr. Peter Hardy (Wentworth): My hon. Friend will be aware that originally British Coal wished to close the Kilnhurst part and reduce the Manvers part to single-face working, with a substantial job loss. Is he aware of the recent suspicion that British Coal now wishes to close the whole of the Manvers complex?

Does he feel that that is perhaps due to British Coal's displeasure at having to have an inquiry? Will he ask the Minister to respond to the proposition that the devastated Dearne valley area should not have to bear further cruel and bitter loss, further destruction of hope and the corrosion of the very lives of our communities?

Mr. Barron: I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) for that intervention. I concur with everything that he says. The Dearn valley area is one of the worst unemployment black spots away from inner cities — if not the worst. The Rotherham and Mexborough travel-to-work area that I shall mention later in my speech has been devastated by the rundown of basic industries. Obviously any closure of the Manvers complex on that scale, in addition to the closure in the last 10 years of the five coking plants in the Manvers complex, would devastate that area.

In my constituency, unemployment increased by 12·8 per cent. in the two years from February 1985 to February 1987. Nearly all of that can be attributed to cuts in the mining industry. Not only are unemployment levels rising, but, because of the nature of coalfield communities, there is a high and rising level of long-term unemployment. Over 45 per cent. of those out of work in my constituency have been jobless for more than one year.

provision available for management training under the LEA training grant scheme, for which he announced in August an increase in funding.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the capital allocation to each local education authority for each of the past eight years, in real and in cash terms.

Mr. Dunn: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Higher Education Institutions

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to grant charitable status to these higher education institutions due to be taken out of local education authority control.

Mr. Jackson: We intend that the forthcoming legislation transferring the polytechnics and other major colleges of higher education from LEA control should enable them to acquire charitable status.

Polytechnics

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place in the Library those responses received from polytechnic directors to his proposals to change polytechnics' control and organisation.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold) gave the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 21 October 1987, at column 736.

Books and Equipment

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 3 November, at column 645, if he will set out the planned expenditure for pupils in books and equipment for 1988-89, and the planned figure for 1987-88.

Mrs. Rumbold: Planned expenditure on school books and equipment for 1988-89 takes account of the actual outturn for expenditure in 1985-86 and, in accordance with the local authorities' forecasts, allows for real increases in spending per pupil of 10 per cent. in 1986-87 and a further 5 per cent. in each of the years 1987-88 and 1988-89. Allowing for reducing pupil numbers, cash provision in 1988-89 in each of the primary and secondary sectors is some 37 per cent. higher than actual spending in 1985-86.

Secondary School Libraries

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) of 3 November, at column 645, if he will set out the details of the additional sum which has been provided for secondary school libraries.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have provided £10 million within the 1988-89 plans to cover the costs of additional librarians and new stock for secondary school libraries.

General Certificate of Secondary Education

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) of 3 November, at column 645, if he will indicate the amount of money which will be provided in 1988-89 for equipping schools for the new general certificate of secondary education courses; and what was the equivalent figure for 1987-88.

Mrs. Rumbold: The plans for 1988-89 allow for £87 million to be spent on non-teaching costs associated with the introduction of the GCSE. The equivalent figure for 1987-88 was £100 million. In both years the provision is in line with what local authorities collectively forecast would be needed.

PRIME MINISTER

Basingstoke

Q66. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Prime Minister when she next intends to make an official visit to Basingstoke.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

EC (Internal Market)

Q87. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to discuss the European Economic Community internal market with the Council of Ministers.

The Prime Minister: The European Council regularly reviews progress on the internal market at its six-monthly meeting. No decisions have yet been taken on the agenda of the next meeting in Copenhagen on 3-4 December.

South Africa

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Prime Minister if, in the light of her statement at the Commonwealth conference in Vancouver on 17 October that she would not invest in South Africa, she proposes to give the same advice to British companies and citizens; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: In the interview to which the hon. Member refers I distinguished between acts of Government and the judgment of the market place. As my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade explained in answer to the hon. Member's question on 23 July 1987, at columns 305-7, the Government have fulfilled their commitment on new investment in South Africa by the introduction of a voluntary ban.

Government Purchasing

Mr. Wood: To ask the Prime Minister what progress is being made on implementing the report on Government purchasing of December 1984.

The Prime Minister: Following "Government Purchasing" a central unit on purchasing was established. The Treasury is publishing tomorrow the unit's report on 1986-87, its first full year of operation. A copy of the report will be placed in the Library of the House.

The unit's roles is to provide advice and assistance to Departments in improving the effectiveness and efficiency of their purchasing and supply activities. Mr. Michael Willacy is director of the unit on secondment from Shell UK. About half its small staff are similarly on secondment from private sector companies.

A target was set to achieve value-for-money improvements of £400 million a year from Government Departments' purchasing and stockholding by April 1987. The unit records that in 1986-87 central Government Departments (excluding the Ministry of Defence, which is not covered by this report) achieved value for money improvements totalling £286 million, equivalent to 4·7 per cent. of total expenditure on purchases of goods and services of some £6 billion in that year. The report also notes that Departments are becoming more aware of the potential of small firms to provide value for money in purchasing and supply, and that some Departments have taken worthwhile initiatives to encourage small firms.

For 1987-88 Departments (again excluding Ministry of Defence) have set targets for value-for-money improvements totalling £388 million, and for 1988-89 targets totalling £447 million, equivalent to some 7 per cent. of forecast expenditure on goods and services in that year. The report emphasises that a great deal remains to be done, including taking better advantage of the potential of small firms to provide value for money. But the achievements to date and the more ambitious targets Departments are now setting themselves for the future are encouraging.

Engagements

Mr. Janner: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 November.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 November.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 November.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 November.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 November.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 November.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 November.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 November.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 November.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 November.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Embassies and Consulates

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the total expenditure in the past financial year for Her Majesty's Government' sembassy in Paris, and for each consulate and honorary consulate in France, broken down by salaries, accommodation and other expenses; and what is the budgeted total expenditure for each in the current year.

Mr. Eggar: The running costs for 1986–87 for the FCO posts in France are as follows, together with the estimated total costs for 1987–88. The costs of honorary consulates cannot be identified separately, but are included in the cost of relevant supervising posts.

	[1]Salaries £'000	[2]Accommodation £'000	Other expenses £'000	Total £'000	Estimated costs £'000

[1] Salaries and allowances for United Kingdom staff and locally-engaged staff.

[2] Accommodation includes office and residential costs.

NATO Meeting (Moscow)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation meeting following the meeting in Moscow between Mr. Shultz and Mr. Shevardnadze.

Mr. Mellor: Mr. Shultz briefed the North Atlantic Council on 24 October on his discussions in Moscow as part of the process of regular and close consultations between the United States and its allies. He focused particularly on developments in the United States/Soviet arms control talks.

UNESCO

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if in the light of the election of Professor Mayor, as director general, he will make a futher statement about Her Majesty's Government's policy towards membership of UNESCO.

Mr. Eggar: As I told the House on 21 October, we welcome the election of Professor Mayor, whose appointment was confirmed by the General Conference of UNESCO on 7 November.

Professor Mayor's experience in the field of education, science and culture, and his detailed knowledge of UNESCO, equip him well for his new responsibilities. We wish him well. But we have made clear that we would need clear evidence that substantial reform had been achieved in UNESCO before we could reconsider our membership of the organisation. We will be watching developments closely and keeping an open mind.

ENERGY

Coal Reserves

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is British Coal's assessment of coal reserves at (a) Munton mine, (b) Dawden mine, (c) Vane Tempest mine and (d) Easington mine.

Mr. Michael Spicer: That is a matter for the British Coal Corporation. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Select Committee Reports (Government's Response)

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether he will publish the Government's response to the Energy Committee's report on the effect of oil and gas prices on activity in the North sea, HC 175, Session 1986-87;

(2) whether he will make a statement on Magnox decommissioning costs in response to the recommendation in paragraph 34 of the second report from the Energy Committee, Session 1986-87, HC 88.

Mr. Parkinson: I have placed copies of the Government's responses to the previous Energy Select Committee's reports on Magnox decommissioning costs and the effects of oil and gas prices on the level of North sea activity in the Library of the House.

EMPLOYMENT

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why Mr. John Rimington, Director General of the Health and Safety Executive, sent out a letter dated 17 September to staff warning them not to talk to hon. Members or journalists about the crises facing the Health and Safety Executive if it did not secure the level of funding for 1988-89.

Mr. Nicholls: I understand that Mr. Rimington took the view that the interview to an MP and journalist given by one of his staff on a matter currently under discussion between the Health and Safety Commission and Ministers breached the normal rules of discretion to which civil servants are subject.

British Shipbuilders

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to holding answer of 26 October to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow, if he is yet in a position to provide a substantive answer concerning the test case involving former employees of British Shipbuilders Ltd.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 5 November 1987.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Civil Defence

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects his working party's report with guidelines on public protection against chemical attack; if such guidelines will be made available to authorities charged with a duty to plan for the protection of the public in war; and if such guidelines will form the basis of advice for distribution to the general public.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In the absence of a ban on chemical weapons, the Government are conducting a variety of studies into their effects and protective measures against them. This work is continuing and consideration of guidance must await its outcome.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when authorities charged with a duty to plan for the protection of the public in war may expect guidance on the identification of suitable public places for shelter in war.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: "Emergency Planning Guidance Handbook 2: Communal Shelters" was issued to local authorities in 1985. A pilot communal shelter survey has been undertaken in selected areas, and supplementary advice on survey methods will be issued in the new year.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the annual throughput of students at the Civil Defence College for each of the last five years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following numbers of persons attended courses and seminars at the Civil Defence College:

	Number
1982	2,140
1983	2,710
1984	2,896
1985	2,868
1986	2,892

Scientific Advisers Training Manual

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will revise his Department's 1977 scientific advisers training manual to include new data from his Department's scientific research and development branch which predicts increased deaths and injuries from nuclear blast.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Advice on blast casualty calculation taking account of the review of the blast casualty rules applicable to United Kingdom houses was issued to local authorities in October 1986 and forms the basis for training scientific advisers; it will be incorporated in a revised training manual for scientific advisers in due course.

Prisoners (Police Cells)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are currently held in (a) police cells and (b) magistrates' court cells in the London area; and what is his estimate of these figures in the event of normal working by all prison officers in the London area.

Mr. John Patten: On 4 November the numbers of prisoners held in police cells and magistrates' court cells in the Metropolitan police area were 161 and 82, respectively. Now that industrial action at the prisons involved has been suspended, we aim to move them all into prison.

Nationality Registration

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce a reduced concessionary rate, together with payment by instalments, for supplementary benefit claimants applying for nationality registration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No. The Government believe that it is right that those who wish to become British citizens should meet the cost of processing their applications, and concessions to one group would only increase the cost to others.

Information Services

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by grade the personnel currently employed in the public relations branch within his Department.

Mr. Hurd: The complement for the public relations branch of the Home Office, listed by grade, is as follows:

Grade	Number
Grade 4	1
Grade 6	1
Grade 7	2
Senior Information Officer	9
Information Officer	14
Assistant Information Officer	3
Executive Officer	1
Personal Secretary	3
Administrative Officer	2
Administrative Assistant	5

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of maintaining the public relations branch within his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Hurd: The annual budget for the Home Office public relations branch since 1979 has been as follows.

1979-80	374
1980-81	478
1981-82	448
1982-83	429
1983-84	545
1984-85	569
1985-86	646
1986-87	704

These figures include salary, accommodation and service costs.

Mr. Ahmad Babolhavaeji

Miss Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Office Department if he is yet in a position to finalise the case of Mr. Ahmad Babolhavaeji, details of which were sent to him by the hon. Member for Plymouth, Drake on 30 September 1986.

Mr. Renton: I have written to my hon. Friend today.

Murder Statistics

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to the answer of 5 November, he is now in a position to say how many persons have been convicted of homicide in the period since 1965 who had previously been convicted and sentenced for homicide; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Since 1965, 49 people originally convicted of homicide have been subsequently reconvicted of homicide. Thirty-six of them, 11 of whom were murderers released on life licence, committed the subsequent offence after release from prison in England and Wales. Of the remaining 13, seven committed the subsequent offence while in prison or mental hospital; one while on bail for the first offence; and five had been originally convicted outside England and Wales.

Child Abuse

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to provide that all courts take all necessary measures to protect children giving evidence in sex abuse cases from seeing the defendants and from experiencing the formalities of the court.

Mr. John Patten: In England and Wales, clause 30 of the Criminal Justice Bill will permit a child to give evidence at the Crown court by closed circuit television in sex abuse cases. The position in Scotland is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Advocate; but I understand that the Scottish Law Commission is considering the law of evidence in criminal proceedings, and that the Lord Advocate has asked it to look at the giving of evidence by children in sex abuse cases, including the possible use of closed circuit television.

Earl William (Detention Centre)

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he proposes to renew the charter of the Earl William at Harwich as an immigration detention centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The lease for the charter of the Earl William at Harwich as an immigration detention centre was initially for a period of three months from early May. It was extended in July for a further period of three months, which expires on 30 November. I have decided not to exercise the options in the contract for further possible extensions beyond that date.

Social Workers (Criminal Records)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many officers form the present complement of that section in the Metropolitan police checking the existence and content of any criminal record of applicants for posts with social services departments with access to children in accordance with Home Office circular HOC(86)44; what was the complement of this section in 1985 and in 1986; what is the average length of time currently taken in responding to a request for a check from a social services department; and how many boroughs in London are currently operating the terms of the circular and requesting checks.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am informed by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the staff complement for the section within the Metropolitan police charged with checking the existence and content of any criminal record of applicants for posts with substantial access to children was as follows:

	Number
1985	4
1986	6
1987	8

Until July 1986, the scope of such checks was limited to those seeking specific posts within the probation and social services. The arrangements announced in the Home Office circular 44/1986 widened the scope of these checks to include all those seeking local authority posts which involve substantial access to children, and the complement of the section has been increased to reflect the additional work load. The complement will be increased to 12 from January 1988.

The average time taken to process checks of this kind is six weeks, although this should be reduced when the additional staff are in post. Twenty London boroughs currently make use of the arrangements.

TRANSPORT

Pedal Cyclists (Helmets)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report the types of helmets for child pedal cyclists which comply with the British Standard and are currently available in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is no formal record of helmet types complying with the standard. We are taking steps to ensure road safety officers and others engaged in road safety work bring the new standard to the attention of schools, parents and children.

Tourism

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of tourism signposting.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The new system of white on brown traffic signs for tourist attractions in England was announced in April 1986 following successful experiments in Kent and Nottinghamshire. The English tourist board has publicised the scheme with the tourist industry. We have produced an explanatory leaflet which is being distributed to the public by the motoring organisations and tourist information centres.

More than 2,000 attractions have now had signs approved under the new arrangements. Many local authorities have prepared comprehensive tourist signing plans for their areas; other authorities are dealing with signing requests as they arise.

The new signs have now appeared on the roads in many parts of the country and I expect even more to be in place before next summer's tourist season. The signs have been well received by both the public and the tourist industry.

M1 Motorway

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions have taken place between officials of his Department and officials of Bedfordshire county council regarding the signposting of an alternative route for traffic prevented from entering the closed southbound slipway on junction 10 of the M1.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There have been regular and frequent meetings to discuss traffic management, including the signing of diversionary routes.

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work to be completed between junctions 9 and 10 on the M1.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The contractor hopes to complete the work within the next few days.

Transport Developments

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his Department's involvement in developments in the United Kingdom in recent years with respect to trolleybuses, tramways, rapid transit and light railways.

Mr. David Mitchell: My Department has been involved in the approval and financing of the Docklands light railway and the Tyne and Wear metro. The Department is also closely involved in studies of further light rail proposals for London and is in touch with a number of authorities which are proposing such systems elsewhere. I shall write to my hon. Friend with further details.

British Airways

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has yet made his decision on whether to approve British Airways' recent application for fare increases on its European routes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I understand that British Airways recently applied for increased fares to almost all of its European destinations. Applications are considered by the Civil Aviation Authority in relation to data about the airline's costs on the routes in question. The authority has disapproved the increased fares to Greece and Spain as being unjustified in relation to costs. It is still considering proposals affecting club and Eurobudget fares to Denmark, Finland, Italy, Norway and Sweden and to southern France, and economy fares to Nice. It has approved the increases proposed on the airline's other routes to Europe.

Travellers Fare

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any information on the employment implications of the privatisation of Travellers Fare station catering.

Mr. David Mitchell: The British Railways Board is currently undertaking a competitive tender exercise for station catering sites operated by Travellers Fare. Any employment implications would be matters for the board.

British Rail

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to ask the chairman of British Rail for an annual report showing for each region the number of instances of engine failure.

Mr. David Mitchell: We monitor the general reliability of British Rail's passenger services. But the particular causes of cancellation or late running are operational matters for the board.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each year since 1970, at 1970 prices (a) total capital expenditure approved for British Rail and (b) total capital expenditure for electrification of British Rail services.

Mr. David Mitchell: Figures for investment (on revenue and capital account) in the railway are not readily available before 1974. Corporate investment includes investment in the subsidiary businesses at the time: ownership of these businesses has changed in some cases. Figures for investment in electrification exclude rolling stock. The figures are:

Capital and revenue account corporate investment by the British Railways Board is as follows:

[1] 15-month accounting period.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the annual central Government subsidy to British Rail in each of the past 15 years; and if he will express these figures as a percentage of the total expenditure of British Rail in each year.

Mr. David Mitchell: Figures for Government support for British Rail since 1972, in cash and expressed as a percentage of rail operating expenditure, are as follows.

The present grant system began in 1975, and figures for earlier years are not comparable. Figures for 1972 to 1974 include grants for unremunerative passenger services under section 39 of the Transport Act 1968, surplus track grants under section 40 of the 1968 Act, and revenue deficit grants. From 1975 they include grant in compensation for the public service obligation under EEC regulation 1191/69 and section 3 of the Railways Act 1974, level crossings grant under EC regulation 1192/69, and grants in respect of the non-passenger railway from 1975 to 1978.

Figures are taken from final grant claims and from the BRB annual report and accounts. 1984/85 is a 15-month period reflecting a change in the British Railways Board's financial year. The figures for 1985/86 and 1986/87 remain provisional; final claims have not yet been agreed. All figures are cash.

Second-hand Tyres

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what representations he has received from trading standards departments and other interested organisations on the sale of second-hand tyres; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to seek to introduce legislation governing the sale of second-hand tyres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Trading standards authorities in West Yorkshire and Warwickshire have suggested that their officers need more powers to control effectively the sale of second-hand tyres. We are considering what might be done.

Taxis and Private Hire Vehicles

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each year since 1970 the estimated number of taxis or private hire vehicles in the United Kingdom.

Mr. David Mitchell: The information requested is as follows:

Figures for taxis in England and Wales are set out in the table

Licensed Taxis Thousands

	London	England and Wales outside London
1970	8·7	n/a
1971	9·6	n/a
1972	10·1	n/a
1973	10·4	n/a
1974	11·0	n/a
1975	11·3	n/a
1976	11·8	15·2
1977	12·5	15·5
1978	12·5	16·0
1979	12·3	16·7
1980	12·4	17·0
1981	12·6	17·4
1982	12·8	17·7
1983	13·1	18·1
1984	13·6	18·4
1985	13·8	18·9
1986	14·2	21·1

In Scotland, there were 5,188 licensed taxis in 1984 and 6,360 in 1985.

It is estimated that there were 20,000 hire cars in London in 1969, 27,000 in 1975 and about 35,000 in 1985. There were 19,300 licensed hire cars in England and Wales outside London in 1980 and 25,780 in 1985. This increase was, however, largely explained by the extension of licensing. There were 2,960 licensed hire cars in Scotland in 1985.

Minibuses

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the total number of minibuses registered for public service operation in each of the years from 1982 to 1986 and for the latest available date in 1987.

Mr. David Mitchell: The available information is as follows:

Hackney vehicles with 9 to 16 passenger seats: stock end of year
Great Britain

	Number
1982	6,305
1983	6,[illegible]
1984	6,3[illegible]3
1985	6,766
1986	7,854

Information for 1987 is not yet available.

Stage Carriage Services

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the total number of operators of stage carriage services in the United Kingdom in each year since 1965.

Mr. David Mitchell: In each of the years 1982 to the financial year 1985-86 there were about 1,300 operators of stage services in Great Britain. Results for earlier years are not available. Comparable results for 1986-87 have not been finalised, but the available evidence suggests that there has been a substantial rise in the number of operators of local services since deregulation.

Railway Line Closures

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the total number of miles of (a) passenger line and (b) freight line closed by British Rail in each year since 1970.

Mr. David Mitchell: The total number of miles of passenger line closed by British Rail in each year since 1970 is as follows:

Year	Miles closed
1971	23
1972	51
1973	56·25
1974	—
1975	15
1976	—
1977	24
1978	—
1979	—
1980	—
1981	0·75
1982	1·25
1983	41·5
1984	—
1985	4
1986	2·5

Similar figures for freight lines closures are not readily available.

Bus Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has of (a) bus route miles operated and (b) bus passengers carried in the United Kingdom in each year since 1970.

Mr. David Mitchell: Information on bus vehicle miles and bus passengers carried for the years 1970 to 1985-86 is published in "Transport Statistics Great Britain: 1976-1986"; (tables 2.33 and 2.37). Results for 1986-87 are to be published in a statistical bulletin later this year. Results for bus route miles are not available.

Subsidies

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list for each year since 1970 (a) the profit or loss, (b) central Government subsidy and (c) local authority subsidy of the former London Transport Executive and of London Regional Transport;

(2) if he will list, for each year since inception, until privatisation (a) the profit or loss, (b) the control Government subsidy and (c) central authority subsidy of each National Bus Company subsidiary.

Mr. David Mitchell: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

A6121 (Speed Limit)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will request a senior representative of the East Midland regional office to visit Essendine, Leicestershire, to observe traffic conditions there and advise them on the desirability of introducing a 40 mph speed limit on the A6121 road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A senior representative of the East Midlands regional office has already visited Essendine and given advice. It is still clear that a 40 mph speed limit would not contribute to road safety.

Lorries (Regulation)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the regulations which apply to United Kingdom-based lorries and drivers which do not apply to lorries and drivers travelling to the United Kingdom from other countries.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer, 6 November 1987]: Foreign lorries and drivers coming into the United Kingdom for a period of more than three months must comply with all relevant United Kingdom legislation. Vehicles brought into Great Britain for a period of less than three months are exempted from customs duties, and from certain of the vehicle lighting and the construction and use regulations.

Foreign vehicles carrying dangerous goods must comply with United Kingdom regulations on the carriage of such goods, unless they meet the provisions of the UN agreement on the carriage of dangerous goods by road (ADR).

WALES

School Meals

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children in Wales are in receipt of free school meals, by district authority; what percentage of the total number of children in each group this represents; and what are the comparable figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information by district authority is not available.

Careers Advice

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to encourage the improvement of careers advice offered by schools in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Government recognise that it is of vital importance that the best and most up-to-date guidance on careers is brought to young people. That is why, last April, my right hon. Friend, in conjunction with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and Science and for Employment, issued a document entitled "Working Together for a Better Future" to local education authorities, educational institutions and careers officers in England and Wales. Its aim is to raise the effectiveness of work in the careers education and guidance field generally.

Authorities have been asked to review their current arrangements and policies for careers education, and to make an interim report to the Secretaries of State by 31 December 1987, and a written policy statement by 31 October 1988.

School Rolls

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report, by education authority, those primary schools in Wales having fewer than 100 pupils, showing the school roll in each case.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is not readily available in the form requested. Summary information showing the total number of primary schools with 100 pupils or fewer and the number of pupils in those schools, for each county as at January 1987, is given in the following table.

Welsh counties	Number of primary schools with 100 pupils or less	Number of pupils on roll
Clwyd	94	4,912
Dyfed	199	9,511
Gwent	57	3,446
Gwynedd	125	6,623
Mid-Glamorgan	56	3,854
Powys	82	3,979
South Glamorgan	15	1,154
West Glamorgan	24	1,703

Child Abuse

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what extra resources his Department is making available to deal with the problem of child abuse.

Mr. Grist: Expenditure on services for children, including child abuse work, is discussed each year in the social services expenditure sub-group. The sub-group's report is taken into account in the annual rate support grant settlement. Expenditure on these services is, however, a matter for local authority decision in the light of local needs and priorities. The Department will shortly be discussing with directors of social services in Wales the extent of training needs for staff dealing with child abuse.

Mental Illness

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many women patients were resident in mental illness hospitals in Wales in each year from 1980.

Mr. Grist: A census of the residents of mental illness hospitals and units is undertaken only every second year. The available information is as follows:

Number of female residents in mental illness hospitals and units on 5 April

	Number
1981	2,542
1983	2,405
1985	2,363
1987	2,272

NHS (Ward Closures)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many National Health Service hospital wards have been closed either permanently or temporarily in Wales in each of the years since 1979; and whether these closures were due to (a) shortages of medical staff, (b) shortages of equipment or (c) lack of funds.

Mr. Grist: This information is not available centrally. I must point out, however, that the growth in the recurrent revenue resources available to health authorities in the period 1978-79 to 1987-88 is over £172 million after adjustment for inflation and this represents a growth rate of almost 32 per cent. in the period. In addition, there are 13.3 per cent. more doctors and dentists and 10·7 per cent. more nurses than there were in 1979.

There has also been a substantive investment in new and updated equipment. Throughout this period there has also been a very substantial programme of new hospital building.

AIDS

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what funds are being made available to meet the costs of services for people with AIDS or HIV infection.

Mr. Grist: Since 1 April 1985, the Welsh Office has spent £920,000 on AIDS-related activities, mostly in the blood transfusion service. In addition, £300,000 is being provided on a recurrent basis to support district health authorities' efforts in prevention, testing and counselling. So far, the incidence of AIDS in Wales has been relatively low and DHAs have been meeting the costs of treatment. The implications of AIDS and of HIV infection for service provision will be kept under close examination in the light of the specific operational plans that DHAs are currently preparing.

Primary Education

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the organisations which have so far commented on the consultative document regarding primary education in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Consultation documents were issued on the following proposals, all of which affect primary as well as secondary education in Wales:

Grant Maintained Schools
Admission of Pupils to Maintained Schools
Financial Delegation to Schools
Collective Worship
National Curriculum 5-16
Charges for School Activities

My right hon. Friend has discussed the proposals with representatives of the Welsh Joint Education Committee and with the Welsh Consultative Council on local government finance. A number of organisations which were consulted were invited to discuss the schools proposals at the Welsh Office and 14 organisations had meetings with Welsh Office officials as a result:

National Association of Headteachers (Wales)
Parent Teacher Association of Wales
Professional Association of Teachers (Wales)
National Union of Teachers (Wales)
Assistant Masters and Mistresses Association (Wales)
National Association of Schoolmasters/Union of Women Teachers (Wales)

Health Statistics

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether his Department has made an assessment of the high rate of bronchitis and high blood pressure in Wales as reflected in the health and lifestyle survey published in April of the current year; and what steps they are taking to reduce them.

Mr. Grist: The Department is aware of the assessments made in this survey and in others not only of the incidence of bronchitis and high blood pressure but also of other diseases where an individual's lifestyle can play a part. The Welsh Health Promotion Authority was established earlier this year with a general remit to complement efforts to promote good health and prevent ill health in Wales. The authority is currently preparing a strategic plan designed to help in targeting its contributions most effectively.

Cancer Screening

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many laboratories test for cervical cancer in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Fifteen laboratories in Wales conduct cervical cytology tests.

Family Planning

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total annual cost of National Health Service family planning services for each of the years 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The information is not available in the form requested. The following table sets out the information currently held by the Department.

NHS Family planning services: Wales[1]

£ thousands

	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86
District Health Authority Community Services[2]	1,052	1,116	1,278	1,308
Family Practitioner Services[3]	2,187	2,263	2,478	2,463
Total	3,239	3,379	3,756	3,771

[1] The costs of family planning in respect of hospital services are not included as they cannot be separately identified in the annual accounts.

[2] District health authorities community services exclude Gwynedd health authority whose community services expenditure is only available in total for all services.

[3] The figures included in family practitioner services consist of general practitioners' fees for contraceptive services and the costs to the pharmaceutical services in respect of contraceptive substances and appliances issued free to women. The latter is based on a 2 per cent. sample of the chemist accounts in Wales.

Mudiad Ysgolion Meithrin

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give a list of the annual Government contributions to Mudiad Ysgolion Meithrin.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is as follows:

1979-80	95,000
1980-81	117,000
1981-82	259,000
1982-83	278,000
1983-84	292,000
1984-85	310,350
1985-86	326,400
1986-87	363,800
1987-88	383,700

Roads (North Wales)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made as to the relative long-term consequences for the future development of Clwyd, South-West and north Wales generally of (a) improvement of the A5 and (b) completion of the A55.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The A55 is of considerable importance to the whole economy of north Wales. Its improvement will provide added incentives to tourism and industry and bring substantial traffic relief benefits to communities on the existing road. The A5 will also continue to have an important role. But bearing in mind that it passes through the Snowdonia national park and that traffic patterns may well be modified when work on the A55 is complete, our present policy for it is to limit improvement to relieving pressure points.

Women (Public Appointments)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all women who have been appointed to public bodies for which he has responsibility since 1979.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information can be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Connahs Quay High School

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will increase the funding of Clwyd local education authority with a view to keeping open the Connahs Quay high school; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I am aware that Clwyd education authority is considering a reorganisation of its secondary school provision but no statutory proposals have yet been published by the authority. It will be for the authority to determine its own priorities within the resources available to it.

Coal Mining, Cheapside, Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will refuse planning permission to the Open Cast Coal Executive to mine coal at Cheapside, Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend cannot give any such assurance. He will make his decision on the planning appeal following a public local inquiry and a report to him by the inspector.

Schools (Statistics)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the names of all schools in the Alyn and Deeside constituency which have closed or are proposed for closure or change of description since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Schools in the constituency which have closed since 1979 are Bistre county infants' school and Shotton nursery school. There are currently no published notices proposing closure or change of description in that area.

Clwyd (Teachers)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many teachers are employed by Clwyd local education authority (i) full-time and (ii) part-time in (a) nursery, (b) primary and (c) secondary schools.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information for teachers in service, in January 1987, is as follows:

	Nursery	Maintained schools Primary	 Secondary
Full-time teachers	10	1,467	1,859
Part time teachers[1]	—	228	104

[1] Part time teachers are expressed in terms of whole numbers and not in full-time equivalent terms.

Deeside Community Hospital

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his earliest estimated date for the start and completion of the proposed Deeside community hospital; what is its estimated cost; what are the estimated number of beds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I understand that the current plans of Clwyd health authority, in respect of the proposal to provide a community hospital in Deeside, are to commence construction in September 1989 and to complete it by April 1991, at a total estimated cost of £2·98 million. The development currently envisaged by the health authority makes provision for 28 beds.

The Department is awaiting receipt of a final revised capital programme from Clwyd health authority, which I understand will include the above development.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the amount of public moneys spent under separate headings by the Welsh Development Agency since 1980 on (a) Deeside industrial park, (b) Engineer park, Sandycroft, (c) Clay industrial estate and (d) Pinfold lane, Buckley, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my answer in the Library of the House.

Alyn and Deeside (Grants)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the amount of urban aid and similar grants under separate headings Her Majesty's Government have made available to Alyn and Deeside council in each of the years since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The allocations made by the Department each year since 1979-80 are as follows:

£000's

	Urban programme	Urban development grant	Total
1980-81	—	—	—
1981-82	130	—	130
1982-83	430	—	430
1983-84	410	—	410
1984-85	590	62	652
1985-86	550	—	550
1986-87	820	653	1,473
1987-88	400	—	400
Total	3,330	715	4,045

We are currently considering the district council's urban programme applications for 1988-89 and will be announcing our decisions in due course. At present there are no urban development grant applications before us from Alyn and Deeside district council.

Dee Road Crossing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with Clwyd county council and Alyn and Deeside council concerning their objective of a new road crossing of the River Dee in Alyn and Deeside; what his estimate is of the earliest date when a new Dee road crossing may be started; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I met a deputation of local authorities led by the hon. Gentleman the Member for Alyn and Deeside in February of this year. However, any proposals for a new road crossing of the Dee estuary is the responsibility of Clwyd county as the local highway authority. All matters concerning its preparation and timing are for it.

Abortion

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the names and addresses of all those clinics which are currently licensed for the performing of abortions in Wales, giving in the case of each clinic the number of licensed beds.

Mr. Grist: Termination of pregnancy in private nursing homes, hospitals and clinics may be carried out only if the premises have been approved by the Secretary of State for that purpose. My right hon. Friend has approved the BUPA hospital, Croescadarn road, Pentwyn, Cardiff, in respect of six beds.

Care in the Community

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he has made with local authorities and area health authorities to promote care in the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: All local authorities and health authorities are required by statute to form joint consultative committees whose role is to advise their respective authorities on the joint planning and operation of community care services. In addition to the generality of moneys made available to local authorities through rate support grant and to the health authorities, my right hon. Friend supports care in the community developments with earmarked central funds and will continue to do so.

Euston-Holyhead Rail Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, when he next meets the chairman of British Rail, he will discuss with him the board's initiatives to improve the Euston to Holyhead rail service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: When my right hon. Friend meets the chairman of British Rail he would, of course, wish to discuss with him all major rail issues of concern to Wales.

Crew-Holyhead Line

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if Her Majesty's Government are currently considering any proposal to electrify the Crewe to Holyhead railway line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farming Subsidies

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the overall amount of annual subsidy made available by the Exchequer to the British farming industry.

Mr. MacGregor: Latest available figures for public expenditure under the CAP and on national grants and subsidies in the United Kingdom for the last three years, (as shown in the 1987 annual review) were:

1984-85	1,706
1985-86	2,160
1986-87	[1]1,577

[1] Estimate.

Pesticides

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to introduce a centralised system for co-ordinating the reports on pesticides poisoning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A number of recording systems exist which include reports of pesticide poisoning within their terms of reference. This reflects the different objectives of arrangements concerned with, for example, employment-related incidents, hospital admissions, and the advisory work of specialised poisons units. I am asking the advisory committee on pesticides to consider whether any improvements need to be made to such arrangements.

Farm Waste Unit

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the level of staffing at the Ministry's farm waste unit; and if he intends to maintain in post the workforce presently employed at the farm waste unit.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I attach high importance to my Department's advisory work on farm waste which I am anxious should be carried out as effectively as possible. The current balance between central and local advisory resources is being reviewed to make ADAS' expertise as accessible as possible to the farming industry and this will have implications for the size and role of the farm waste unit itself. However, there will be no reduction in overall effort.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response his Department has made to the representations by the National Farmers Union, the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and the British Veterinary Association, for steps to be taken to limit the risk to animals posed by used condoms being left in fields.

Mr. Donald Thompson: None.

THE ARTS

Office of Arts and Libraries

Mr. Buchan: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will publish in the Official Report the total Office of Arts and Libraries' expenditure for every year from 1977-78 to 1987-88, showing within that total Office of Arts and Libraries' expenditure on capital projects and Office of Arts and Libraries expenditure on revenue grants, respectively.

Mr. Luce: The Office of Arts and Libraries' expenditure since 1983-84 when the OAL was established as a separate Department, has been as follows:

1983-84	210·3
1984-85	228·5
1985-85	236·0
1986-87	285·7
[1]1987-88	292·7

[1] Estimate

The bulk of this represented the OAL's grants to its sponsored bodies for revenue purposes.

Expenditure on the building programme of the national museums and galleries and the British Library St. Pancras project has been met from the Votes of the Property Services Agency during this period.

CIVIL SERVICE

Women

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will give (a) the total number of Government committees currently chaired by women, (b) the percentage of Government committees currently chaired by women, (c) the total number of women currently on boards of directors of nationalised industries, and (d) the number of women currently on boards of directors of nationalised industries as a percentage of the total number of members of boards of directors of nationalised industries.

Mr. Luce: On 1 April 1986, women chaired 58 of the committees and other advisory bodies appointed by Ministers and listed in "Public Bodies 1986". This represented 5 per cent. of the advisory bodies listed. On the same date 33 women were members of the boards of directors of nationalised industries, representing 9 per cent. of board members.

Figures for 1987 will be published later this year.

SCOTLAND

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many forestry development schemes in the United Kingdom have proceeded without a Forestry Commission planting licence in each of the last three years and in 1987 to date; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There have been two cases during this period of large-scale planting taking place without approval under a Forestry Commission grant scheme. Both of these were in 1985. Some small-scale planting without grant will also have taken place, but the commission does not necessarily know of all such cases. Estimates of the amount of planting without grant are published in the commission's annual reports.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the policy of the Forestry Commission towards the erection of electric fencing around forest plantations by (a) the commission and (b) private landowners; what provision is made for (i) warning notices to be clearly displayed and (ii) stiles or gates to be established, in circumstances where electric fencing is erected; and whether any conditions relating to the safety of the public in circumstances where there is electric fencing are attached to grant aid for forestry.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A small amount of electrified fencing is in use in some commission forests, but only on a trial basis. The commission's general policy is to refuse grant aid for private forestry schemes where the use of electrified fencing is proposed. It is fully accepted that wherever such fencing is in use adequate warning notices and crossing facilities should be provided.

Sport (Violence)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines have been issued to procurators fiscal concerning the investigation of on-field incidents at football matches and other sporting occasions.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This is a matter for my noble and learned Friend, the Lord Advocate. He has not issued such guidelines, nor does he consider them to be necessary. Incidents involving criminal conduct on the field of play are treated in the same way as offences committed elsewhere.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of (a) professional and (b) amateur sportsmen successfully prosecuted in each of the past 10 years for offences committed during the course of their sporting activities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As regards professional sportsmen, the information is not readily available and could not be obtained without disproportionate costs. As regards amateur sportsmen, the information is not available.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with (a) the Scottish Football Association, (b) the Scottish Professional Footballers' Association or (c) any other body over the guidelines which should be applied in considering whether a prosecution should arise from incidents during football matches.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This is a matter for my noble and learned Friend, the Lord Advocate, who I am told has had no such discussions. The procurator fiscal at Glasgow has, however, agreed to meet the secretary of the Scottish Professional Footballers' Association, on Monday 9 November to discuss matters arising from the Rangers v Celtic football match on 17 October.

Waiting Times and Lists

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the external members of his Department's working group studying methods of reducing waiting times and lists; and when he expects the group to report.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The working group consists of departmental officials, whose proposals will be the subject of discussion with health boards. I have asked for an early report.

Disabled People

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to complete his consultations with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities on the Disabled Persons (Service, Representation and Consultation) Act 1986; when he expects to implement the sections appropriate to disabled and mentally handicapped pupils leaving special schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Current consultations with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities relate solely to the section on handicapped pupils leaving special schools. I hope that it will be possible to implement this provision, section 13 of the Act, later in the current financial year. As was made plain during the passage of the Bill through Parliament, the timing of implementation will depend on the availability of resources. Clearly, some of the provisions not yet commenced carry substantial implications for local authority services. I shall keep this matter under review, but I have no plans at present to consult the convention on a possible programme for commencing further provisions.

School Days (Duration)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information his Department has as to the average length of the school day in Scotland in (a) maintained schools and (b) independent schools in 1957, 1967, 1977 and 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The average length of day, excluding breaks, in 1984 in education authority primary schools was 5·01 hours and in education authority secondary schools was 5·48 hours. This information is not available centrally in respect of independent schools or education authority nursery and special schools for any years nor for education authority primary and secondary schools in the years requested.

Benefits

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to reimburse in full the payments made by local authorities under sections 12 and 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 where they were made because persons were denied their statutory benefit by reason of recent Department of Health and Social Security industrial action.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no statutory powers available to my right hon. and learned Friend for this purpose. Reimbursement at his hand had not been sought nor do I consider that it would be appropriate. The Convention of Scottish Local Authorities has, however, asked that its recent expenditure on this account should be disregarded for grant penalty purposes. My right hon. and learned Friend has undertaken to consider this request carefully and awaits further detailed information from the convention. Meanwhile, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services, has included in the Social Security Bill provisions enabling local authorities and other bodies to make payments on his behalf when social security payments are prevented in an emergency, and providing for reimbursement of the payments made together with reasonable administrative costs.

Abortions

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the numbers of abortions carried out in Scotland in the years 1980 to 1986 for the age groups under 16 years, 16 to 21 (or 18) years, and over 21 (or 18) years, by the length of gestation and in particular, between the 18th and 24th week, and 24th and 28th weeks, listing the reasons for abortion in the latter groups.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is set out in the tables:

5. To save life of pregnant woman.
6. To prevent permanent injury to physical or mental health of pregnant woman.

Hospital Building

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many private hospitals were built in Scotland during 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if all proposals for nuclear waste disposal sites in Scotland will be subject to a public inquiry.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Any proposal for the construction of a nuclear waste disposal facility in Scotland will be subject to a public inquiry. The procedures to be applied to proposals for preliminary investigations — for example, into the geological characteristics of a site—remain to be determined.

Health Boards

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what savings have accrued to each health board through efficiency schemes in each of the past three financial years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The savings achieved through efficiency schemes in 1985-86 and 1986-87, and the targets set for 1987-88, are as follows:

Health Board	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88

Lothian Health Board

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the revenue expenditure allocated to Lothian health board for 1987-88; and what was the comparable figure for 1986-87.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is set out in the table:

Year	£ million
1986-87	[1]234·4
1987-88	[2]251·5

[1] Board's final net revenue allocation; includes end-year adjustments to take account of a variety of factors such as the carry-forward of an underspend from the previous year.

[2] Board's provisional net return, subject to end-year adjustment.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average waiting time for National Health Service hospital beds for non-urgent operations in the Lothian health board area and Scotland respectively, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information distinguishing urgent and non-urgent cases is not held centrally. The mean waiting times (in days) for operative treatment in the Lothian health board area and Scotland up to 1985 (the latest year for which statistics are available) were as follows:—

Year	Mean waiting time (days) Lothian health board	Scotland
1979	92	86
1980	73	79
1981	64	76
1982	63	70
1983	88	101
1984	72	85
1985	66	76

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the number of people on hospital waiting lists in Scotland for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested, which relates to 30 September in each year, is as follows:

Year	Number
1979	71,247
1980	67,387
1981	65,228
1982	86,365

Health Authorities (Review)

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements have been or are being made to consult trades unions, local health councils and local authorities on the report of the Scottish health authorities review of priorities for the eighties and nineties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 26 October 1987, at columns 138-39, and to the hon. Member for Clydebank (Mr. Hood) on 28 October, at columns 329-30.

Ford Motor Company

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether any (a) financial and (b) other assistance was given to the Ford Motor Company to help with the establishment of its plant at Dundee.

Mr. Lang: Under the terms of the Government's regional policy the Ford Motor Company has accepted an offer of financial assistance. For reasons of commercial confidentiality, the amount is not made public at this stage but will be published in "British Business", normally in the first quarter after the first payment of grant has been made. Considerable non-financial assistance was given to the company in relation to such matters as finding suitable sites, arranging meetings with potential supplier companies and providing information about the business environment in Scotland.

Electricity Boards (Financial Targets)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has agreed a financial target for the Scottish electricity boards for 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I have agreed with the boards that they should achieve a current cost return on net assets of 2·8 per cent. for the financial year 1988-89. This compares with the target agreed for the current year of 2·7 per cent. It is for the boards to decide how the financial target will be met but I am confident that any electricity price increases in Scotland next year will be significantly lower than those forecast for the industry in England and Wales. This reflects the different circumstances of the industry in Scotland. For example, with the completion of Torness there will be no need for significant investment in new generating capacity for some time.

Open-Heart Surgery

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients from the City of Aberdeen and Grampian region each year since 1978 have been required to attend hospitals outside the area of Grampian health board for open-heart surgery; what has been the average waiting list for each quarter of the year; and what has been the average waiting time of patients awaiting such surgery.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 October 1987]: This information is available only from 1983 (when the cardiac surgery register was established), and for patients resident in the whole Grampian health board area. Information on this basis is set out in the table.

Nurse-Patient Ratios

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the nurse-to-patient ratio in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 October 1987]: A simple ratio of nurses to patients does not measure service provision because of the differing requirements of care and treatment in different sectors of hospital care and in different specialties and because the total workload in hospitals includes out-patients and day cases where it is impossible to relate numbers of attendances to individual patients treated. The whole-time equivalent number of qualified nurses employed in NHS hospitals in Scotland on 31 March 1987 was 28,713 and the number of in-patients, measured by the daily average number of occupied beds in the year ending on the same date, was 45,148. On that basis the nurse-to-patient ratio is 1:1·57.

Prevention of Crime Act

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of convictions in Scottish courts for contraventions of section 1 of the Prevention of Crime Act in the last three years for which such information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 November 1987]: The information requested is given in the table below:

Persons with a charge proved under Section 1 of Prevention of Crime Act 1953

1986	972

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Bidston Steel

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what payments were received by the Department of Trade and Industry, following the closure of Bidston Steel plant in 1985, from (a) Allied Steel and Wire and (b) the European Community fund, to enable former employees of Bidston Steel to embark on training courses;

(2) how many of those made redundant from Bidston Steel received their training benefit exclusively from the iron and steel employees readaptation benefit scheme; and how many received some or all their benefit from monies made available by Allied Steel and Wire.

Mr. Atkins: Twenty-three ex-Bidston steel workers have been approved for training exclusively under the normal iron and steel employees readaptation benefits scheme—(ISERBS)—cost-sharing arrangements between the Department of Trade and Industry and the European Commission. For the remaining 143 men, only training costs falling within the statutory ISERBS entitlement period were similarly funded. The Department has claimed from the European Commission half of the £1·2 million paid out. Most but not all of this sum has now been received.

In addition, costs of exceptionally providing training beyond entitlement periods, amounting to around £1 million (to end September 1987) have been paid by the Department of Trade and Industry. No contribution from the European Commission is anticipated but Allied Steel and Wire has agreed to pay up to £200,000 towards these costs.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many of those made redundant from Bidston Steel subsequently received training benefit; and for how many weeks in each case.

Mr. Atkins: One hundred and sixty-six ISERBS beneficiaries were approved for training. The number of weeks training in each case is as follows:

South Africa

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on Government policy on promoting the export of computer technology to South African companies and institutions.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government's policy is that within the limits of our international obligations and undertakings, the same assistance is provided to exporters of computer technology to South Africa as to other overseas markets.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on Government policy on the export of safety and security equipment to the South African Security Federation.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is the Government's policy that civil trade with South Africa should, within the limits of our international obligations and undertakings, be determined by the commercial judgments of those engaged in it.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if Her Majesty's Government have issued any guidelines on the advertisement of South African manufactured arms in British publications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: No.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what function the market report on computer technology published by his Department has in the encouragement of the sale of computers to South Africa.

Mr. Alan Clark: The aim of this report is to assist British exporters by providing factual information on recent developments and other market factors affecting the computer market in South Africa. Similar support for exporters is provided by my Department in many markets.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the implications of the sale of computer technology to the Council for Scientific and Industrial Research of South Africa by British firms for the implementation of United Nations Security Resolutions 418 and 558.

Mr. Alan Clark: We continue to abide by our international commitments on South Africa, including United Nations Security Council resolutions.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the British Government's policy regarding the export of Land Rovers to South Africa for use by the South African military and police.

Mr. Alan Clark: Military and paramilitary versions of the Land Rover are subject to export licensing. Any application to export such vehicles to South Africa would be likely to be refused. However, the basic Land Rover, which has a widespread civilian and commercial use in South Africa, can be freely exported. To prohibit their export would be unreasonable interference with normal civil trade with South Africa.

Airbus

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to how many European Airbus aircraft (stipulating each marque) have been sold to airlines operating from the United Kingdom; what has been the total cost of these aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: British Caledonian has ordered 10 A320s, which are due to be delivered starting next spring. The two Airbus A310 aircraft sold to British Caledonian in 1984 were resold last year because of reduced demand on certain routes. Three A300-B4s were sold to Laker Airways, and these aircraft were disposed of when the airline ceased to operate. The cost of all these aircraft is commercially confidential.

Condoms

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any information about the level of quality control involved in condom manufacture; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The level of quality control involved in condom manufacture in respect of products which bear the BSI Kitemark is that prescribed by BSI's certification arrangements. The manufacturers licensed to use the Kitemark are required to maintain quality systems complying with British Standard 5750.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the total amount of retail condom sales in each of the last 24 months in (a) cash value and (b) unit supply.

Mr. Butcher: I regret that this information is not available.

European Regional Development Fund

Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the northern region's percentage share of European regional development fund grants made to the United Kingdom so far during 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 9 November 1987]: The northern region's percentage share of ERDF grants made to the United Kingdom so far during 1987 is 0·7 per cent. The figure is, however, misleading, in that only about half this year's grants have so far been announced. Further grants for the northern region are expected. Grant decisions rest with the European Commission.

Venture Capital (Tax Incentives)

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consideration Her Majesty's Government have given to the introduction of tax incentives to encourage corporate venturing with a view to encouraging research and development and introducing further venture capital for innovation in British industry.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply.

The United Kingdom tax system already provides considerable support and incentive for research and development spending, particularly by way of the special scientific research allowances. Significant advances have also been made on the venture capital front by (1) the publication in May this year by the British Venture Capital Association of guidelines (which were prepared with the help of the Inland Revenue and DTI) on the use of limited partnerships for venture capital finance, and (2) the extension of the business expansion scheme to assist companies engaged in research and development.

The prime need now that industry is making record profits is for industry itself to make its own investment in the future by spending more on research and development. The cost effectiveness of tax reliefs in this area is at best uncertain. A joint Inland Revenue and Her Majesty's Treasury study of international fiscal incentives for R and D ("Fiscal Incentives for Research and Development") published on 20 July—a copy was placed in the Library—suggested that only about one half of tax revenues forgone by Governments under such schemes is actually spent by companies on additional R and D.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Waiting Lists

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing (a) the total average waiting time for National Health Service in-patient treatment in each specialty in England and Wales in each year since 1979 and (b) the average waiting time for all specialties in England and Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: The estimated median interval in weeks between the date an in-patient was placed on the waiting list and the date of admission for patients discharged in England since 1979 is given in the table. Reliable figures could not be produced for specialties having small numbers of patients. Comparable information for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mental Health

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much his Department spent on research into schizophrenia in each of the last five years; and what proportion each figure was of expenditure on the Health Service research programme.

Mrs. Currie: In addition to expenditure by the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science, the Department's expenditure on directly commissioned mental illness research over the last five years is as follows.

Year	Expenditure £000	Percentage of total budget[1]
1983-84	970	8·7
1984-85	942	8·9
1985-86	899	8·4
1986-87	1,005	8·1
1987-88[2]	890	6·6

[1] For directly commissioned health and personal social services research.

[2] So far planned.

Family Credit

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how much it would cost to use the family credit system to ensure that no family man returning to work pays a marginal rate of tax and benefit withdrawal in excess of 50 per cent.;

(2) what would be the cost in a full year if family credit were improved so that no family man taking up a job were to incur a tax and benefit withdrawal rate of more than 40 per cent.

Mr. Scott: To achieve these withdrawal rates it would be necessary to reduce the family credit taper to the point where a combination of tax, national insurance contributions and withdrawal of benefit produced the specific overall marginal tax rates. Overall, MTRs of either 40 or 50 per cent. would imply family credit taper rates which were so low that the coverage of family credit would be extended to include families with incomes subject to the higher income tax rates and therefore to withdrawal rates of more than the 40 or 50 per cent. from tax alone. It would also be necessary to increase the rates of credit to a point where, at the lowest levels of income, no recipient of family credit was also eligible for housing benefit. These increases would extend the coverage of family credit to even more families on higher incomes and already subject to higher rates of tax.

Income Support

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the current value of the illustrative rates of income support personal allowances in the technical annex to the White Paper "Reform of Social Security", uprated in line with increases in the retail price index less housing costs between May 1985 and September 1987 and adding the proposed compensation for the minimum contribution to domestic rates, together with the rates proposed for April 1988.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 30 October 1987, at columns 467-68.

Mobility and Attendance Allowances

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications for mobility allowance and attendance allowance have been made in the Easington constituency in 1985-86 and how many have been rejected; what was the average time of determination of such applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I regret that this information is not available.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current day-to-day bed capacity of hospitals in the whole of the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Currie: I am sorry that I cannot give the hon. Member all the information he seeks in precisely the form requested. The average daily number of available beds in National Health Service hospitals in England during 1986 was 315,714. Figures for the rest of the United Kingdom are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Northern Ireland.

Alcoholism

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in view of the rise in alcoholism amongst young people, he will consider placing (a) a ban on the advertising of alcohol at sporting events and places of public entertainment and (b) a Government health warning on all advertisements for alcohol and alcohol-related products.

Mrs. Currie: The question of young people and alcohol and the factors which might influence their drinking habits are to be discussed by the ministerial group on alcohol misuse. At its first meeting on 3 November the group agreed that the reported level of drinking among young people was a matter for concern and should be addressed as a priority.

We await the outcome of the group's deliberations.

Doctors (Working Hours)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will instruct health authorities to place limits on the number of hours per day that doctors in the National Health Service can work, and to employ more doctors, so as to eliminate excessive and dangerous overtime working.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Members for Southport (Mr. Fearn) and for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith) on 3 November, at column 706.

Abortion

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) pursuant to his replies of 2 November, Official Report, column 567, why information is not collected about the percentage of women referred for abortions by abortion agencies;

(2) pursuant to his replies of 2 November, Official Report, column 567, why information is not collected centrally about the numbers of women dealt with by abortion advisory bureaux.

Mrs. Currie: We see no need to do so. The conditions already imposed on the private abortion sector are sufficient to ensure that abortions are performed in accordance with existing legislation. To collect the information requested would not add to these controls.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his replies of 2 November, Official Report, column 567, why no information is collected about the total revenue from abortions upon foreign women.

Mrs. Currie: We see no need to do so. This information is a matter for the management of the hospital or clinic where the abortion is carried out.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total number of non-National Health Service abortions performed in England under the Abortion Act 1967, and what was the total number of abortions performed in non-National Health Service facilities in England in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the full information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, my hon. Friend may be interested in the table, which shows readily available figures.

Number of notifications of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 in non-NHS premises in England 1974-86

Year	Number
1974	107,258
1975	88,696
1976	77,858
1977	80,801
1978	86,779
1979	92,376
1980	102,663
1981	101,203
1982	100,462
1983	99,264
1984	104,970
1985	106,510
1986	104,646

Figures prior to 1981 are based on notifications received; from 1981 onwards the figures are based on occurrences.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of beds in private clinics currently licensed for abortions in England.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 26 October, at columns 170-75.

Condoms (Disposal)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what advice his Department gives as part of its anti-AIDS campaign on the disposal of used condoms;

(2) what research has been undertaken by his Department into the health risks posed by different methods of disposal of condoms.

Mrs. Currie: The Department has issued no specific guidance nor sponsored research on the disposal of condoms. We are represented on the British Standards Institute Committee currently reviewing the standard for condoms (BS 3704), which will be considering manufacturers' instructions to users.

Benefits

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has made of the change in the number of people entitled to means-tested benefits in consequence of the introduction of the proposed community charge; and what would be the number of their dependants.

Mr. Scott: Figure J9 of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) estimated that the housing benefit caseload in Great Britain would rise from 6·49 million to 7·66 million when the community charge was fully in place. These estimates are derived from a computer model and are sensitive to assumptions made about community charge levels and to income support rates, and therefore give a broad indication only of the possible outcome. No estimate has been made of the number of their dependants.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in Coventry are currently in receipt of (a) supplementary benefit, (b) invalidity benefit, (c) housing benefit, (d) sickness benefit, (e) mobility allowance and (f) maternity benefit; and how many people have received single payments in each month of the current financial year.

Mr. Portillo: Social security benefits for Coventry are dealt with by the Department's local offices at Coventry (East) and Coventry (West), but their boundaries are not conterminous with the city.

The number of people receiving supplementary benefit, sickness and invalidity benefits, and maternity benefit on the latest dates for which information is available is as follows:

	25 August 1987	20 October 1987
Supplementary Benefit[1]	41,328	—
Sickness and Invalidity Benefit	—	6,822
Maternity Benefit	—	87

[1] Source: 100 per cent. of cases in action.

Information about housing benefit is not available in the precise form requested. In the current financial year the provisional figure for rate rebate recipients is 46,094. This figure is the normal pointer used for housing benefit recipients.

During the current financial year until 20 October 1987 the number of single payment decisions which resulted in either a full or part payment is as follows:

Four-week period ending:

	Number
5 May 1987	1,074
26 June 1987	1,565
30 June 1987	1,416
28 July 1987	1,698
25 August 1987	1,610
22 September 1987	1,474
20 October 1987	1,859

I regret that information about mobility allowance is not available.

Renal Dialysis Patients

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what changes he plans in the disability premium in order to improve the living standards of renal dialysis patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 2 November, at columns 564-65.

Guardians ad Litem

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is prepared to provide extra funding for guardians ad litem in view of the representations made by the consortium of Bradford, Leeds and Calderdale authorities.

Mrs. Currie: The extra cost for local authorities of establishing the guardian ad litem service was taken into account in the rate support grant settlement for the year after the scheme was introduced. I am considering a letter from the chairman of Bradford metropolitan council's social services committee, and I shall send the hon. Member a copy of my reply.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to extend the period for which a person can be disqualified from receiving unemployment benefit on account of voluntary unemployment.

Mr. Scott: At present, section 20 of the Social Security Act 1975 provides that a person is to be disqualified for receiving unemployment benefit for a maximum of 13 weeks in various circumstances that fall broadly under the heading of voluntary unemployment. If the person receives supplementary benefit it is reduced, normally by 40 per cent. of the claimant's personal benefit rate, for the same period.

A main purpose of these sanctions is to discourage people from leaving jobs voluntarily without just cause. However, over the nine months from October 1986, when the maximum disqualification period was increased from six to 13 weeks, the number of claims from people leaving work for this reason has increased at a time when, thanks to falling unemployment and the strengthening economy, the total number of claims from unemployed people has significantly reduced. We therefore intend to extend the maximum period from 13 to 26 weeks from 11 April 1988—the date of introduction of income support. We shall be introducing an affirmative order and regulations to give effect to this change.

Multiple Births

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of sets of (a) twins, (b) triplets, (c) quadruplets, (d) quintuplets and (e) sextuplets born in England and Wales in each year since 1982; and what was the total number of maternities in each of these years.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 9 November 1987]: The information requested is contained in the table.

Numbers of multiple maternities and rate per 1000 maternities: England and Wales 1982 to 1986.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Personal Incomes

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many tax units he estimates to have been in the income ranges £10,000–£15,000, £15,000–£20,000, £20,000–£25,000, £25,000–£30,000, £30,000–£40,000, and over £40,000; and what was the total amount of income from the units in each range, for (a) 1978-79, (b) 1982-83 and (c) the latest available year.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information is given in the table. The data for 1978-79 and 1982-83 are from the surveys of personal incomes of these years. The information for 1987-88 shows the latest available estimates based on a projection from the 1984-85 survey of personal incomes and is therefore provisional.

Tax Returns

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will immediately set up a special division to inspect the tax returns of all people earning over £50,000 per annum between 1979 and 1986.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No. These tax returns have already been — or will be — subject to scrutiny by the Inland Revenue under its normal procedures.

Rating Reform

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the poll tax payments by employers in respect of employees in tied accommodation will be treated as taxable income to the employee.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 9 November 1987]: It is intended that the community charge will — unlike rates — be a personal liability not related to the tied accommodation. If an employer pays the charge on behalf of an employee a benefit chargeable to income tax will arise for the employee whether or not he, or she, is living in tied accommodation.

Research Specialists

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total number of operational research specialists in his Department, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 4 November 1987]: The figures for scientific staff employed as operational research specialists in my Department since 1979 are given in the table. The increase in 1982 resulted fom the transfer of certain functions and staff from the Civil Service Department. The reduction in 1985 was due to some staff in CCTA being reclassified as administrators.

[2] Decrease in numbers due to re-classification of specialists to administration grades in CCTA. Scientific staff in CCTA are primarily engaged on computing work.

Close Companies

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to amend the apportionment of profit provisions in schedule 16 to the Finance Act 1972; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 9 November 1987]: I have noted my hon. Friend's suggestion.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was generated in each of the last three years by the application of the apportionment of profit provisions in schedule 16 to the Finance Act 1972.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 9 November 1987]: The figures in respect of close company income are as follows:

1984-85	[1]11·9
1986-87	5·2

[1] Includes an estimate for part of the year as records of the tax receipts are available only from September 1984.

BP Share Issue

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total cost of the banner unveiling outside the London headquarters of BP carried out by Royal Marines on 15 October.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 2 November 1987]: The cost to the Government was about £65,000.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether bed-and-breakfasted part-paid BP shares sold or bed and breakfasted to establish tax loss positions will be eligible for repurchase by the Bank of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 9 November 1987]: Yes; the tax position of holders of BP partly-paid shares is not a relevant factor in respect of the bank's scheme.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action will be taken against small applicants of BP shares who cancel their cheques or withdraw their application: and who is responsible for taking action against those who refuse to pay the full price.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 9 November 1987]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer to an earlier question I gave him on 9 November.

European Commission (Supply Contracts)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on the European Commission's proposals concerning public supply contracts.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 9 November 1987]: The Government welcome the common position adopted by the Internal Market Council on 5 October on the Commission's proposal to amend the EC supplies directives. The common position is consistent with our policy of seeking value for money in the public sector and with our support for opening up the EC internal market to improve opportunities for United Kingdom firms. Under the Single European Act, the European Parliament now has an opportunity to consider the common position.

We also welcome the Commission's intention to improve compliance with the supplies and works directives but have difficulties with parts of the proposal on compliance which it has submitted to the Council, and which the European Parliament is now considering.

Income Tax

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue would be lost if there were no income tax rate higher than 40 per cent., with the current bands, calculating the full year impact on revenue and allowing for any administrative savings.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The direct revenue cost of abolishing rates of income tax higher than 40 per cent. would be £1,650 million in a full year at forecast 1988-89 levels of income. The cost assumes indexation of the current income tax bands and allowances to 1988-89 levels as in table 4.1 of the 1987 Autumn Statement. The estimate of revenue cost makes no allowance for possible changes in taxpayers' behaviour. Administrative savings would be negligible.

National Budget Deficits

Mr. Forth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give, for the years 1980 to date, the national budget deficit as a percentage of the gross national product, for the United Kingdom; and what equivalent information he has in relation to the United States of America, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and Japan.

Mr. Lilley: The information requested is set out in the table.

General Government Financial Balances
Surplus (+) or deficit (−) as a percentage of GNP

United States	−1·3	−1·0	−3·5	−3·8	−2·8	−3·3	−3·5
Japan	−4·4	−3·8	−3·6	−3·7	−2·1	−0·8	−0·9
Germany	−2·9	−3·7	−3·3	−2·5	−1·9	−1·1	−1·2
France	+0·2	−1·8	−2·8	−3·2	−2·7	−2·9	−3·0

Source: OECD.

Notes:

1. General Government covers central and local government but not public enterprises.
2. The Federal deficit, the more familiar concept for the United States, is higher (at 5 per cent. of GNP in 1986) than the general Government deficit because most of the individual states run surpluses on their own budgets. The PSBR, the main familiar concept for the United Kingdom, is lower (at 0·6 per cent. of GDP in 1986) than the general Government financial deficit, partly because of asset sales.
3. The figures are calculated on a standardised national accounts basis for Japan, Germany and France and on national definitions for the United States and United Kingdom.
4. Percentage of GDP (at market prices) for France and United Kingdom.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy that none of the funds or moneys under the control, management or ownership of the Bank of England will be used to purchase any equity share capital in Eurotunnel or any other company involved in building the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Peter Lilley: There is no intention of using Bank of England Issue Department funds in this way. The deployment of funds controlled, managed or owned by the banking department is a matter for the Bank of England.

DEFENCE

Departmental Property

2. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide greater opportunity for people living in his Department's property to purchase their houses.

Mr. Freeman: Vacant service married quarters for which there is no further Defence use and which are suitable for individual sale are offered to service personnel under a discounted sales scheme. It is Ministry of Defence policy to offer civilian houses which are surplus to Defence requirements for sale to sitting tenants and licensees also at a discount.

Minesweepers

3. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many minesweepers or mine counter-measure vessels are immediately available for service within British territorial waters.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There are currently 40 mine counter measures vessels, including minesweepers, in service with the Fleet of which 33 are operational or engaged in preparing for service or trials or training. Except for the four Hunt class MCMVs attached to the Armilla patrol, all these 33 vessels are available for NATO and national tasks within European waters in the normal way.

17. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress on the modernisation of the United Kingdom's mining and mine counter-measure capabilities.

Mr. Sainsbury: Since May 1979 the Government had carried out a comprehensive modernisation of the United Kingdom's mine counter-measures capability. We have ordered eight Hunt-class dual-role MCMVs, an entire new class of 12 River-class minesweepers, and five of the new Sandown-class single-role minehunters. We also retain a defensive mining capability.

Persian Gulf

14. Mr. Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with the arrangements for co-operation between the Royal Navy and other Western navies in the Gulf.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Satisfactory arrangements have been developed, both locally and between capitals, for co-operation. Although the Royal Navy's Armilla patrol remains a wholly national operation, the United Kingdom is committed to close co-ordination with other Western navies also working to preserve international freedom of navigation on Gulf waters.

31. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Royal Navy's mineclearing operations in the Gulf.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Four Royal Navy mine counter-measures vessels with afloat support arrived in the Gulf area in mid-September. They have carried out mine clearance operations at Fujairah, where they detected and destroyed five mines, and off Dubai. They are currently involved in a further mine clearance operation off Qatar.

34. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the number of British units and ships currently serving in the Gulf area and their length of service there to date.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is not our general policy to give details of the operational deployments of Royal Navy ships. However, I can say that there are currently three destroyers-frigates, four mine counter-measures vessels and their afloat support in the area of the Gulf. Royal Navy ships have been serving in the area as part of the Armilla patrol since 1980; the MCMVs supporting the patrol arrived in the area in mid-September. Although there are no British military units currently in the Gulf area, a number of loan service personnel are serving in various countries in the region.

Type 23 Frigates

15. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place orders for the next four type 23 frigates.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, announced on 6 October that we were inviting tenders for up to four more follow-on type 23 frigates. Decisions will be taken on the precise timing and numbers to be ordered after tenders have been received, evaluated and clarified.

Ammunition Stocks

16. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to alter the level of army ammunition stocks.

Mr. Freeman: Army ammunition stock levels are kept under regular review. A review of ammunition usage rates in war and required war stocks is in progress which may eventually result in some changes to stock levels. Specific information on stock levels is classified.

HMS Victorious

18. Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many jobs will be created by the placing of an order for HMS Victorious.

Mr. Sainsbury: At its peak, work on HMS Victorious, the second Trident submarine, is estimated to provide jobs for about 3,000 people at VSEL in Barrow, and about 2,000 elsewhere in the United Kingdom.

Defence Missile Systems

19. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his Department is doing to provide point defence missile systems to protect all Royal Navy ships against anti-ship missile attacks.

Mr. Sainsbury: Seawolf and its variants is our principal point defence missile system and is entering service in increasing numbers. We are fitting conventional launch Seawolf to type 22 frigates and plan to fit vertical launch Seawolf to the type 23 frigates and AOR.

In addition to keeping under review the possibility of improvements and modifications, we are currently considering a lightweight version.

RAF (Plane Crashes)

20. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the number of Royal Air Force planes which have crashed in routine exercises since 1979 and their total value.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1 January 1979, 163 Royal Air Force fixed-wing aircraft have suffered irreparable damage in accidents in the course of routine operations. The purchase cost of all these aircraft was £420 million. To replace those aircraft which are still in production with similar models (that is to say Tornado, Harrier and Hawk) would cost approximately £500 million at current prices.

41. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of military aircraft accidents have occurred in Wales.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1 January 1979, 9 per cent. of the military aircraft losses in accidents in the United Kingdom and surrounding waters have occurred in Wales.

51. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will indicate the number of aircraft and airmen lost in low-flying training exercises in each of the last three years for which figures are available; and if will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The table sets out the numbers of personnel killed, and aircraft lost, from 1 January 1985 to date during Royal Air Force fast jet operations involving low flying in the United Kingdom and surrounding waters:

	Aircraft	Fatalities
1985	3	3
1986	2	[1]1
[2]1987	9	[3]8

[1] USAF Pilot.
[2] To 5 November.
[3] Includes one USN pilot.

European Fighter Aircraft

21. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning progress with the European fighter aircraft.

53. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his latest proposals for investment into and the research and development of the Eurofighter project.

Mr. Sainsbury: Project definition was successfully completed last year and we are now in a definition refinement and risk reduction phase with activities aimed at stabilising the design of the aircraft and identifying high risk activities. Parallel negotiations on commercial issues are progressing between the prime contractors and NEFMA, the international management agency. Action is in hand to secure agreement from the individual national authorities to launch development. The United Kingdom aims to have completed this process by the end of the year and, subject to a satisfactory conclusion here and in our partner countries, we expect to begin development work early in 1988.

35. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will be in a position to place an order for the radar system for the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Sainsbury: Eurofighter is currently running a competitive tendering exercise on behalf of the four EFA nations. Given the difficult task of assessing the information associated with the competition, I would not expect a decision to be made until early spring next year.

Staff Dispersal

22. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to move defence establishments to the northern region.

27. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any proposals to disperse to the Cleveland area sections or departments of his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: As has been stated in the House on several occasions, we are keen to see a more even spread of defence employment across the regions. The scope for further relocation of defence establishments is currently the subject of several studies. However, all proposals must be justified on both economic and operational grounds.

Nuclear Weapons

23. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the military implications of prospects for reduction in the number of nuclear weapons in Europe.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The security of this country and that of its allies will continue to depend for the foreseeable future on the policy of deterrence based on a balanced mix of nuclear and conventional forces. We are confident that NATO's strategy of flexible response can continue to be implemented after the conclusion of the INF agreement now in prospect, an agreement which we fully support.

Procurement Procedure

24. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to review regional variations in defence procurement expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is our policy to place equipment orders, wherever practicable, by competitive tendering. This policy has brought significant benefit to the defence budget and to the taxpayer and has promoted the health and efficiency of the defence industry. Where appropriate, however, we do take into account wider, relevant factors, including local employment levels.

Battle Tanks

25. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place orders for more main battle tanks.

Mr. Sainsbury: Current production orders provide for tanks for the 5th, 6th and 7th Challenger regiments. British Army tank requirements thereafter are currently under review.

Harrier Aircraft (Loss)

26. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what conclusions he has come to in relation to the loss of a Harrier jump jet over southern England three weeks ago.

Mr. Freeman: A board of inquiry was convened on 24 October but no firm conclusions have yet been reached as to the cause of the accident. A marine salvage operation to recover the aircraft from the Atlantic is being attempted.

Low-flying Aircraft

28. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received regarding low flying over East Anglia.

Mr. Freeman: Between 1 September and 31 October 1987 the Ministry of Defence received some 75 inquiries or complaints about military low flying from the East Anglian area. This compares with some 70 for the same period in 1986.

30. Mr. James Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made of the ability of AEW Shackleton to detect fast low-flying Soviet aircraft.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The airborne early warning Shackleton aircraft of No. 8 Squadron at RAF Lossiemouth continue to contribute a useful capability to detect low-flying targets as part of the United Kingdom's overall air defence system. Our decision to purchase Boeing E-3 AWACS will ensure that the Royal Air Force has a modern and effective airborne early warning system for the 1990s.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations he has received in the current year concerning low-flying aircraft over Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations he has received on low flying in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Between 1 January and 31 October 1987 the Ministry of Defence has received 709 inquiries or complaints from Wales about military aircraft flying, compared with a total of 733 for the whole of 1986. We will continue to do all we can to ensure that the disturbance caused by this essential training is kept to an absolute minimum.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, in accordance with the Government's policy of avoiding large built-up areas when carrying out low-flying training, a decision has been reached in respect of the application of that policy regarding the new residential developments of Hardwicke and Quedgeley.

Mr. Freeman: A decision has not yet been reached. I hope to write to the hon. Member shortly.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying flights by the Royal Air Force have taken place over Clwyd in 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Low-flying administrative areas do not correspond with regional boundaries, and figures for Clwyd are therefore not available. However, the principality of Wales sees approximately 9 per cent. of all low-flying activity and we will continue to do all we can to ensure that the disturbances caused by this essential training is kept to an absolute minimum.

Auxiliary Oiler Replenishment Vessel

29. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the procurement of the auxiliary oiler replenishment vessel.

Mr. Sainsbury: The first of class AOR is currently under construction at Harland and Wolff and a revised tender for the second was received yesterday from Swan Hunter Shipbuilders.

Amphibious Vessels

32. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce the results of his feasibility study on amphibious vessels.

Mr. Sainsbury: Three parallel feasibility studies into the option of replacing the assault ships Fearless and Intrepid are due to complete in autumn 1988. These would then be considered alongside the earlier feasibility study into extending the lives of these ships. I would not expect to make further announcements on the way ahead before 1989.

NATO Nuclear Forces

33. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any decisions on the modernisation of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation nuclear capable forces which affect the United Kingdom have yet been taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No, apart from the decision to modernise our independent strategic nuclear deterrent with Trident.

Army Boots

36. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how long the current issue Army boot has been part of standard army equipment.

Mr. Freeman: The current issue army combat boot was introduced into service in May 1982 and initial issues to all regular and TA soldiers were completed by January 1985.

Civilian Jobs

37. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilian jobs have been lost as a result of the contractorisation of defence services.

Mr. Sainsbury: Between 1 April 1979 and 31 March 1987, the number of United Kingdom-based civilians employed by the Department fell by 9,101 as a result of work transferred to contract. It is not possible to determine the extent of any job losses, as the number of staff employed to perform tasks which have been contracted-out is a matter for individual contractors to decide.

Defence Contracts

38. Mr. Mates: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportions of defence contracts are placed on a cost-plus basis.

Mr. Sainsbury: In 1986-87, some 6 per cent., by value, of contracts were placed on the basis of cost plus percentage fee for profit. The proportion has declined from 22 per cent. in 1980-81 and reflects the aim of introducing cost incentives into defence non-competitive contracts.

45. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will consider compensation for Mr. Don Pitman, Mr. Jim Smith and Mr. Burgess Cooper for whistle-blowing on excessive profits on defence contracts.

Mr. Sainsbury: The cases referred to have been carefully considered by my Department and compensation would not be appropriate. My noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement wrote to the hon. Member on 4 November 1986 explaining the background in some detail.

Helicopters

39. Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of helicopter procurement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Helicopters to meet the established needs of the armed services will continue to be procured in accordance with our policy of obtaining value for money in defence equipment expenditure.

Cruise Missiles

40. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans for the deployment of British or United States submarines carrying cruise missiles in British waters.

52. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he now has any plans to deploy sea-based cruise missiles in United Kingdom territorial waters.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No decisions have been taken with regard to matters currently under consideration within NATO in respect of possible nuclear force adjustments.

Norwegian Sea

42. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning Royal Navy activity in the Norwegian sea.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to paragraphs 404 and 405 of volume 1 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1987" (Cm. 101-I). It is not our general practice to give details of the operational deployment of Royal Navy surface ships and submarines.

Youth Training Scheme

43. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give figures for the number of men and women undertaking the armed services youth training scheme during the last three years.

Mr. Freeman: The total number of men and women who have enetered the armed services youth training scheme in each of the last three financial years is as follows:

	Number
1984-85	730
1985-86	1,012
1986-87	743

A further 289 men and women had taken up places by 30 September this year.

Trident

44. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the total procurement cost of the Trident system.

Mr. Sainsbury: As announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, on 27 January this year, the current estimate for the procurement of Trident is £9,265 million at 1986-87 prices and $1·50 = £1.

East/West German Borders

46. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last visited the military installations connected with the East/West German borders.

Mr. Younger: I have paid a number of visits to various elements of British forces in Germany, most recently in October this year.

Armilla Patrol

47. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many merchant ships the Royal Navy's Armilla patrol has accompanied through the Straits of Hormuz since the start of the current year.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Up to the beginning of this month, the Armilla patrol has accompanied approximately 300 British merchant ships through the Straits of Hormuz this year.

Strategic Defence Initiative

48. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on British participation in star wars research.

Mr. Sainsbury: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) on 6 November.

Royal Navy

49. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total value of investment in ships currently on order for the Royal Navy.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are currently 20 major ships and nine submarines in various stages of construction, representing a total investment of about £4·5 billion at 1986-87 price levels. These include the Hunt class mine-countermeasures vessel HMS Berkeley and the Royal Fleet Auxiliary Sir Galahad scheduled for acceptance later this month.

55. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the ordering pattern of surface vessels for the Royal Navy.

Mr. Sainsbury: Decisions on future orders will be taken when appropriate.

USSR

50. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimates his Department has made of Soviet military equipment production.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Soviet Union does not publish figures for its production of military equipment. My Department therefore needs to make its own estimates. Such estimates are, of course, extremely difficult to make and are subject to revision as and when new information becomes available.

Preliminary estimates, by major equipment categories, for 1986 include the following:

	Number
Main battle tanks	3,500
Artillery	3,200
Fighter aircraft	700
Bombers	45
Helicopters	625
Transport aircraft	180
Major surface ships	6
Submarines	8

Rating Reform

54. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements he intends to introduce to compensate service men stationed in Scotland who will be required to pay the community charge from 1989 while service men stationed elsewhere in the United Kingdom will not.

Mr. Freeman: I am currently considering the implications of the community charge for British service personnel, not only in Scotland, but in England and Wales.

Service personnel who own their own homes or live in private or municipal rented accommodation will be in the same position as all other citizens liable for the community charge. The position of those living in service accommodation in Scotland and elsewhere is more complicated. The charges they pay for accommodation include an element for domestic rates. I am considering what changes need to be made to these charges in the light of the new system.

Shackleton and Nimrod Aircraft

56. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Shackleton and Nimrod aircraft are operational; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to annex D of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1987" (Cm. 101-I). It is not our practice to reveal details of numbers of operational aircraft.

Stand-off Bomber

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the potential nuclear capacity of the stand-off bomber.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The term "stand-off" applies not to aircraft but to weapon systems. The capability of "stand-off" weapon systems varies.

Nuclear Accident Exercises

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what information is given to local residents when top soil, taken from an area where there was a nuclear accident response exercise, is deposited in the vicinity; and what tests are made of the radioactive level of the soil;

(2) if he will invite representatives of local residents to inspect sites where nuclear accident response exercises are carried out; and if he will give them the opportunity to be told of the safety measures taken.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) on 4 November, at column 748. In view of the stringent precautions taken, I see no valid reason for the suggested inspection of locations where nuclear accident response exercises take place.

Rainfall

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the amount of rainfall in the catchment areas of (a) the Foyle-Mourne system, (b) the River Faughan, (c) the River Roe, (d) the River Agivey, (e) the River Moyola on 21 October; and how this compares with the widespread rainfalls in the same areas and falling in the same time scale in recent years.

Mr. Sainsbury: October daily rainfall returns from the 250 or so voluntary co-operating observers in Northern Ireland are still being processed and validated. From observations so far to hand for 21 October, it appears that for the Foyle/Mourne river system the daily totals were the highest since at least 1911, although falls of comparable magnitude occurred in 1970 and in 1954. For the Faughan basin, comparable rainfalls occurred in 1968 and 1970. For the River Roe, this was the highest daily fall since at least 1931. For the River Agivey, it was the highest total since 1961, although there was a comparable storm in 1952 and a much heavier fall (although probably more localised) in 1960. The River Moyola had a substantially wetter day in 1969 and another (although probably more localised in extent) in 1970.

Dortmund Tank Depot

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to reduce disturbance caused to those living near the Dortmund tank depot in West Germany by groups of tanks driving to a practice field; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: There is no tank depot in Dortmund, nor are tanks based there. If the hon. Member could provide more details, I would be happy to investigate.

Aero-engines (Repair)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make it his policy that all suitable firms will be allowed to tender for the contract for the repair of aero-engines by plasma spray techniques, to be carried out at St. Athans, South Glamorgan.

Mr. Freeman: The vast majority of engine repair work directed to Royal Air Force St. Athan is undertaken within the station by Royal Air Force personnel and MOD civilians. Only where St. Athan is unable to provide a particular process is the work passed out to industry. St. Athan already possesses plant for areo-engine component repair using plasma spray techniques. Should it be necessary, however, for plasma spray work to be contracted out to industry in the future, our policy of seeking competition wherever it is practical and sensible to do so will continue to apply.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Terrorism

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the names of employees of local authorities, boards and civil servants who have been murdered by Irish Republican Army terrorists since 1968.

Mr. Stanley: I regret that this information cannot be provided without incurring disproportionate costs.

Government Offices (Relocation)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if it is his intention to review the location of central Government offices in Northern Ireland with the objective of the relocation of such offices in a decentralised manner.

Mr. Stanley: Policy on the location of Government accommodation in Northern Ireland is under review at present. This review is considering the most appropriate siting of Government offices in the Province taking account of the need to locate them where they can provide public services in an efficient and effective manner.

Anglo-Irish Conference

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the present members of the secretariat of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference.

Mr. Tom King: No.

RUC Stations

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) when work ceased on the new Royal Ulster Constabulary station for the Waterside, Londonderry; what was the original completion date; when he expects work to restart; and what is now his projected completion date;

(2) when the site for the Royal Ulster Constabulary station at Shantallow, Londonderry, was first identified; when a second site was identified; when work on the Shantallow station was to begin and what progress has been made towards construction; and when he expects construction to begin and to be completed.

Mr. Stanley: Work on the new Royal Ulster Constabulary station at Lisnagelvin, Waterside, Londonderry, ceased in June 1985. The original completion date for the new station was August 1987.

The original site for the RUC station at Shantallow was identified in 1981 and the second site in September 1985.

It would not be in the public interest to give details of future plans for these sites.

Owen Carron

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether an application for the extradition of Owen Carron from the Republic of Ireland has been made.

Mr. Stanley: It is not the practice to give details of possible individual extradition cases.

Rating Reform

Mr. John David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to change the present rating system in Northern Ireland; whether the community charge basis for funding local government is being introduced into Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 2 November 1987, at column 617.

Salmon and Grilse (River Faughan)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of salmon and grilse passing through the fish counter on the river Faughan in each of the months of July, August, September and October in the years 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Viggers: The information is as follows:

Year	July	August	September	October
1983	282	146	840	721
1984	332	151	915	200
1985	3,660	611	203	122
1986	678	2,547	63	464
1987	460	166	125	14

Income-related Benefits

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will publish in the Official Report a table containing for Northern Ireland the information presented in table 7B of "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income-related Benefits", published by the Department of Health and Social Security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer, 2 November 1987]: Corresponding information is not held for Northern Ireland. However, the impact of the reform on individual claimants will be broadly the same as in Great Britain, with more help generally going to families.

Home-help Service

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of plans made by the Department of Health and Social Security to privatise the home help service in the constituency of Newry and Armagh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer, 2 November 1987]: The Department of Health and Social Services has no plans to privatise the home help service.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost, adjusted to take inflation into account, of the home help care service in Northern Ireland for each of the years 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986 respectively.

Mr. Needham [holding answer, 2 November 1987]: The information is as follows:

1983-84	18,495,747
1984-85	18,133,254
1985-86	18,825,180
1986-87	[2]18,292,869

[1] At 1985-86 prices.

[2] Provisional.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of contracts agreed by each health and social service board for the following services (a) ambulances, (b) gardening, (c) laboratories, (d) portering, (e) shops in hospitals, (f) window cleaning, (g) pharmacy and (h) telephones; and if he will give the estimated annual savings in each case.

Mr. Needham [holding answer, 6 November 1987]: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the latest figures as a percentage of services put out to tender by each health and social service board for (a) catering, (b) domestic services, and (c) laundry; and if he will give the estimated annual savings.

Mr. Needham [holding answer, 6 November 1987]: To date Northern Ireland health and social services boards have been unable to proceed to tender stage in any tests of catering, laundry or domestic services because of insufficient interest from private sector companies.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 12 November 1987

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mr. Duncan Campbell

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Linlithgow on 9 November, if he will define the short-cuts to which he referred which render it inappropriate to take a decision on the prosecution of Duncan Campbell.

The Attorney-General: It would not be appropriate to reach a decision in this matter until all the necessary police inquiries have been fully completed; until the evidence has been carefully considered by the Director of Public Prosecutions, by senior Treasury counsel and by myself; and until I have satisfied myself as to what the public interest requires.

Action for Account of Profits

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General what criteria are used in deciding whether to bring an action for account of profits against an author or publisher alleged to be in breach of a duty of confidence owed to the Crown; and on how many occasions such an action has been brought since 1979.

The Attorney-General: The Crown will claim the remedy of an account of profits in a breach of confidence action whenever appropriate to ensure that the defendant does not profit from his breach. Such a claim has been brought in six cases since 1979, injunctions also being sought.

PRIME MINISTER

EC Budget

Q14. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she intends to submit any specific proposals to the December meeting of the European Council on the budget problems facing the EEC; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 5 November, at column 804.

South Africa

Q23. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit South Africa.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Civil Servants

Q50. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister how many civil servants were employed in, and what was the cost of, No. 10 Downing street in October 1979, October 1983 and October 1987.

The Prime Minister: Sixty-three civil servants were employed in No. 10 Downing street at each of these dates[1].

The cost of No. 10 Downing street in these years is[2]:

1979-80	1,409,101
1983-84	3,026,042
[4]1987-88	4,971,255

[2] Salaries and wages, notional pension liability and administration costs and the grant-in-aid to the Chequers Trust are included. The costs of office services attributed to 10 Downing street are included for 1987-88. My salary as Prime Minister is excluded.

[3] These costs are not on a consistent basis. I therefore refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 23 February, at colums 53-54 for an explanation of the changes in the calculation of the costs of No. 10 since 1979.

[4] Estimate.

Stoneleigh

Q72. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make a special visit to Stoneleigh.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Brighton

Q78. Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to visit Brighton.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Disabled Persons

Q80. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her reply of 22 October, Official Report column 920, she is in a position to indicate specifically when Her Majesty's Government intend to implement those sections of the Disabled Persons (Services, Representation and Consultation) Act 1986 which would assist in assessements for people who have been discharged from hospital and who have been receiving treatment for six months or more for a mental health problem or mental handicap.

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and the Disabled announced in his reply to the hon. Member on 4 November, at column 783, plans for the implementation of sections 5 and 6 of this Act, following a meeting with the local authority associations last month. At that meeting discussions began on the implementation of section 7, which deals with assessments for people who have been discharged from hospital. Implementation of that section must await satisfactory conclusion of these discussions.

MI5 (Counsellor)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister whether the post of counsellor to MI5 was advertised; whether it was subject to competitive tendering by consultants; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No.

Regional Aid

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Prime Minister what is the allocation to (a) regional development grants and (b) regional selective assistance for England, Wales and Scotland for each year from 1988 onwards.

The Prime Minister: Information on the allocation of the amounts provided for regional assistance in England, Wales and Scotland for the three years 1988-89 to 1990-91 will as usual be included in the public expenditure White Paper to be published in January.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on co-ordination between the Scottish Office and the Department of the Environment on the comparison of suitable sites for the disposal of nuclear waste.

The Prime Minister: It is in the first instance for UK NIREX Ltd. to bring forward proposals for a method and siting for a radioactive waste disposal facility. At that stage the relevant Departments will consider NIREX's proposals, and will liaise with other Departments as appropriate.

"Spycatcher"

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister which Departments have procured copies of "Spycatcher" for their departmental libraries.

The Prime Minister: Checks with Departments have found none which have procured copies for loan by libraries.

Engagements

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 November.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 November.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 November.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 November.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 November.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 November.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 November.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

WALES

Schizophrenia

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department spent on research into schizophrenia in each of the last five years; and what proportion each figure was of expenditure on the Health Service research programme.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 30 October 1987]: The Department of Health and Social Security's directly managed research covers Wales and I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on Monday 9 November by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

Advance Factories

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to encourage the building of advance factories in (a) Clwyd, South-West and (b) Wales as a whole.

Mr. Peter Walker: I make provision to the Welsh Development Agency and Mid Wales Development and give urban aid to local authorities to fund the building of advance factory units in Clwyd, South-West and other parts of Wales. I will consider the identified needs for such property when deciding on future allocations.

National Museum of Wales

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what supplementary evidence was submitted by his Department to the Comptroller and Auditor General between 19 January and 15 July, concerning the national museum of Wales; and what actions were subsequently taken by his Department.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: None.

Pupil Statistics

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each Welsh local education authority the total number of pupils on school rolls and the pupil-to-teacher ratio in (a) nursery, (b) primary and (c) secondary schools.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information on the number of full-time and part-time pupils on roll and the pupil-teacher ratios within maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools, as at January 1987, is given in the table:

	Nursery schools	Primary schools	Secondary schools
Pupil numbers on roll
Clwyd	372	37,225	30,121
Dyfed	256	29,989	24,787

Further and Higher Education

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each Welsh education authority (a) the total number and (b) the percentage of pupils who have obtained places in higher or further education for each year since 1979.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is not available in the form requested. Estimates of maintained school leavers' intended entry into full-time further or higher education are as follows:

	Clwyd	Dyfed	Gwent	Gwynedd	Mid Glamorgan	Powys	South Glamorgan	West Glamorgan

[1] Numbers of maintained school leavers, expressed in thousands who intended entry into further education.

[2] School leavers intending to enter full-time further or higher education as a percentage of all school leavers.

Class Sizes

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the average sizes in each Welsh local education authority for primary and secondary classes for each of the past three years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Details of the average sizes of registered classes are given in the table. These do not necessarily reflect the size of groups in which children are actually taught.

Road Accidents

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, by Welsh county and class of road, the total number of (a) fatal road accidents and (b) non-fatal road accidents in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Walker: This question can only be fully answered at disproportionate cost. Summary details for each year since 1979 are, however, published annually in "Road Accidents: Wales" copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest unemployment figures for the Alyn and Deeside constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: At 8 October 1987 the numbers of registered unemployed people in the Alyn and Deeside constituency were:

	Number
Male	2,286
Female	1,171

A5104

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make the A5104 a trunk road, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. The volume and type of traffic carried would not justify trunk road status.

Education Act 1981

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the cost in Wales of providing brochures required under the Education Act 1981; how many have been distributed to parents and how many are still in storage; and how many have been made available in the Welsh language.

Mr. Peter Walker: There is no requirement under the Education Act 1981 to provide brochures. The Education (School Information) Regulations 1981, made under powers conferred by the Education Act 1980, relate to the publication of information on schools, including provision for publication in Welsh. No information is held centrally on the costs of such information, distribution or Welsh language provision.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many private nursing homes have been operating in each Welsh county in each year since 1979.

Mr. Grist: The information is given in the table which shows the position as at 31 December each year. Figures are not available prior to 1982.

Number of private nursing homes

County	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986

Powys	—	1	1	3	6
South Glamorgan	3	3	3	5	7
West Glamorgan	8	9	10	15	25

National Library of Wales

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to meet the librarian of the National Library of Wales to discuss the proposed commercial and technical system for business information.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am planning to meet the librarian on Thursday 26 November 1987.

Dyfed Bridge

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he intends to increase his financial allocation to Dyfed bridge safety as a result of the recent severe flooding.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A special inspection of trunk road bridges which may have been affected in Dyfed is being carried out. resources will be allocated to deal with any urgent problems which are found. I am prepared to consider any representations from Dyfed county council about particular problems with bridge safety work arising from the recent floods.

Bridge Safety

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action is being taken in Wales to implement safety standards for bridges; if he is satisfied that all appropriate action has been taken; what extra resources his Department has made available to meet these standards; and what system of monitoring is employed.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I am satisfied with the arrangements for maintaining safety standards on motorway and trunk road bridges in Wales. All bridges are inspected at two-yearly intervals and resources are made available to deal with repairs as the need arises. New bridges are designed and independently checked in accordance with departmental standards.

The safety of bridges on local authority roads is a matter for county highway authorities and the safety of rail bridges is a matter for British Rail.

Welsh Language

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, pursuant to his answer of 6 November, he will list in the Official Report (a) those organisations which made representations referring to the position of Welsh within the national curriculum and (b) those which favoured the inclusion of Welsh as a foundation subject throughout Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is as follows:

Here are those organisations which have commented on the position of Welsh within the national curriculum. Those organisations which favour the inclusion of Welsh as a foundation subject throughout Wales are marked with an asterisk.

Deeside Waterfronts Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit the proposed site of the Deeside waterfronts scheme at Broken bank, Shotton; if he will meet the joint promoters of the scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: It is possible that my right hon. Friend may be called on to exercise statutory planning functions in respect of this proposal. It would not therefore be proper for him to visit the site now or to meet the promoters.

Education Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the numbers of pupils in (a) Clywd county and (b) Alyn and Deeside constituency primary and secondary schools in each of the next five years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The estimated figures for Clwyd are given in the table. Figures for the Alyn and Deeside constituency are not available.

Full-time equivalent pupils in Clwyd maintained schools

Hip Replacement Operations

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to ensure the continuation of hip replacement operations at the Maelor hospital, Wrexham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I understand that Clwyd health authority will be continuing hip replacement operations at Wrexham Maelor hospital at the same rate as they have been carried out so far this year.

Industrial Support and Development

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the annual expenditure at 1986-87 prices for each year since 1972 on industrial support and development in Wales; and how much of it was regional development grant and how much regional selective assistance.

Mr. Peter Walker (holding answer 5 November 1987): Expenditure on regional selective assistance and regional development grants in Wales for the financial years 1972-73 to 1986-87 at 1986-87 prices is as follows:

	RSA £ million	RDG £ million	Total £ million
1972-73	—	4·0	4·0
1973-74	18·7	63·7	82·4

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Reform

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science why home economics is not included in the proposed national curriculum 5-16; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The number of foundation subjects within the national curriculum is limited by the need to give schools flexibility to cover other areas. Although home economics is not identified in the proposed legislation as a separate foundation subject, we expect some elements of it to feature in the national curriculum particularly through science, technology and art.

School Days (Duration)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information his Department has as to the average length of the school day in (a) maintained schools and (b) independent schools in 1957, 1967, 1977 and 1987.

Mr. Dunn: No information is available centrally for independent schools, for maintained secondary schools, or for past years. The Department's March 1987 primary school staffing survey recorded an average of 23 hours per week of lesson time (excluding registration, assemblies and break time) in maintained nursery and primary schools in England.

Examination Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what precautions are taken, in compiling the annual examination statistics, to ensure that pupils passing at CSE grade 1 and O grades A to C in the same subject or pupils passing at O grade A to C or CSE grade 1 in the same subject in examinations organised by different examining boards are not counted as having achieved more than one pass in the subject.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department's current source of information on the examination achievements of pupils in English schools is the annual school leavers survey which collects details from schools of the CSE and GCE attainments of a 10 per cent. sample of their leavers.

Schools are asked to record the highest grade achieved in each subject, from any examination board, separately for the CSE and GCE examinations. The main presentation of the statistics of CSE/GCE results at higher grades eliminates double counting in those cases where a GCE and CSE result are both obtained in the same subject.

Primary Schools

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will give (a) the total number of primary schools in which a representative from industry had taken up a teaching or advisory post as of the latest convenient date, (b) the total percentage of primary schools in which a representative from industry had taken up a teaching or advisory post, as of the latest convenient date, (c) a breakdown by local education authority of the number of primary schools in which a representative from industry had taken up a teaching or advisory post, as of the latest convenient date and (d) a breakdown by local education authority of the percentage of primary schools in which a representative from industry had taken up a teaching or advisory post, as of the latest convenient date;

(2) what information he has about (a) the total number of primary school teachers who had previously worked in industry, as of the latest convenient date, (b) the percentage of primary school teachers who had previously worked in industry, as of the latest convenient date, (c) a breakdown by local education authority of the number of primary school teachers who had previously worked in industry, as of the latest convenient date and (d) a breakdown by local education authority of the percentage of primary school teachers who had previously worked in industry, as of the latest convenient date.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested for each local education authority is not available. A sample survey of 500 maintained primary schools and 500 maintained secondary schools in England on school/industry links was undertaken in Industry Year 1986.

The survey shows that there were around 200 to 300 primary schools (about 1 per cent.) where a representative from industry had taken up a teaching or advisory post with them in 1986. Some 20,000 teachers (around 10 per cent.) in primary schools had previously worked in industry.

Information Services

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list by grade the personnel currently employed in the information division of his Department.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information branch of the Department of Education and Science is currently staffed as follows:

	Number
Grade 5	2
Grade 7	2
Senior Information Officer	[1]6
Information Officer	[1]10
Assistant Information Officer	[2]1
Higher Graphics Officer	1
Graphics Officer	5
Executive Officer	2
Administrative Officer	5
Administrative Assistant	3
Personal Secretaries	2

[1] One vacant.

[2] Vacant

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the cost of maintaining the information division within his Department in each year since 1979.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is as follows:

1984-85	460,088
1985-86	468,711
1986-87	552,491
[1]1987-88	265,037

[1] To end-September

These figures cover the cost of salaries, national insurance, overtime, hospitality and travel and subsistence for all members of the Department's information branch. Figures for earlier years are not available.

Deaf Children

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if Her Majesty's Government have any plans to encourage the use of British sign language for the deaf in schools and to help in training qualified interpreters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The method of communication used in schools for children with hearing impairments is a matter for the governing bodies of individual schools to determine. It is not something in which my Department becomes involved. With regard to the training of interpreters, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply by my hon. Friend the Member for Wantage (Mr. Jackson) to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 3 November at column 643.

Science Budget (Research)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will indicate the likely spending on the following items within the new science budget planning total of £696 million for 1988-89: (a) research in Antarctica, (b) a new research ship for Antarctica, (c) inter-disciplinary research centres, (d) the strategic reshaping of the science base and (e) a Medical Research Council special programme of research on AIDS.

Mr. Jackson: Detailed decisions on the allocation of the science budget for 1988-89 will be taken later in the year in the light of advice from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils. However, the increased funding for that year announced by my right hon. Friend on 3 November included special provision of £8·6 million for additional research in Antarctica and a new research ship, and of £6 million for the MRC's programmes of AIDS research.

Joint Research Centre

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps Her Majesty's Government intend to propose to the Council of Ministers of the European Community to ensure that the current age profile of joint research centre staff is reversed.

Mr. Jackson: The European Commission has outlined its proposals for the reform of the joint research centre including their ideas for revitalising the staffing. We support this objective and shall be examining their proposals carefully as we believe vigorous action is necessary.

Teaching Facilities, Dewsbury

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if Her Majesty's schools inspectorate in England has inspected the teaching facilities at the public house in Dewsbury, Yorkshire, being used to teach children whose parents have refused to send them to Heathfield middle school, Dewsbury.

Mr. Dunn: No.

Sheffield University

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his reply of 29 October, Official Report, column 365, what response he has sent to representations he has received from the university of Sheffield about the implications for the university of continued United Kingdom membership of CERN.

Mr. Jackson: I replied to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Heeley (Mr. Michie) on 10 November and the hon. Member may therefore wish to approach him for a copy of my letter.

Advanced Further Education

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much capital expenditure for advanced further education in each local education authority in England and Wales was (a) applied for and (b) spent in each of the last six years, respectively, both in absolute terms and as a percentage of their allocated advanced further education numbers.

Mr. Jackson: I shall reply to the first part of the hon. Member's question as soon as possible. Since information on the outturn of local authority capital expenditure is not split between advanced and non-advanced further education it is not possible to provide a reliable answer to the second part of the question. Capital expenditure by local education authorities in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

School Governors (Training)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to make further money available for training school governors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Government recognise the importance of appropriate training for school governors, particularly in view of the increased responsibilities we propose they should have. We are therefore considering making resources available for this purpose.

Religious Education

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in favour of adding religious education to the subjects included in the proposed core curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have received many responses from organisations and individuals regarding the place of religious education in a national curriculum. Copies of all responses from organisations to our consultation document have been placed in the Library. The teaching of religious education is already required to be taught by law and the Government are committed to its continuation as an essential part of the curriculum of every maintained school.

Institute of Hearing Research

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of the work of the Institute of Hearing Research.

Mr. Jackson: I understand from the Medical Research Council that the programme of research at its Institute of Hearing Research continues to progress well.

Education Bill

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will detail the expected impact on the role of secondary school head teachers of the proposals contained in his recent consultation papers and in his proposed Education Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The effective functioning of all schools, primary as well as secondary, depends on the leadership, commitment and judgment of head teachers. Their special role, both educational and managerial, has already been reinforced by the Education (No. 2) Act 1986. That role is conveniently summarised in the statement of head teachers' duties and responsibilities in the "School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document 1987". Many local education authorities have already taken substantial steps to give governing bodies and heads greater independence and authority in running their schools. The Government's proposals which will be incorporated in the Education Reform Bill to be published shortly build on these developments. These proposals when implemented will substantially increase the autonomy which governing bodies and heads have in the running of all except the smallest maintained schools. In practice, heads of secondary schools can be expected in future to have operational control of all the resources, human, material and financial, allocated to their schools. The job of the head will become still more interesting, challenging and rewarding.

Women in Universities

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has about the percentage of (a) undergraduates, (b) postgraduates and (c) academic staff in universities who are women for each year since 1980.

Mr. Jackson: The information is given in the following table:

Great Britain

	Academic year beginning in
Percentages who are women[1]	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
Home full-time students
Undergraduates	39·8	40·6	41·3	41·6	42·1	42·4	42·7
Postgraduates	35·3	35·7	36·1	36·4	36·8	37·3	37·9
Part-time students
Undergraduates	50·9	54·3	55·6	55·4	55·6	58·1	58·3
Postgraduates	29·7	30·9	32·2	33·0	33·9	34·4	34·2
Full-time Academic staff	13·9	13·8	14·2	14·9	15·6	16·3	17·1

[1] Excluding the Open University.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps are taken to promote equality of opportunity for women in the university sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Between 1979 and 1986 the proportion of full-time home university students who are women rose from 38·3 per cent. to 42·1 per cent. The Government look to a continuation of this trend to help meet their plans set out in the White Paper "Higher Education: Meeting the Challenge" (Cm. 114). The actual recruitment of students and staff is a matter for individual universities, within the law.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Income Tax

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the estimated charge, on the basis of current expenditure (a) per household and (b) per capita for each English district if a system of local income tax were introduced.

Mr. Howard: The Government remain firmly committed to the introduction of the community charge. They believe that the domestic rating system is discredited, and that a local income tax (LIT) would be unacceptable for a variety of reasons. Among the problems with LIT is the impact of variation in the rate of tax in different areas, as can be seen from the tables that I have placed in the Library showing the rate of LIT in each area on the basis of 1987-88 expenditure. They also show the wide variation in the LIT bill for a single person on national average earnings.

The LIT bills per household and per capita are not shown. These would depend on household and personal circumstances in each area.

The total amount assumed to be raised from LIT is the same as that raised from rates, less an amount attributable to rebates. The calculations assume full equalisation of incomes per head between local authorities, so that those areas where average incomes are relatively low do not have to levy a higher rate of LIT for a standard level of services.

On average, the consequence of introducing LIT would be to increase the rate of income tax by 6p in the £. The tables reveal some remarkable variations between neighbouring authorities. For example, the LIT rate in Barnet would be 5·9p and the tax bill for a single person, on national average earnings, would be £477. These figures compare with an LIT rate in next-door Camden of 25·6p and a tax bill for a single person of £2,066. This would mean that a single person, on national average earnings, could save £1,589 a year by moving from Camden to Barnet.

Acid Rain

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about progress in reducing acid rain.

Mr. Moynihan: A report by the indpendent United Kingdom review group on acid rain, published by my Department in May 1987, concluded that there is evidence of a decline in acid deposition, particularly deposition associated with sulphur emissions. There is little evidence of a change in the levels of nitrate deposition. This is broadly in line with the downward trend in emissions in the United Kingdom and continental Europe.

United Kingdom sulphur dioxide (SO_2) emissions have fallen by about 40 per cent. since 1970, while our nitrogen oxide (NO_x) emissions have remained broadly stable. These trends compare very favourably with those of other European countries. Recently, however, emissions have shown a tendency to rise as a result of increasing demand for energy, associated with higher economic growth, and increased vehicle use. Provisional figures for 1986 show United Kingdom emissions of SO_2 and NO_x of 3·74 million tonnes and 1·94 tonnes, respectively, compared with 1985 figures of 3·56 million tonnes and 1·84 tonnes, respectively. The upward trend is exaggerated because the 1985 figures were artificially low as a result of the miners' strike.

In anticipation of this trend, the CEGB is embarking on a major emission control programme involving the fitting of flue gas desulphurisation equipment at the Drax and Fiddlers Ferry coal-fired power stations and low-NO_x burners to all 12 of its largest such stations, at a cost approaching £1 billion. New coal-fired power stations, of which four are planned by the CEGB for commissioning by 2000, will also be fitted with similar emission control technology. This major programme will help to ensure the continuation of the long-term downward trend in acid emissions. Few countries are doing more to reduce such emissions, and few are likely to match our performance between 1970 and the turn of the century.

The European Community recently moved a step closer to agreement on a framework for new EC vehicle emission standards. The proposals are now subject to the new co-operation procedure between the Council of Ministers and the European Parliament. The Government attach high priority to the successful completion of this process at the earliest possible date.

Audit Commission

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will explain the basis for the Audit Commission's fees increase of 6.5 per cent.

Mr. Chope: The Audit Commission consulted the local authority associations and the accountancy bodies on its fee proposals as required by statute. My Department has asked the commission to send the hon. Member a copy of the consultation document, which explains the basis of the fees increase.

London City Airport

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much public money was used in the construction of the London City airport.

Mr. Trippier: None.

Rate Capping

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider announcing criteria for rate capping for 1989-90 as part of the 1988-89 rate support grant settlement so that authorities are fully aware of the consequences of the decisions they take in setting their 1988-89 budgets.

Mr. Chope: No.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the implications for local government financial planning of local authorities' uncertainty as to the criteria to be used for rate capping until after they have set their budgets.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend's main concern is with the implications for ratepayers of excessive spending by certain local authorities. Under the Rates Act 1984 he has selected the most excessive spenders for rate or precept limitation. But this is a small proportion of local councils and none which budget to spend prudently need be concerned.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why rate capping criteria are not announced until after local authorities' budgets are set.

Mr. Chope: The timetable followed by my right hon. Friend allows him to take into account, as required by the Rates Act 1984, the general economic conditions, including the likely level of local government spending, at the time that he designates authorities for rate or precept limitation.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that authorities not previously rate capped and spending in 1988-89 at or below the expenditure levels assumed in his recent consultation paper will not be rate capped in 1989-90.

Mr. Chope: No.

PRC Homes Ltd.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library an up-to-date list of repair systems which have been licensed by PRC Homes Ltd. licensed subject to amendments and under appraisal in respect of each PRC type.

Mrs. Roe: Yes; I have arranged for PRC Homes Ltd.'s most recent progress report on repair systems to be placed in the Library. We will ensure that this continues to be done as further reports become available.

Mobile Homes

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the workings of the Mobile Homes Act 1983; and if he will bring forward proposals to amend that Act.

Mrs. Roe: We continue to receive various representations about the working of the Act. We are satisfied that the Act is in general working well and we have no plans to amend it. The Department has held talks with representatives of mobile home residents and site owners which have resulted in some important initiatives. These include a code of guidance to be issued by the site owners' organisations to their members, dealing with many of the points of concern to residents. An arbitration scheme along the lines of the one negotiated for the holiday caravan industry is also under consideration. These measures should help deal with the problems that some residents have faced.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will tabulate in the Official Report for each year since 1981 the number of dwellings sold by the London Docklands development corporation to persons who were residents of (a) any of the three dockland boroughs and (b) the statutory area of the corporation.

Mr. Trippier: The LDDC does not itself build or sell dwellings, but makes its land available to other developers. 3,263 homes built on corporation-owned sites were sold by 31 March 1987. 1,490 were purchased by residents of the boroughs of Newham, Southwark, and Tower Hamlets. 1,098 of these same purchases were made by existing residents of the LDDC's area. A more detailed breakdown on an annual basis is not readily available.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will tabulate in the Official Report for each year since 1981 the number of dwellings built on land some time in the ownership of the London Docklands development corporation which were vested in housing associations.

Mr. Trippier: The number of homes completed on LDDC sites either by housing associations, or purchased by them from other developers, is as follows:

Year	Completions
1982-83	31
1983-84	111
1984-85	119
1985-86	230
1986-87	370

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will tabulate for each year since 1981 the number of housing units built on land some time in the ownership of the London Docklands development corporation and which were initially sold for £40,000 or less, together with the number and respective percentages of dwellings initially sold for a higher figure.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is as follows:

Sales of new homes on LDDC-owned sites

	£40,000 or under		Above £40,000
Year	Number	Per cent	Number	Per cent	Total sales
1981-82	2	100·0	0	0·0	2
1982-83	399	98·5	6	1·5	405
1983-84	431	96·9	21	3·1	452
1984-85	519	87·8	161	12·2	680
1985-86	324	71·1	494	28·9	818
1986-87	167	56·5	739	43·5	906

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the most recent figures, in square metres, for the quantity of land within the area of the London Docklands development corporation which has been used, since 1981, for (a) non-residential development, (b) residential development sold at a price of £40,000 or less, (c) residential development sold at a price of £100,000 or more, (d) rented local authority development and (e) other rented accommodation.

Mr. Trippier: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, by what methods the London Docklands development corporation makes the public aware of its activities.

Mr. Trippier: It does so by a variety of means. It is required by law to publish its annual report and its accounts. It also publishes annually its updated corporate plan. The Docklands News newspaper and other publicity material are issued on a regular basis. There are also frequent and regular press notices, and interviews and articles by board members and corporation staff. LDDC is represented at many local authority and local community meetings and similar functions. It holds regular open evenings at its area offices, and public meetings and exhibitions on specific issues. Its planning committee meetings and agenda are publicised and open to the public. Finally, there are wide consultations on particular planning applications and on the corporation's own development framework and other proposals.

Sheffield

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received an invitation from Councillor Wigfield, chairman of housing, Sheffield city council; and if he is prepared to visit Sheffield to see and consider that city's work with local tenants and the difficulties it is facing in decently housing its citizens.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Storm Damage

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer of 29 October, Official Report, column 444, regarding the cost of repairing damage consequent on the gales of 15 and 16 October, what the best estimated cost to each of the local authorities concerned will be.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 4 November, at column 926.

Cemeteries (Sale)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will call for a report regarding the disposal by Westminster council of three cemeteries at 5p each and their subsequent sale for £2 million; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: No. This is a matter for Westminister city council, its ratepayers and the district auditor.

Rating Reform

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reply to the letter addressed to him on the poll tax from Mrs. F. A. Higgins of 3 Daffodil road, Birkenhead, which was passed to him on 3 August.

Mr. Howard: Mrs. F. A. Higgins wrote to me on 28 July about the community charge, and received a reply from my officials in the early part of September. She wrote a further letter to my right hon. Friend on 6 October, and a reply was sent on 11 November.

Mrs. Cllwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what instructions he intends to issue to local authorities seeking to collect debts from community charge joint liabilities where one partner has not had access to the family income.

Mr. Howard: It will be for individual local authorities to decide on appropriate recovery procedures for community charge debts. Our proposal for joint and several liability will mean that they will not need to attempt to enforce recovery from partners who have no access to the family income.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the liability on the community charge will be backdated and retained to the time a couple were living together, and remain as a joint debt in instances where the couple have separated following domestic violence.

Mr. Howard: Couples will be jointly and severally liable for unpaid community charges in respect of any period during which they were married and living in the same household, or living together as husband and wife.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to create, as proposed in Scotland, a category of persons known as severely mentally handicapped for the purposes of poll tax implementation.

Mr. Howard: Yes. The severely mentally handicapped will be exempt from liability to pay the personal community charge in England and Wales, as they will in Scotland.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 9 November, Official Report, column 14, how many households in each London borough will experience an increase of (a) 50 per cent. or more and (b) 80 per cent. or more in local tax bills under the poll tax proposals, if local authorities in London continue to spend at present levels until the community charge is fully in place.

Mr. Howard: As I explained in my reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr on 26 October at column 39., it is not possible to produce figures for individual local authority areas.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to the reply of 4 November, Official Report, column 728, he will list the names of those organisations which have given written support to the introduction of the poll tax, indicating also where they are based.

Mr. Howard: No. I do not have the permission of those who submitted comments to publish their views. But as I indicated to the Hon. Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) on 4 November 1987, at column 728, a summary of responses was placed in the Library on 15 December 1986.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his latest proposals in respect of the poll tax for women seeking refuge from domestic violence.

Mr. Howard: Officials from my Department and the Welsh Office met representatives of Women's Aid Federation England and Welsh Women's Aid on 9 November. I am considering what measures may be appropriate in the light of the concerns expressed.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he is proposing for the collection of the poll tax from homeless people.

Mr. Howard: It will be for the individual local authorities to devise the arrangements for collecting the community charge in their areas. Most of the premises that give temporary accommodation for homeless people are likely to be designated for the collective community charge.

Mr. Rooker: To asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the relationship between the contribution to local taxation of the 10 per cent. of households who are highest paid and the 10 per cent. who are the lowest paid (a) under the present system and (b) under the poll tax.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 5 November 1987]: Based on data contained in the family expenditure survey, I estimate that under the existing system the 10 per cent. of households with the highest net incomes pay 5½ times as much in local taxation after rebate as the 10 per cent. of households with the lowest net income. If the community charge were fully implemented the 10 per cent. with the highest net incomes would pay six times as much as those with the lowest net incomes.

Council House Sales

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now consider raising the maximum discount available to tenants exercising their right to buy under the Housing Acts from the current ceiling of £35,000.

Mr. Waldegrave: The limit is kept under review, but there are no plans for an increase in the immediate future.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes that tenants who transfer from a council landlord to an approved landlord will retain their right to buy with the subsidy that will be available to council tenants.

Mr. Waldegrave: Section 8 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986 provides for the right-to-buy to be preserved where a house or flat occupied by a secure tenant is transferred to a private landlord. The section has not yet been brought into force because detailed regulations adapting the right-to-buy legislation for this purpose are still in preparation. In the meanwhile the position of tenants transferring to private landlords can be protected by contractual arrangements.

Homeless Persons

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made as to whether the proposed development in the London borough of Barking and Dagenham by Westminster city council of mobile homes to house homeless people from the latter authority will affect the rate support grant of either borough.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend has made no such assessment. If the scheme goes ahead there would under the present system be a small effect on the rate support grant payable to Barking and Dagenham due to changes in its population and rateable values. At present, Westminster city council receives no block grant and it is not possible to say whether the proposed scheme would change that position.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance his Department gives to local authorities concerning the resettlement of homeless persons outside their own borough.

Mr. Waldegrave: None; but general guidance on accommodation for the homeless is given in our code of guidance on the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 (now part III of the Housing Act 1985). A copy is in the Library.

Housing (London)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the current total number of vacant properties in the London borough of Southwark (a) in council ownership and (b) in private ownership;

(2) what are the most recent figures available to him on the number of households registered on the housing waiting list in the London borough of Southwark who have remained on the waiting list for (a) less than one year, (b) between one and two years, (c) between two and three years, (d) between three and four years, (e) between four and five years and (f) over five years;

(3) what are the most recent figures available to him on the number of households registered on the housing transfer list in the London borough of Southwark who had been registered on the transfer list for (a) less than one year, (b) between one and two years, (c) between two and three years, (d) between three and four years, (e) between four and five years and (f) over five years.

Mr. Waldegrave: The numbers of vacant properties and the total number of households on the housing waiting list were provided by the London borough of Southwark in its 1987 housing investment programme return (HIP1), while further information on the waiting and transfer lists was included in the housing strategy statement 1988-89. Copies of both documents are in the Library.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the most recent figures he has for the number of local authority dwellings unlawfully occupied in each inner London borough.

Mr. Waldegrave: The numbers of local authority dwellings in unlicensed occupation at 1 April 1987, as reported by inner London boroughs in their housing investment programme returns, are as follows:

	Number
City of London	8
Camden	340
Hackney	1,049
Hammersmith and Fulham	90
Haringey	190
Islington	401
Kensington and Chelsea	18
Lambeth	1,203
Lewisham	164
Newham	2
Southwark	2,169
Tower Hamlets	672
Wandsworth	63
Westminster	124

Housing

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the percentage change, both in cash and in real terms, in public expenditure on housing in each consecutive financial year from 1973-74 up until the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Waldegrave: Information cannot be made available for years before 1976-77 on a consistent definitional and geographical basis, except at disproportionate cost. Available information is as follows:

Housing expenditure England

Figures for those years have been published in public expenditure White Papers but relate to Great Britain, are in survey prices rather than cash prices and include expenditures transferred to other programmes in later years.

London Residuary Body

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the value of assets realised by the London residuary body since its inception.

Mr. Chope: Payments received by the LRB up to 31 October 1987 for the sale of assets were about £115 million.

Nuclear Waste

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether United Kingdom Nirex Ltd. has made any progress with its proposals to develop a deep repository for low and intermediate-level wastes.

Mr. Ridley: UK Nirex Ltd. has today published a discussion document—copies of which have been placed in the Library — outlining its proposals for a deep disposal facility for low and intermediate-level wastes and inviting comments from interested parties. I welcome this document and the consultation exercise of which it is a part. I hope that as many people as possible will take the opportunity to read the document and submit comments to Nirex.

Estuaries

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many proposed schemes he is aware of which would effect change in estuaries in England and Wales where these would involve the development of power generation or of substantial additional activity; and if he will list the estuaries involved.

Mr. Moynihan: Major tidal systems on the Severn and Mersey estuaries are currently under investigation. Part of the costs of those studies, which include environmental assessment work, is being met by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy. Industrial or other development proposals on estuaries are primarily questions for the local planning authorities but, if the hon. Member has a particular problem in mind and will write to me giving details, I will look into it.

Unleaded Petrol

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the difference between lead-free and unleaded petrol; and when he expects each to be widely available in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: Unleaded petrol is the technically correct way of referring to petrol to which no lead has been added. There is a British Standard Specification to which all unleaded petrol in the United Kingdom conforms. Lead-Free is simply a popular term for the fuel. As to availability, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Central (Mr. McTaggart) on Wednesday 4 November.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what happened to the 53,000 tonnes of hazardous waste imported during 1986.

Mr. Moynihan: The 53,000 tonnes of imported waste notified under the Control of pollution (Special Waste) Regulations were disposed of as follows:—

Method	Tonnes
By incineration	8,000
By treatment	42,000
By land-fill	3,000

Polluted Seawater

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in view of the publication of new research undertaken on behalf of the environmental organisation, Greenpeace, he will review the evidence of a health risk from bathing in sewage-polluted seawater in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: I am keeping under review the evidence concerning the possible risk to health arising from bathing in sewage-contaminated water.

Ministerial Cars

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which ministerial cars will be exempted from the recently announced decision to put the repair and maintenance of ministerial vehicles out to tender.

Mr. Chope: Some of the vehicles in the Government car service used by Ministers and heads of Department are now being serviced by a commercial garage in order to compare the efficiency and competitiveness of the Government car service's own workshops with services available from the private sector. It is normal practice not to disclose details about particular vehicles used by individual Ministers.

"Tenants' Choice"

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why the Green Paper "Tenants' Choice" was not made available to hon. Members through the Vote Office at the time of its release to the public.

Mr. Waldegrave: The White Paper "Housing: The Government's Proposals" (CM214) was published in September and made available to hon. Members through the Vote Office. Since then, my Department has published a number of consultation and explanatory papers (none of them in the usual sense Green Papers) which explain in more detail the policies outlined in the White Paper. Copies of each of these, including that on Tenants' Choice, were placed in the Library.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has now received the 1987 annual report of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee.

Mr. Ridley: Yes. The eighth annual report was published on 1 September and copies were placed in the Library of the House. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales and I continue to value greatly the advice of the committee for which we also recently announced the appointment of a new chairman, Professor John Knill, to take over from the late Professor Paul Matthews with effect from 1 September.

Caravan and Tent Site Licensing

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of consultation on proposals to unify caravan and tent site licensing.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department and the Welsh Office received over 100 responses to the consultation paper issued in March. Although certain aspects of the proposals received support, most respondents took the view that there is insufficient evidence of problems now arising on caravan and tent sites so as to justify the greater degree of control which was envisaged. We have therefore decided not to proceed at present with amending legislation, but we shall continue to keep the situation under review.

In the light of this I understand that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has decided not to proceed with the similar consultation exercise which he originally intended.

Green and White Papers

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) Green and (b) White Papers his Department has produced (i) since 3 May 1978 and (ii) since 9 June 1983; if he will list these in date order; in each case, whether the responses to the papers were deposited in the Library; and what was the percentage of papers for each year which have not had their responses placed in the Library since 1980.

Mr. Ridley: I cannot be held responsible for papers produced between 3 May 1978 and 3 May 1979.

The Green Papers produced by the Department of the Environment since 9 June 1983, and the White Papers produced since 3 May 1979 are as follows.

Details of Green Papers produced before June 1983 are not readily available. The current arrangements for placing in the Library responses to major consultation papers on matters of general interest were introduced in October 1986, and a list of those papers where responses have been placed in the Library is as shown.

For papers produced in the 1986-87 Session, 48 per cent. have not had their responses placed in the Library.

Green and White Papers produced by the Department of the Environment

Green Papers produced since 9 June 1983

Caring Institutions

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list those caring institutions which will be exempted from the proposed community charge, and the reasons for which they have been exempted.

Mr. Howard: The exemption for residents of caring institutions will apply to those who are solely or mainly resident in such institutions and are receiving care and/or treatment there. The institutions concerned will be private and voluntary residential care homes; local authority residential care homes; registered nursing and mental nursing homes; and certain hostels providing accommodation and care.

In many cases people living in these establishments will have relatively little contact with the local democratic process and will be unable to make full use of local authority services. In addition, problems of definition might arise if residents in hospitals were exempted from personal community charges but residents in homes were not.

Sport and Leisure Facilities

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his latest proposals concerning local authority financing for sport and leisure facilities.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment, and for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland issued a consultation paper on 28 September setting out our proposals to open up the management of local authority sports facilities to competition. The aims of the proposals are to ensure, through more effective management and marketing of facilities, greater sensitivity to the needs and demands of the community and better value for money from local authority expenditure. Copies of the consultation paper are available in the House Library and comments have been invited by 11 December.

Cricket (Ministerial Visit)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many persons accompanied the Minister for Sport to the World Cup cricket final in Calcutta; and what was the cost to public funds of this visit.

Mr. Moynihan: I was unaccompanied on my visit to Calcutta for the final of the Cricket World Cup. I travelled on a club-class ticket and the total bill for my travelling arrangements was £1,682. There were no additional costs.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Civil Defence

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when the NATO Civil Defence Committee will issue guidelines on civil defence measures and long-term measures for the protection of the civilian population against the effects of chemical weapons; and if such guidelines will be made available to authorities charged with a duty to plan for the protection of the public in war;

(2) if he will make available in the Library minutes of the meetings of the medical sub-group and warning and monitoring sub-group which provide expert advice to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's Civil Defence Committee.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Minutes of the medical sub-group carry a NATO security classification and cannot be made available. Minutes of the warning and monitoring sub-group are unclassified and copies will be placed in the Library shortly.

The Civil Defence Committee issued on 18 December 1986 a "Compendium of Technical Information for the Basic Protection of Populations"; this includes a chapter on chemical protection. Copies have been circulated to county emergency planning officers and will today be placed in the Library.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all capital projects costing over £100,000 which are included in the total of civil defence expenditure within public expenditure White Papers for 1984-85 to 1989-90.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Details of central Government capital projects costing more than £500,000 are given in tables included in the Supply Estimates, published in April annually.

Information about central Government and local authority capital projects costing over £100,000 is not readily available and could be provided only at disprortionate cost.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will enable fire and civil defence authorities to extend their emergency planning functions by providing statutory powers to incur expenditure in the preparation of contingency plans to respond to peacetime civil nuclear emergencies.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: District and borough authorities have powers under section 138 of the Local Government Act 1972 to incur such expenditure as they consider necessary in taking action to avert, alleviate or eradicate the effects of disasters or emergencies in their area. This power allows for the deployment of the full range of local authority services.

Under the revised arrangements for the former metropolitan areas, these powers remain with the district and borough authorities; we do not think it necessary to extend them to the fire and civil defence authorities. Fire and civil defence authorities are, however, enabled by the Civil Protection in Peacetime Act 1986 to co-ordinate matters, if requested to do so by the districts or boroughs concerned.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to celebrate officially the 50th anniversary of the civil defence college, Easingwold, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A reception for representatives from the local community and organisations concerned with the college's work took place at the college in July. An anniversary dinner is to be held there in December.

Firearms

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to bring within the scope of his proposals relating to firearms a provision prohibiting the manufacture, sale or possession of any firearm consisting entirely or mainly of plastic materials.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This matter is under consideration.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes to include in the new Firearms Bill a provision that those members of gun clubs who use their membership to obtain a firearms certificate will lose their certificate if they should allow their membership of the gun club to lapse.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Continued membership of a gun club is normally checked on renewal of a firearm certificate every three years. We are not persuaded that more frequent checks on club membership, which would be costly, would significantly improve the present controls.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, in the Official Report, the meeting he has had with the various organisations representing owners and users of firearms, regarding his proposals for changes in the law governing ownership and use of firearms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have met representatives of the British Shooting Sports Council, a body which represents the interests of a large number of shooting organisations. In addition, officials have met with representatives of the Arms and Armour Society, the Historical Breech Loading and Small Arms Association, the Imperial War Museum, the Shooting Sports Trust, the Gun Trade Association, the National Pistol Association, the Clay Pigeon Shooting Association, the National Rifle Association, the National Small Bore Rifle Association, and the Scottish Shooting Council. We have also written to a wide range of interested organisations seeking their views on our proposals.

Court Buildings (Vandalism)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the trend in vandalism, cases of abscondings and assaults in or about magistrates' courts since the introduction of the Crown prosecution service; and to what extent he attributes this trend to the consequent reduction of police officers present in court buildings in some areas.

Mr. John Patten: Representations have been made that some difficulties have been experienced, but no systematic information is available centrally.

Prostitution

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the number of men who have been convicted at the South West London magistrates' court for kerb-crawling activities in the Bedford hill area of Wandsworth during the last three years;

(2) what has been the number of convictions at the South West London magistrates' court of women convicted of soliciting for prostitution in the Bedford hill district of Wandsworth, during the last three years;

(3) what is the number of people who have been convicted at the South West London magistrates' court in each of the last three years for living off the immoral earnings of prostitutes.

Mr. John Patten: The information held centrally, which may be incomplete, is given in the table. It is not possible to identify separately those offences which occurred in the Bedford hill area of Wandsworth.

Persons found guilty of offences relating to prostitution at South Western Magistrates' Court

Offence	1984	1985	1986
Kerb-crawling	[1]—	—	—
Soliciting for prostitution	402	579	288
Living on earnings of prostitution	—	1	1

[1] This offence was created by the Sexual Offences Act 1985 which came into force in September 1985.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what account the team set up to establish what further record might be put on the police national computer will take of the implications for civil liberties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The team is fully aware that all records on the police national computer are subject to the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 and will be subject also to the code of practice for police computer systems (including the police national computer) being prepared by the Association of Chief Police Officers.

Street Lighting (Crime)

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the chief constable of Bedfordshire and from Bedfordshire's police authority on the relationship between inadequate and defective street lighting and the level of crime in the county, and in Luton in particular; and what has been his response.

Mr. John Patten: We have received no such representations.

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research has been conducted into the relationship between the level of crime and the level of street lighting within the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that because of the methodological difficulties involved, little research of any consequence has been carried out into the relationship between street lighting (or the lack of it) and crime in the United Kingdom.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will conduct a study into the likely impact of the introduction of the poll tax on electoral registration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The community charges register and the electoral register, and the processes of registration for the two, will be entirely separate, and we do not think that research of the kind suggested would be relevant or financially justifiable.

Immigration

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to alter current immigration procedures so as to prevent women from the Philippines offered for sale as brides from gaining entry into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: The repeal of section 1(5) of the Immigration Act 1971, as proposed in the Immigration Bill, will ensure that all applications from women seeking to come here on the basis of marriage to a British citizen or other Commonwealth citizen will be subject to the current immigration rules. Under the rules the entry clearance officer must be satisfied that the marriage was not entered into primarily to obtain admission to the United Kingdom.

Prisoners (Racial Discrimination)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints of racial discrimination have been received from black prisoners in the United Kingdom and if he will give a statistical breakdown of the complaints received at each prison.

Mr. Hurd: Formal procedures exist for the airing by prisoners of complaints about aspects of their treatment including alleged racial discrimination, and for their investigation, but no central record of complaints is kept.

Advertising

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, in the light of recent advertisements for contraceptives and public information advertisements warning of the dangers of AIDS, he will examine those provisions of the Broadcasting Act 1981 which prohibit advertisements in respect of products which are deemed to be of a religious nature; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The statutory requirements governing religious advertisements are of long standing and we have no present plans to amend them.

Taxi Drivers (Tests)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are at present waiting to take the Metropolitan police's examination to become taxi drivers; what is the average number of applicants tested each year; and what is the average annual pass rate for the above examination.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The tests take place in several stages, each of which must be successfully completed before the applicant is licensed as a taxi driver. Applicants present themselves to take the various stages when they consider themselves ready to do so, and regularly spread their attempts over a considerable period of time. There are at present just over 2,000 applicants undergoing assessment. There are currently a further 4,379 applicants who have not yet presented themselves for assessment; a proportion of these may be expected to withdraw before doing so. There were 926 successful candidates in 1986. Over the previous five years the average number of successful candidates was about 700.

Identity Parades

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, following initial indications from the Brixton police station identity parade scheme, he has any plans to extend this scheme to other police stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Provision for the installation of viewing screens, for use in identification parades, has been made in the code of practice for the identification of persons by police officers. Installation of these screens is a matter for individual chief officers of police.

Superintendent Ganley

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of public concern at the recent remarks attributed to Superintendent Ganley, he will publish figures on crimes committed on the Stonebridge estate, over the most recent period for which figures are available, broken down by (a) the crime, (b) the age, sex and race of the offender or alleged offender and (c) the age, sex and race of the victim.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not available in this form. I am writing to the hon. Member.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the disciplinary action taken with respect to Superintendet Bill Ganley following the publication of racially divisive comments attributed to him.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. I understand that the Commissioner takes the view that no ground exists for disciplinary action to be taken against Superintendent Ganley.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of public concern about remarks attributed to Superintendent Ganley at a local police consultative committee, he will revise his Department's guidelines on such committees.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. We see no reason to revise existing guidance on consultation arrangements set and in Home Office circular 2/1985 in the light of press reports of Superintendent Ganley's statements.

Stonebridge Estate

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Metropolitan Police Commissioner on the arrangements for the policing of the Stonebridge estate and its environs in the London borough of Brent.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. Arrangements for the policing of a particular area are a matter for the Commissioner.

Trials (Police Information)

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what general guidance Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary has given to chief officers following the request to him by the Home Secretary last July to consider whether any guidance was needed, in the light of the use by Swedish authorities of information supplied to them on the case of Captain Simon Hayward on a police-to-police basis, but used in proceedings in open court.

Mr. Hurd: I expect to receive the advice of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary shortly and will then consider what, if any, general guidance to chief officers is needed.

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the practice for officers interviewing suspects held in foreign countries on signing confirmatory memoranda regarding hearsay information relating to those suspects; and on whose authority the officers who did so after interviewing Captain Simon Hayward on 11 June signed such a memorandum.

Mr. Hurd: Subject to the requirements of the law, the question of whether and, if so, how to disclose to others (including police forces in other countries) information held by the police is a matter for the appropriate chief officer; and he is responsible for the actions of his officers. The officers referred to by my hon. Friend are members of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the arrangements for police-to-police liaison with Nordic countries following the attendance of the London-based Norwegian police official at the trial of Captain Simon Hayward in Stockholm, contrary to the wishes of the head of the national drugs intelligence unit.

Mr. Hurd: Liaison officers have an important part to play in promoting the effective international co-operation which is essential to combat drug trafficking. The liaison officer representing the Nordic countries is a properly accredited official with full diplomatic status. His attendance at Captain Hayward's trial in Stockholm was not a matter on which any authority in this country would be expected to express a view. I am not persuaded of the need for review of liaison arrangements with the Nordic countries.

National Drugs Intelligence Unit

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who is responsible for disciplinary action or complaints against personnel working on secondment to the national drugs intelligence unit; and what information he has as to how many complaints have been received against the national drugs intelligence unit during the past 12 months.

Mr. Hurd: Responsibility for such matters remains with the chief officer of the individual's home force. Complaints would be dealt with in accordance with the procedures laid down in the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, including, as appropriate, the involvement of the Police Complaints Authority. I understand that there have been no formal complaints made against the unit's staff in the last 12 months.

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the head of the national drugs intelligence unit on the conduct of the two officers working for the unit alleged to have performed their duties improperly while interviewing Captain Simon Hayward while he was held without charges in Sweden.

Mr. Hurd: No. I understand that the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has taken the view that there are no grounds for formal disciplinary action against the two officers.

Football Matches

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply of 22 October, Official Report, column 842, if he will give details of (a) the number of matches covered for each club in season 1987-88 to date, (b) the average charge per 1,000 spectators and (c) the criteria adopted by the Metropolitan police when deciding the number of officers who should attend a particular match.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that for the charges set out in my reply of 22 October the information requested is as follows:

Club	Season 1987-88
	Number of matches charged	Number of matches paid
Arsenal	4	4
Brentford	7	4
Charlton	6	6
Chelsea	8	5

Club	Season 1987-88 Number of matches charged	Number of matches paid
Crystal Palace	7	5
Fulham	9	5
Leyton Orient	10	7
Millwall	7	6
Queen's Park Rangers	6	6
Tottenham Hotspur	7	4
West Ham United	8	5
Wimbledon	7	4

The number of officers to be deployed within each ground is the subject of discussion between the club and the local chief superintendent prior to the start of the season and is based on operational experience. The method of determining manning levels on the basis of one police constable per 1,000 spectators with corresponding supervision is no longer used and the average charge per 1,000 spectators is therefore not readily available.

Exclusion Orders

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons living in the west midlands area were the subject of exclusion orders between December 1974 and the present day;

(2) how many persons living in the west midlands area were the subject of exclusion orders for each month between December 1974 and the present day.

Mr. Hurd: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Refugee Centres

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take to establish regional refugee centres.

Mr. John Patten: The voluntary services unit of the Home Office takes a close interest in proposals to establish regional refugee centres in the form of regional councils. Whether such a response is appropriate to the circumstances of the area in question must, however, be decided locally.

South African Visitors

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many South Africans were admitted to the United Kingdom between 1 January 1986 and 1 January 1987; what was their average length of stay in the United Kingdom; what were the main reasons for their visits; and if he will provide a breakdown according to ethnic groups;

(2) how many South African business people were admitted to the United Kingdom from 1 January 1986 to 1 January 1987; and what was their average length of stay.

Mr. Renton: The numbers of South African nationals admitted to the United Kingdom in 1986, and their categories of admission, are published in table 1 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom 1986" (Cm. 166). Information on length of stay is not available for the great majority of persons admitted to the United Kingdom nor is any record kept of the ethnic origin of passengers admitted.

Breath Tests

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is his policy with regard to random breath testing by the police;

(2) what proposals he has for changing the law in relation to drink and driving offences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) on 5 November at column 816.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the alleged use of random breath testing by the police; and in respect of which police forces.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received two representations in the last 12 months about the use made of police powers to carry out breath tests: one from an hon. Member on behalf of a constituent and one from a member of the public. Both related to operations conducted by Sussex police.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will call for a report from the chief constable of Sussex as to the use by Sussex police of section 159 of the Road Traffic Act 1972 in relation to the breath testing of motorists; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Sussex as to the use of road blocks in relation to the recent drink-drive campaign; what steps the chief constable has taken to satisfy himself of the legality of such methods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The chief constable of Sussex police has indicated that in enforcing the drink-drive legislation his officers have stopped all vehicles passing selected sites, using their powers under section 159 of the Road Traffic Act 1972. Breath tests have then been administered to the driver when there were grounds to do so under section 7 of the 1972 Act. The chief constable satisfied himself that this approach was lawful before authorising the operation.

Television Licences

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many television licences for (a) colour and (b) black and white have been issued in Northern Ireland in each year since 1980.

Mr. Renton: The available information relates to the number of general form television licences in force at 31 March in each of the years mentioned. This was as follows:

Year	Monochrome	Colour
1980	107,745	162,554
1981	101,313	174,893
1982	94,968	176,936
1983	90,174	183,758
1984	83,818	192,553
1985	79,357	199,055
1986	75,724	194,941
1987	74,520	196,539

Eksund (Arms Find)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list such information that is available to him regarding the types and quantities of weapons, explosives and shells found stowed aboard the vessel Eksund by the French authorities.

Mr. Hurd: I think it right that the French authorities should decide what information should be published and when it should be published. I should not wish to publish any details which would be regarded as prejudicial to criminal proceedings in France.

Prisoners (Statistics)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many black prisoners there are in the prisons of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hurd [holding answer 5 November 1987]: The information is published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales" (table 1.13 of the 1986 issue, Cm. 210).

Prison Officers (Statistics)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many black prison officers there are in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hurd [holding answer 5 November 1987]: I regret that this information is not available for the prison service in England and Wales. We have instituted a voluntary system of monitoring the ethnic background of new prison service recruits and are anxious to encourage more members of the ethnic communities to apply for prison service vacancies.

Prison Service (Racism)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what policies he has to tackle racism within the prison service.

Mr. Hurd [holding answer 5 November 1987]: We are committed to a policy of racial equality and to the elimination of discrimination in all aspects of the work of the prison service. The strategies adopted for implementing that policy include:

(a) the promulgation of a succinct public policy statement, to be drawn to the attention of all inmates, staff, members of boards of visitors and local review committees and others who have regular dealings with establishments;

(b) the establishment of a clear accountability for the implementation of the policy at establishment level; for this purpose a race relations check-list and statement of responsibilities has been introduced; and governors have been recommended to set up local race relations management teams;

(c) the establishment of central machinery to disseminate advice and guidance and to monitor performance as regards the implementation of the policy;

(d) the development and improvement of race relations training for all grades of staff; and

(e) efforts to increase ethnic minority recruitment to the service and to boards of visitors and local review committees.

Details of the initiatives at (a) to (c) are given in circular instructions 32/1986, a copy of which is in the Library.

Fireworks

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what report he has received on accidents and incidents arising from the use of fireworks on 5 November and the immediately preceding four weeks.

Mr. Maude: I have been asked to reply.

I am pleased to say that 5 November and the preceding three weeks seem to have been relatively quiet this year. I hope that this will be reflected in a fall in the number of injuries. However, I have seen reports of a number of incidents which confirm that the problem of hooligans misusing fireworks persists. Our response must be vigorous enforcement of the law in this area.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Credit Facilities

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking in co-operation with the credit industry to control the indiscriminate sale of credit facilities; and if Her Majesty's Government will give publicity to the hazards of borrowing money.

Mr. Maude: Comprehensive controls already exist under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 which ensure that consumers entering into credit agreements are fully informed about their potential commitments and have appropriate protection against unfair or oppressive lending practices. Regulations under the Act impose controls on advertisements to ensure that they are not deceptive or misleading and the Act prohibits the sending of unsolicited credit tokens (including credit cards) to consumers and the sending of credit circulars to minors. In addition, the Director General of Fair Trading has a statutory responsibility under the Act to provide advice and information to the public on credit matters and his office has issued a number of helpful publications which are widely available through trading standards departments, libraries and citizens advice bureaux.

While individuals who freely enter into credit agreements must accept responsibility for their decisions, I accept that lenders, too, have a duty to lend responsibly and I believe this is being increasingly recognised by the industry. I am encouraged by a number of recent developments, including the adoption by the Finance Houses Association of a code of practice, which demonstrate a commitment to responsible lending.

Post Office

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what level of investment is proposed in the Post Office for the years ending March 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Butcher: The Post Office (excluding Girobank, which is treated as a separate nationalised industry for the purposes of monitoring and control) has been given a capital allocation of £135 million for the year ending March 1988. The allocation for the year ending March 1989 will not be given until publication of the forthcoming public expenditure White Paper. But, as recorded in Cm. 56-II, for planning purposes capital spending of £123 million has been assumed.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representation he has received about the level of service provided by the Post Office.

Mr. Butcher: Since the election we have received some 70 such representations from hon. Members and others.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what funding is available to the Post Office for investment in new equipment; and how this compares with 1979 in real terms.

Mr. Butcher: The Post Office (excluding Girobank, which is treated as a separate nationalised industry for the purposes of monitoring and control) has been given a capital allocation of £135 million for 1987-88. In real terms this is some 22 per cent. higher than the Post Office's capital spending of £64 million in 1979-80.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how many full and part-time staff are employed by the Post Office; and how this compares with 1979;

(2) by how much the first and second class post has increased in size since 1979.

Mr. Butcher: I refer my hon. Friend to the Post Office report and accounts 1986-87, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what are the pay scales currently in force in the Post Office; and how that compares with 1979 in real terms;

(2) what action has been taken to introduce modernisation in the Post Office since 1979.

Mr. Butcher: This is an operational matter for the Post Office Board.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he is satisfied with the performance of the Post Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The Post Office has made creditable and satisfactory progress in recent years in many aspects of its performance. But further improvement is necessary, particularly with regard to the quality of the services provided to its customers.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to ensure that the United Kingdom obtains the maximum 19.3 per cent. of European funds which is available under the 1987 European regional development fund.

Mr. Atkins: The United Kingdom is, by Community regulation, guaranteed 14.50 per cent. of the European regional development fund, provided it submits enough qualifying applications. The upper limit of the United Kingdom's share is 19.31 per cent. In 1985, before Portugal and Spain joined the Community, the corresponding figures were 21.42 per cent. and 28.56 per cent.

Similar provisions, with different numbers, apply to the other member states. Since the sum of the current guaranteed lower limits is 88.63 per cent., and of the upper limits 117.09 per cent., the average outcome is bound to be nearer the lower limits.

The limits are applied to commitments over periods of three years, currently 1985-87. The United Kingdom has applications with the Commission to a value of over the upper limit applicable for this period.

The allocation of the fund, within the limits, is the responsibility of the European Commission under the terms of the regulation. The Commission is well aware of our interest in a good share. Other member states have similar interests.

Fireworks

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received regarding the sale and use of fireworks; and if he proposes to introduce any new regulations to govern these matters.

Mr. Maude: I have received fewer representations than usual this year about the sale and use of fireworks. Most concern children throwing them about and frightening people. The law against selling fireworks to the under-16s and letting them off in the streets was considerably strengthened by the Fireworks (Safety) Regulations 1986 and the Consumer Protection Act 1987. There may, therefore, be more prosecutions for such offences this year and I expect that this will lead in due course to a reduction in the level of abuse.

South Africa

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the employment of commercial agents by British companies in South Africa.

Mr. Alan Clark: Within the limits of our international commitments, the full range of the British Overseas Trade Board's services is available to British firms wishing to export to South Africa. Advice continues to be available under the board's export representative service.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy concerning the export of security equipment from the United Kingdom to South Africa.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have nothing to add to my reply that I gave to the right hon. Gentleman on 10 November 1987.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take action to prevent Racal plc from supplying components to its subsidiary, Decca components, in South Africa.

Mr. Alan Clark: No. Racal is in close touch with my Department concerning its activities in South Africa, and has secured the necessary export licences where appropriate.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take action to prevent the export of Land Rovers to South Africa for use by the South African military.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave him on Tuesday 10 November 1987.

Exports (Latin America)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) which were the top 10 Latin American importers of British manufactured goods for each year since 1975;

(2) if he will list, for each year since 1975, the volume and value in pounds sterling of the top 10 British manufactured goods imported by Latin American countries.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information is available only in value terms for exports of manufactured goods. The available information is given in the tables:

Copyright

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he proposes to take to prevent the copying of copyright material on tape and gramophone record.

Mr. Butcher: The right to prevent the copying of copyright material is a private right to be exercised by the owner of the right. Moreover, the unauthorised production of copies for the purpose of trade is a criminal offence for which severe penalties are provided. The Copyright, Designs and Patents Bill will maintain this level of protection.

European Space Agency

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will report on the outcome of the European Space Agency ministerial meeting at The Hague on 9 and 10 November.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made today.

Thanet

Mr. Gale: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assistance he intends to give the Thanet travel-to-work area in recognition of its serious economic problems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Subject to the approval of the European Commission, it is my intention to make available up to £500,000 for the provision of business improvement services in the Thanet travel-to-work area. Support under the scheme will be available for a period of up to three years or until the funds run out, whichever is the sooner.

Property

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the properties owned by the Duchy of Lancaster.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The properties owned by the Duchy or in which the Duchy has an interest are as follows:

(a) Estates, predominantly agricultural in nature in the following counties.

County	Approximate acreage
Northamptonshire and Lincolnshire	2,865
Staffordshire, Cheshire and Shropshire	13,353
Lancashire	10,920
Yorkshire	9,318
	36,456

In addition, the Duchy owns some 15,000 acres of moorland in north Yorkshire and south Wales, most of which are subject to common rights.

The estates include 175 agricultural tenancies and 3,145 acres of woodland.

(b) The freehold of properties in the Manor of Savoy bounded by Lancaster place, the Embankment, Savoy hill and Strand (including the Savoy chapel) and a building at 2-4 Lancaster place to 137 Strand. A substantial part of these properties is let on building leases or equivalent terms, having between 31 and 92 years unexpired.

Including the Savoy chapel and its garden (from which no revenue is derived) the acreage totals approximately 2·25.

(c) Miscellaneous commercial properties in Harrogate which include five shops, one hotel and a house now converted to offices. These properties, in the main, are let on occupational leases. There is also the remainder of a residential estate developed over a period of 100 years or so producing 36 ground rents. The freehold reversions are sold to the lessees on terms which follow the provisions of the Leasehold Reform Acts.

(d) Single holdings (eg not forming part of an estate) of commercial property in Leeds, Leicester, Bradford, Lewes and London (other than the Savoy estate). Except for four properties in London which are let on ground rents, these are let on occupational leases.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the items of land and property in the possession of the Duchy of Lancaster which are leased, giving in each case the financial benefit to the Duchy.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: All properties owned by the Duchy are let under lease (unless temporarily vacant pending re-letting) except for properties occupied by the Duchy in the course of managing its own business, and for woodlands.

The total number of lettings (including wayleaves and minor interests) exceeds 850.

The gross income before the deduction of repairing and insuring costs borne by the Duchy, and before management costs, may be summarised as follows:

Agricultural estates, miscellaneous residential lettings; mineral and sporting rents	1,860,167
Commercial properties, whether let on occupational leases or ground rents (including those located within the agricultural estates)	1,055,430
	2,915,597

The figures are as audited to 29 September 1986. The total unaudited figure to 29 September 1987 is £3,054,203.

Commercial Operations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the estimated financial gain to the Duchy of Lancaster from repealing the restrictions on the commercial operations of the Duchy.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The change in legislation envisaged in the Duchy of Lancaster Bill would not of itself create an increase in revenue, as the increase in value of a site could be realised by the sale of the site, and reinvestment of the proceeds. What the proposed legislation makes possible is the retention of the site and the enhancement of the value by way of increased rental from the site, rather than by sale and reinvestment.

Regional Aid

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list for each region of England payments made for (a) regional development grants and (b) regional selective assistance in 1986-87 and so far in 1987-88.

Mr. Atkins: Payments of regional development grant[1] made in each region of England in 1986-87 and 1987-88 to date were:

Region	1986-87 £ million	[3]1987-88 £ million
North East	89·8	33·4
North West	113·7	28·4
Yorkshire and Humberside	27·1	11·4
East Midlands	8·4	5·6
South West	15·4	2·5
TOTAL	254·4	81·3

Payments of regional selective assistance[2] in the same periods were:

Region	1986-87 £ million	[3]1987-88 £ million
North-East	18·5	9·0
North-West	19·2	6·2
Yorkshire and Humberside	10·0	4·3
East Midlands	2·2	0·3
West Midlands	9·9	8·1
South-West	5·2	0·8
TOTAL	65·0	28·7

Press Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his reply of 3 November, to what factor he attributes the increase between 1983-84 and 1984-85 in his Department's expenditure on press advertising.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 9 November 1987]: In any one year the Department of Trade and Industry undertakes a wide range of advertising projects. These have differing durations and may span more than one financial year. Consequently the sums spent on promoting individual activities, and the total amount, can vary from one year to the next.

Between 1983-84 and 1984-85 there was increased expenditure on services for small firms, trade promotion, and inward investment, partly offset by a lower level of spend on high technology.

In addition, I regret that there was a transposition of digits in my answer of 3 November. The expenditure for 1984-85 should read £2,081,883 and not £2,810,883.

Eastern Bloc (Telephone Calls)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will name and give the precise location of the United States facility in the area of Harrogate through which all telephone calls to Eastern bloc countries are routed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have been asked to reply.

There is a United States communications facility near Harrogate at Menwith hill but I am not prepared to comment in detail on its operational role.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENTS

Crown Agents

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will list those countries which are using or seeking to use the services of the Crown Agents.

Mr. Eggar: A list of principals of the Crown Agents is given on pages 41 to 45 of its 1986 annual report and accounts, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it would not be appropriate to refer to current negotiations for the use of the Crown Agents' services.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether he has any proposals to change (a) the management and (b) the future status of the Crown Agents;

(2) whether his Department is involved in any discussions about the future of the Crown Agents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have no new proposals to announce. The Government regularly consider the future development of the Crown Agents in the course of examining its annual strategic plan and their annual report and accounts.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Radioactivity

Mr. Gary Waller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what monitoring of radioactivity levels was carried out in the Craven and Ilkley area of north and west Yorkshire in the period following the Chernobyl disaster; whether any precautionary action was taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In the period following the Chernobyl accident, the Ministry sampled widely in England; in north and west Yorkshire, 181 and 36 samples respectively were taken in 1986. Of these, the samples listed in the table were taken from the Craven and Bradford districts (the latter includes Ilkley). None of these results gave cause for concern so precautionary action was limited to continuing low-level monitoring in these counties.

However, I have been aware of recent press comments focusing on a small area around Skipton and Ilkley, and have as a precaution caused further sampling to be carried out in these localities. I reported the initial results of this exercise to my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry) on 9 November, at column 63, and I undertook in that reply to publish all results in detail when complete and deposit them in the Library of the House.

Information Services

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost of maintaining the information division in his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Information is not readily available in the form requested. Expenditure by my Department, including information division, on press liaison, information policy, technical visual aids and publications, as shown in the Ministry's top management information system (MINIM), is as follows:

	£ million
1987-88	2·7
1986-87	3·0
1985-86	3·5
1984-85	3·2

Expenditure for previous years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by grade the personnel currently employed in the information division of his Department.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The complement for information division for (a) press liaison, information policy, technical visual aids and publication duties; and (b) library services, is as follows:

Poultry

Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table showing the quarterly figures for the last two years and annual figures for the preceeding five years for the number of imports of poultry into the United Kingdom from each of the member countries of the EEC.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is given in the table. Figures for 1980 are not readily available.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which countries have been granted licences for the import of poultry into the United Kingdom in the last year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: General import licences exist for the importation into the United Kingdom of live poultry from the Republic of Ireland, the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands. Imports from elsewhere must comply with animal health conditions agreed between Her Majesty's Government and the authorities of the country of origin, and enter the United Kingdom under specific licences issued to individual importers. In the last year, during which no new agreements on animal health conditions have been reached with any country, specific licences have been issued for imports from Canada, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Sweden and the United States of America.

THE ARTS

Scottish Arts Council

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will list the sub-committees of the Scottish Arts Council; and if he will list (a) the male and (b) female members of each of these sub-committees, giving their names, qualifications and the length of their service on the council.

Mr. Luce: There are four women members of the Scottish Arts Council: Olga Clayton, Elaine McDonald, OBE, Jan McDonald and Ann Turner Thomson. No formal qualifications are necessary. Members are selected because they have expertise or interest in a particular field.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Minister for the Arts what are the names and qualifications of the women members appointed to the Scottish Arts Council; and if he will list the criteria used in the selection process.

Mr. Luce: The seven committees of the Scottish Arts Council, with their members and length of service, are as follows. No formal qualifications are required.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy in the next Finance Bill to extinguish the differential charge to taxation resulting from lawfully married couples paying more in taxation than two single persons cohabiting on identical individual and unit incomes.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Green Paper "The Reform of Personal Taxation" (Cmnd. 9756), published in March 1986, discussed the so-called "tax penalties" on marriage and how they might be removed under a new system of independent taxation of husband and wife with transferable allowances. I announced in the Budget debate this year that the Government would not be going ahead with transferable allowances at this stage but would explore the possibility of a halfway house to the approach in the Green Paper. I made it clear that the Government consider it important to remove the tax penalties on marriage.

BP Shares

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultations were held with BP over the decision to establish a floor price for its rights issue shares sold to the public; and whether BP is to be asked to make any contribution to the cost of repurchase of those shares.

Mr. Norman Lamont: BP was consulted on what action should be taken in relation to the offers, in accordance with clause 8·01 of the underwriting agreement. The arrangements for financing the repurchase of any partly paid BP shares were set out in my answer to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 5 November at column 851.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultations he held with the Bank of England about the floor price proposal for BP shares.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my right hon. Friend's statement of 29 October.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his reply of 9 November, if he will break down the figure of £5·9 million spent on newspaper advertising in relation to the British Petroleum share issue by individual newspaper.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No. The information requested is commercially confidential.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what impact there would be in a full year on the revenue from stamp duty if (a) all Government and local authority bonds were included within the tax net and (b) the rates of stamp duty were all halved.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The combined effect of the changes would be a reduction in stamp duty revenue of about one fifth. This estimate assumes that transfers of new and existing Government and local authority bonds would be subject to the same rate of duty as transfers of stocks and shares and it does not allow for the effect on prices and the volume of transactions resulting from the changes.

Central Office of Information

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list by grade the personnel currently employed in the Central Office of Information.

Mr. Brooke: Personnel[1] employed in the Central Office of Information as at 1 November 1987 are as follows:

	Number
Grade 3	1
Grade 4	1
Grade 5	6
Grade 6	15
Grade 7	32
Senior Information Officer	96½
Information Officer	206½
Assistant Information Officer	39
Senior Executive Officer	12½
Higher Executive Officer	24½
Executive Officer	46
Photographic Grades	15
Librarian Grades	2
Typing and Secretarial Grades	57½
Reprographics Grades	11
Administrative Officer	147
Administrative Assistant	25½
Paperkeeping, Messengerial and Security Officer Grades	49½
Telephonist	3
Industrial Grades	15
Total	805½

[1] Fractions represent part-time staff.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of maintaining the Central Office of Information in each year since 1979.

Mr. Brooke: The running costs (on an outturn basis) for the Central Office of Information for these years were as follows:

Year	£ million
1979-80	13·6
1980-81	16·5
1981-82	17·7
1982-83	17·6
1983-84	18·8
1984-85	18·2
1985-86	18·1
1986-87	17·7

Information Services

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of maintaining the information division within Her Majesty's Treasury in each year since 1979.

Mr. Brooke: The figures are as follows:

Year	Total £000
1982-83	404
1983-84	456
1984-85	508
1985-86	524
1986-87	535

This expenditure has been incurred by the information divisions in the central Treasury and in the central computer and telecommunications agency (part of Her Majesty's Treasury). Comparable figures for the years 1979-80 to 1981-82 are not available because of machinery of Government changes.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to widen the criteria under which taxpayers have access to independent statutory appeals against the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Lawson: I have no plans to do so. Taxpayers already have a statutory right to appeal to the independent appeal commissioners against their tax assessment if they think it is incorrect. Where a taxpayer's complaint concerns maladministration by the Inland Revenue, it is open to an hon. Member to ask the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration to investigate it.

Mr. Raison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to how many individuals the Inland Revenue sends notices of tax coding at their homes.

Mr. Lawson: I regret that the information is not available.

The total number of coding notices issued in the current year is likely to be around 23 million. The number of individuals receiving them, however, will be fewer. Many employees will not need a coding notice because their affairs are relatively straightforward and Budget changes can be automatically reflected in their coding. Other employees may receive several notices in a year if, for example, their circumstances are more complex or change during the year. A small proportion of notices are sent to the employee at his employer's address.

Developing Countries (Tax Relief)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he is giving to allowing tax relief on provisions made by banks against loans to developing countries; which banks have applied for such assistance; what amounts are involved in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 November 1987]: Tax relief due to banks in respect of loans which cannot be recovered in full is governed by the ordinary tax rules which apply to any trader who gives credit in the course of his business. Because of the rules of confidentiality which govern taxpayers' affairs, I am not in a position to provide information about individual banks.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the studies, with their precise remits, that he, or Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, has commissioned on value added tax and revenues from value added tax; and when he expects them to report to him.

Mr. Lilley: The Economic and Social Research Council, together with the Treasury and other Departments, under the auspices of the Public Finance Consortium, in 1986 commissioned two research projects relating to value added tax. One is being undertaken by Professor Ulph at the University of Bristol; the second is being undertaken by Professor Blundell at University College London.

The aim of Professor Ulph's project is to improve our ability to forecast receipts from value added tax using aggregate data. The project is due to be completed in June 1988.

The aim of Professor Blundell's project is to use micro-economic data to model indirect taxes, both excise duties and value added tax. The funding by the Public Finance Consortium ended in September 1987 but the Treasury and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise have provided additional finance so that the project will now be completed in September 1988.

As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer told the House on 29 April, at column 329, these projects were selected following an advertisement in The Guardian in March 1985 inviting applications for research proposals on indirect taxes.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's policy towards extending value added tax, or any attempts to extend value added tax, to cover newspapers, books and periodicals.

Mr. Lilley: Decisions on changes in taxation are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Budget judgment.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assumptions he has made about (a) extensions to value added tax and (b) rises in excise duties when he compiled his forecast for inflation in 1988.

Mr. Lilley: The forecast in the Autumn Statement makes the conventional assumptions that excise duties are revalorised in the Budget in line with RPI inflation in the previous year and that no changes are made in the coverage or rates of value added tax.

Government Data Network

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a copy of the memorandum of agreement to be sent to the groups tendering for the contract to run the proposed new Government data network; and when he hopes to make a statement on the outcome of the tendering process.

Mr. Brooke: Memorandums of agreement have yet to be finalised with the three consortia bidding for the Government data network contract. Each memorandum is different and will reflect the solution being offered by a consortium. Publication would be a breach of commercial confidentiality.

I expect to be in a position to announce the outcome of the tendering process early next year. The precise timing depends on the speed with which the Government and consortia are able to complete negotiations and on the content of the tenders. A decision on whether or not to preceed will be taken after tenders have been evaluated.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps have been taken to assess the feasibility and costs of training civil servants to operate and manage the proposed new Government data network; for what reasons the Government have rejected this option; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Given the general scarcity of networking skills and experience, the Government are seeking bids from consortia with a proven track record in data communications as the best practical way to provide a GDN service quickly and reliably.

If the project goes ahead the successful contractor will be expected to operate the network management centre. The staffing and management of the application service centres will be the responsibility of Departments using GDN.

Tax Allowances

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the amount of tax allowances against United Kingdom income tax or corporation tax given to (a) individual persons and (b) other bodies carrying on a trade or business for the last five years for which figures are available; what proportion of these allowances and the aggregate amount was deductible only by virtue of it relating to expenditure on (i) overseas customers and (ii) employees; and what amounts were in each case claimed for but not allowed.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A table of the estimated cost of tax allowances and reliefs for 1986-87 is given in table 2.29 "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1987-88 to 1989-90" (Cm. 56). Corresponding figures for earlier years were published in previous public expenditure White Papers. Information to provide the detailed breakdown requested is not available centrally and it would not be possible to collect it without disproportionate cost.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the percentage increase in the number of unemployed people in the United Kingdom since May 1979.

Mr. Lee: Between May 1979 and 8 October 1987 the number of unemployed claimants, in the United Kingdom, excluding school leavers and adjusted for discontinuities and seasonality, increased by 135·7 per cent.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will publish figures for each year since 1974 showing unemployment totals both numerically and as a percentage of the total work force in each of the London boroughs of Southwark, Tower Hamlets and Newham;

(2) if he will publish, for each year since the establishment of the London Docklands Development Corporation, unemployment totals both numerically and as a percentage of the total work force for that part of each of the London boroughs of Southwark, Tower Hamlets and Newham that is in the London Docklands Development Corporation;

(3) if he will publish figures for each year since the establishment of the London Docklands Development Corporation showing unemployment totals both numerically and as a percentage of the total work force in the London Docklands Development Corporation.

Mr. Lee: Following is the available information. The table shows the numbers of unemployed claimants in the London boroughs of Southwark, Tower Hamlets and Newham, the areas within those boroughs which are also in the London docklands area, and the London docklands area as a whole, at September of each year since 1983. Unemployment rates are not calculated for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas. These figures are derived from the ward-based system and are available only from June 1983. The comparison is affected by the change in the compilation of the unemployment statistics in March 1986.

Availability for Work

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received regarding the operation of the availability for work rules.

Mr. Lee: I continue to receive periodic representations on the procedures which operate in unemployment benefit offices to ensure that claimants to unemployment benefit satisfy the availability for work rules. These rules, which have been adopted by successive Governments, and which have not changed in recent years, require that all claimants to unemployed benefit must be available for work.

Secret Ballots

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of representations he has received opposing the secret balloting of trade union members for election of union officials and before strikes.

Mr. Nicholls: Individual responses to the Green Paper "Trade Unions and their Members" are treated in confidence by my Department. Of the 54 responses to the proposal to require all political fund ballots and elections to principal executive committees to be by the fully postal method only, only 19 expressed disapproval. Of 55 comments on the proposal to give trade union members a right to restrain their union from authorising or endorsing industrial action without a secret ballot only 14 were against.

Departmental Statistics

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list by grade the personnel currently employed within the information division of his Department.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is as follows:

Fit for Work Award

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the names of the employees who won the most recent Manpower Services Commission fit for work award.

Mr. Lee: The fit for work award is for employers and the 1987 winners will be announced on 9 December.

Tourism (Sports Facilities)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on measures to encourage the availability to tourists of all-weather sports facilities.

Mr. Moynihan: I have been asked to reply. The Government fully recognise the contribution sport and recreation can make to tourism. Public sector sports facilities, including those grant-aided by the Sports Council, are available to all members of the public, including tourists. Numbers of all-weather sports facilities have increased in the last 10 years and information on such facilities is made freely available to tourists. The tourist boards are also able to encourage provision of recreational facilities used by tourists through the schemes run under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969.

Miss V. A. Culnane

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when Miss Veronica A. Culnane, formerly employed in the St. Marylebone unemployment benefit office, will receive the 18½ days salary in lieu of annual leave, due to be paid to her by the end of October.

Mr. Lee: Miss Culnane was paid her entitlement on 10 November 1987.

Homeless Persons

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidance his Department gives to local authorities concerning the resettlement of homeless persons outside their own borough in relation to their employment prospects.

Mr. Lee: My Department, principally through the employment service jobcentre network, is able to offer advice on employment prospects in particular localities to local authorities and to other enquiries, including employers and jobseekers. This includes providing information about jobs available locally and in other areas, advice on general employment matters and Department of Employment and Manpower Service Commission programmes and provision.

Settle-Carlisle Corridor

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total cost of the study on the Settle-Carlisle corridor by J. Jarvis and Sons plc; who is funding the study and by what amount in addition to the Manpower Services Commission; whether J. Jarvis and Sons plc was chosen by competitive tender for the task; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The feasibility study on the Settle-Carlisle corridor followed discussions between the Ribblesdale trust, J. Jarvis and Sons plc and MSC. The study is being jointly funded by MSC and J. Jarvis. The total cost will be in excess of £10,000 to which MSC is contributing £5,000, the balance being met by J. Jarvis.

The purpose of the study is to see what opportunities there are to mount projects in the area whether under the community programme or other programmes. Once the study has been completed MSC will decide which if any of the projects will be undertaken and will invite a range of sponsors to discuss how those projects can best be taken forward.

In view of the interest of the hon. Member I have asked officials from my regional office in Leeds to meet with him to inform him of progress on the study.

Factories Inspectorate

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what instructions are given to the factories inspectorate about dealings with (a) hon. Members and (b) the press.

Mr. Nicholls: Civil servants in HSE are subject to the Official Secrets Act and to instructions which guide staff as to their conduct. The general principles are that the relation of trust between civil servants and Ministers must be maintained and that civil servants should not engage in activities likely to call their political impartiality into question. Area directors of the factory inspectorate are free to respond directly to Members of Parliament on specific matters affecting their constituencies. HSE staff deal with the press through the HSE press office or through the regional offices of the Central Office of Information.

Community Programme

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether supermarkets will be able to offer community programme places to the unemployed under the new benefits plus scheme.

Mr. Lee: No. However, managing agents may wish to arrange work placements for their trainees with local employers, including those in the retail sector, as part of their personal development and where this would improve their chances of securing a job.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he is yet ready to announce the level of the premium entitlement to be paid to participants on the new community programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: No.

Information Division

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the cost of maintaining the information division within his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lee: Separate salary and other staff costs relating specifically to my information division are not available prior to 1985. For the financial years since then the information is as follows:

1985-86	470,917
1986-87	592,414

Pesticides

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research has been carried out into the effect of pesticides on the health of agricultural workers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive has commissioned three research projects into agricultural pesticides and human health. There is an extensive scientific literature relevant to the subject, both from this country and from abroad, and the executive keeps in close touch with research developments.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to establish a reward of money owed to the London residuary body in respect of unsettled Greater London council accounts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My Department settles accounts once it is satisfied that payment is due. If the hon. Member is aware of any unsettled accounts in respect of the Greater London council I shall be happy to look further into the matter.

Holiday Advertisements

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he is taking steps to ensure that travel companies should be required to include in the description and specifications of holiday hotels and resorts details of the noise pollution levels of each hotel advertised, details of adjacent noise levels from neighbouring hotels and of noise enforcement practices operated by the local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I have been asked to reply.

The content of holiday promotional material is already subject to the requirements of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968, to the British code of advertising practice and to the relevant provisions of the tour operators' code of conduct administered by the Association of British Travels Agents. There are no plans to introduce specific requirements for disclosure of noise levels in hotels or at resorts.

Child Labour

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will give the number of cases brought to court in the last 10 years regarding the illegal use of child labour and the number of cases resulting in conviction on the same basis; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what evidence he has of the incidence of abuse of child labour in the United Kingdom; whether Her Majesty's Government have any forthcoming proposals regarding this matter; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I have been asked to reply.

The available figures are as follows:

(a) Industrial undertakings

Prosecutions by the Health and Safety Executive under section 1 of the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act 1920.

	Information laid	Convictions
1981	5	[1]5
1982	4	4
1983	3	3
1984	6	6
1985	8	[1,2]6

Note: Figures prior to 1981 are not readily available.

[1] One withdrawn.

[2] One dismissed.

(b) Agriculture

Between 1977 and 1986, under legislation which prohibits the employment or involvement of children in certain agricultural operations, 250 informations were laid resulting in 241 convictions. It is thought that a significant number of the informations laid were under the Agriculture (Avoidance of Accidents to Children) Regulations 1958 which apply to all children under the age of 13 years whether they are employed or not.

(c) Non-industrial undertakings

Figures (may be incomplete) notified by the Home Office for prosecutions and convictions under Sections 18, 19 and 20 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933.

	Information laid	Convictions
1979	23	18
1980	26	25
1981	24	22
1982	17	16
1983	12	12
1984	12	9

Legislation prohibits the employment of children under 13 and restricts the part-time employment of children between the ages of 13 and 16 and gives substantial powers to those responsible for enforcement of these safeguards. Children in this age group may work only to the extent that their health and welfare and education do not suffer. Under the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 and byelaws approved by the Secretary of State, local education authorities are empowered to enforce restrictions on the hours and occupations in which children may work, and under the Education Act 1944 to prohibit or restrict the employment of any child.

The Health and Safety Executive has powers under the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act 1920 to take immediate action if a child is found to be working illegally in any industrial undertaking and has powers to enforce health and safety legislation which prohibits the employment or involvement of children in certain agricultural operations.

Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimates he has as to the average weekly take-home pay of dockers employed in each port who are employed in the dock labour scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: The attached list, provided by the National Dock Labour Board, shows the average weekly gross payment, by port, of registered dock workers for the second quarter (April-June) of 1987. Figures for take-home pay are not available.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Security Conference (Vienna)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement of progress on the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe review conference at Vienna.

Mr. Mellor: Some progress has been made in negotiations on a final document, including in the areas of military security and economic cooperation. But movement on human rights and contacts has been painfully slow, despite protestations of good faith by the Eastern side. We are making it clear that without adequate progress in these areas there can be no agreement at Vienna. We wish to bring the meeting to a substantial and balanced conclusion by Christmas, if at all possible, but are prepared to go on longer if constructive work remains to be done.

Fiji

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what grounds Her Majesty's Government have recognised Fiji as an independent republic.

Mr. Eggar: We recognise states not Governments. The question of recognition therefore did not arise when Her Majesty's The Queen accepted the governor-general's resignation.

Anglo-Irish Council

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the meetings of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council held since January 1986, giving the purpose and results of each such meeting.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: There have been no meetings of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council since January 1986.

Tibet

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take up in the United Nations the plight of the Tibetan people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We believe that the best way in which we can help the Tibetan people is by encouraging the Chinese Government to maintain their programme of economic and political reform.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's ambassador to Peking or any of his staff have visited Tibet in the current year.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's ambassador in Peking has not visited Tibet in the current year. Seven members of Her Majesty's Embassy have made working or recreational visits to Tibet this year.

Chile

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made representations to the Chilean Government over the continuing detention of opposition leaders in the approach to the plebiscite.

Mr. Eggar: Appropriate representations have been made on a number of occasions.

African National Congress

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report all press statements released by his Department in connection with his Department's meeting with Mr. Tambo, the president of the African National Congress.

Mrs. Chalker: The press statement issued after my right hon. and learned Friend's meeting with Mr. Tambo in September 1986 read as follows:

> "Mr. Oliver Tambo, President of the ANC, called on the Foreign Secretary at Chevening at 9.00 a.m. on 20 September. The meeting lasted almost two hours.
>
> Sir Geoffrey Howe and Mr. Tambo had a frank and serious discussion about the current situation in South Africa and the prospects for a peaceful setlement.
>
> The Foreign Secretary emphasised the British Government's total opposition to the system of apartheid and our wish to see rapid, fundamental but peaceful change in South Africa. He emphasised that the British Government utterly rejected violence as a means of achieving change. Sir Geoffrey also made it clear that the Twelve member states of the European Community are united in their determination to do everything possible to promote a peaceful settlement in South Africa through dialogue and a suspension of violence on all sides."

The statement issued after my own meeting with Mr. Tambo in June 1986 read:

> "At the British Government's invitation, Mr. Oliver Tambo, the President of the ANC, Mr. Thabo Mbeki and Mr. Aziz Pahad called on the Minister of State at 6.30 p.m. on 24 June for an exchange of views on the situation in South Africa.
>
> The meeting which lasted for more than one hour, was useful and candid.
> Mrs. Chalker emphasised the British Government's continuing commitment to the early and complete elimination of apartheid. She expressed grave concern at the continuing violence and repression in South Africa, including yesterday's bombing outrage. Violence could never lead to a solution to South Africa's problems. The way ahead had to be through dialogue and negotiation in the context of a suspension of violence on all sides".

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of all meetings between Ministers and officials with representatives of the African National Congress since 1 January 1986, including when and where such meetings took place and in what capacity British Ministers and officials were acting.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend met the President of the African National Congress, Mr. Oliver Tambo, on 20 September 1986 at Chevening when he was President of the Foreign Affairs Council of the European Community. I met Mr. Tambo in London on 24 June 1986. There have been contacts with the African National Congress at official level from time to time in London and abroad as and when necessary.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will describe in what capacity he has met the president of the African National Congress, Mr. Oliver Tambo; whether the African National Congress was advised in what capacity he was meeting Mr. Tambo; whether the press was advised in what capacity he was meeting Mr. Tambo; and to what extent the members of the EEC Council of Ministers were consulted in advance of the meeting with Mr. Tambo.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend met Mr. Tambo when he was President of the Foreign Affairs Council of the European Community. He also took the opportunity to make Her Majesty's Government's view clear to Mr. Tambo. His approach to Mr. Tambo was set unambiguously in the context of his mission to southern Africa which was undertaken at the request of the European Community Heads of Government. His colleagues on the Foreign Affairs Council were fully aware of his plans. The press release issued by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office after the meeting made it clear that my right hon. and learned Friend spoke to Mr. Tambo on behalf of the European Community.

South Africa

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the United States State Department's report submitted to the United States Congress on 1 April naming Britain as one of seven countries involved in supplying arms to South Africa, he will make a statement on British compliance with the arms embargo against South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: Our record on compliance with the United Nations arms embargo is good. As we understand the report made clear, we diligently enforce the arms embargo. This is demonstrated by the record of successful action in recent years against British companies who have been in breach of the United Kingdom legislation through which the embargo is implemented. In several cases, prison sentences as well as fines have resulted.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to prevent the subsidiaries of British companies operating in South Africa and Namibia from violating the arms embargo imposed against South Africa by the United Nations.

Mrs. Chalker: We will initiate investigations into allegations against companies within the United Kingdom's jurisdiction of violations of United Kingdom law implementing the arms embargo.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make representations to the South African Government to prevent the execution of Mojalefa Sefatna, Reid Mokoena, Oupa Diniso, Duma Khumalo, Thearas Ramashamola and Francis Mokhesi.

Mrs. Chalker: The appeals of the so-called "Sharpeville Six" were heard on 2 and 3 November. The court reserved judgment. It would be inappropriate for us to make representations until the outcome of the appeal process is known.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to make illegal the export of safety and security equipment to key points designated by the National Keypoints Act in South Africa.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have been asked to reply.

No.

Syria

Mr. Leadbitter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy not to sanction further European Economic Community contacts with President Assad's regime in Syria so long as human rights abuses, as high-lighted by the recent Amnesty International report, persist.

Mr. Mellor: We are studying the Amnesty International report carefully and drawing the attention of our partners in the Twelve to the very serious allegations in it.

Information Services

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list by grade the personnel currently employed in the information branch within his Department.

Mr. Eggar: The personnel currently employed in the information department of the diplomatic wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office are:

Grade	Staff
DS4	1
HCS6	1
DS5	10
DS6	9
DS7	11
DS9	6
Clerical support	13
Secretarial support	5
Total	56

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of maintaining the information department within his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: The costs of maintaining the information department within the diplomatic wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office have been:

1983-84	1,284,000
1984-85	1,046,000
1985-86	1,341,000
1986-87	1,427,000

Costs prior to 1983-84 are not available.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list by grade the personnel currently employed in the news department within his Department.

Mr. Eggar: The personnel currently employed in the news department of the diplomatic wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office are:

Grade	Staff
DS4	1
DS5	5
DS6	2
DS7E	2
Clerical support	3
Secretarial support	3
Total	16

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of maintaining the news department within his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: The costs of maintaining the news department within the diplomatic wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office have been:

1983-84	453,000
1984-85	425,000
1985-86	468,000
1986-87	502,000

Costs prior to 1983-84 are not available.

Belau

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise in the United Nations Security Council the United States plan to use one third of the land area of Belau for military facilities in return for aid, in contravention of the United Nations trusteeship terms governing the United States relationship with Belau (Palau); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Under the terms of the compact of free association agreed between the United States and Palau (Belau), the United States is to remain responsible for Palau's defence. We understand, however, that the United States Government have stated that they have no intention at present of situating military bases in Palau. The levels of United States economic assistance to Palau were freely negotiated and agreed by the United States and Palau. In these circumstances we see no need to raise the matter at the Security Council.

Military Cathode Ray Tubes

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will use his powers under the United Nations prohibited transactions order to prevent the manufacture of military cathode ray tubes by National Regunning Ltd. under licence from Thorn EMI.

Mrs. Chalker: We are investigating certain allegations which have been made in this connection.

Flexitank

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will use his powers under the United Nations prohibited transactions order to prevent the supply through BTR Sarmcol of the BTR Flexitank to the South African defence forces.

Mrs. Chalker: We are investigating certain allegations which have been made in this connection.

BBC (External Services)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the effects of the Autumn Statement on the grant-in-aid for the external services of the British Broadcasting Corporation, indicating separately the effect for the monitoring service at Caversham park, Reading.

Mr. Eggar: It has been agreed in the 1987 public expenditure survey that the grants-in-aid of the BBC external services for capital and current expenditure on broadcasting and monitoring in the next three years will be £112·5 million in 1988-89, £115·9 million in 1989-90 and £122·9 million in 1990-91. The element for current expenditure represents an annual increase of some 5 per cent. on the 1987-88 provision. The allocation of current expenditure between broadcasting and monitoring has yet to be finalised and will be shown in the Supply Estimates to be published in March 1988.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will set out in tabular form for each of the last five financial years the grant-in-aid from his Department to the monitoring service of the British Broadcasting Corporation at Caversham park, Reading.

Mr. Eggar: The table sets out the BBC external services' grant-in-aid provision for the monitoring service from 1983-84 to 1987-88:

	Current £	Capital £
1983-84	5,749,000	539,000
1984-85	5,936,000	856,000
1985-86	6,514,000	2,393,000
1986-87	6,703,000	5,820,000
1987-88	8,090,000	3,487,000

Mr. Arthur Gilbert

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a response to the original letter from the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth addressed to the Baroness Young and dated 13 April and to a subsequent letter from the hon. Member to the Lord Glenarthur and dated 3 July, referring to Arthur Gilbert of 38 Northampton lane, Dunchurch, Rugby, will be forthcoming.

Mr. Eggar: I regret the delay which was the result of an administration oversight: a full reply to my hon. Friend concerning his constituent Mr. Arthur Gilbert of 38 Northampton lane, Dunchurch, Rugby, will be forthcoming in the very near future.

Intermediate Nuclear Forces

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the removal of American and Soviet intermediate-range nuclear forces.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) on 29 October.

Food (Radiation)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Ministers' meeting held on Sunday 8 November on the subject of radiation levels in food.

Mrs. Chalker: At its meeting on 8 November, the Council continued its efforts to reach agreement on a framework regulation laying down maximum permitted levels of radioactivity in foodstuffs following a nuclear accident. There will be a further discussion at the Foreign Affairs Council on 23-24 November.

Settlers

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what training is given to interviewers of potential settlers.

Mr. Eggar: All Entry Clearance Officers, if not already fully experienced, attend a four or five-week training course run jointly by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Home Office prior to taking up their appointment overseas. Training in the particular skills required in interviewing entry clearance applicants is an integral part of the course.

British Embassy (South Africa)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many white South African business people have been helped by the British embassy in South Africa; and what assistance was given.

Mrs. Chalker: We do not keep records of the ethnic origins of those seeking assistance from our posts in South Africa. To do so would be inconsistent with our opposition to apartheid.

Mr. Mustafa Natchew

Mr. Millan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make representations to the Government of Israel regarding their refusal of an exit visa for Mustafa Natchew, the mayor of Hebron.

Mr. Mellor: We have raised this matter informally with the Israeli authorities.

VAT

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what negotiations have recently taken place within the European Economic Community on the position of value added tax on newspapers, periodicals and books; and whether any timetable has been agreed for such implementation.

Mr. Lilley: I have been asked to reply.

The European Commission's proposals for the "approximation" of VAT rates (which would, if adopted in their present form, require the United Kingdom to impose VAT on newspapers, periodicals and books) have not been discussed in Brussels. They will formally be presented to the Council of Economic and Finance Ministers at their meeting on 16 November. No decisions on the proposals are expected for some time.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether as part of the move to an internal market in the European Economic Community and the standardisation of value added tax rates on newspapers and periodicals, it is proposed to withdraw direct subsidies, grants and subsidised loans from newspapers in other European countries.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have been asked to reply.

National subsidies in Community member states are subject to the Community's states aid rules. I am aware of no plans to change these rules in respect of subsidies to newspapers.

North Sea Pollution (Conference)

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he expects will be agreed by the international North sea pollution conference to be held in London at the end of November.

Mr. Moynihan: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 4 November by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood).

ENERGY

Opencast Mines

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on his policy concerning the granting of licences to private mining companies to develop opencast coal reserves.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Under existing legislation the British Coal Corporation is responsible for the granting of licences for private opencast mining operations.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many licences were given to mining companies to mine coal either in deep-mined or opencast mines annually since 1979; and if he will list the companies given licences since 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation and I will ask the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Plutonium

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what accounting procedures are in operation to ensure that all plutonium in civil nuclear plants in the United Kingdom is at all times fully accounted for; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many kilograms of plutonium have gone missing from civil nuclear plants in the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's reply to the former hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Deakins) on 22 March 1985 at column 633.

TRANSPORT

MOT Test

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider including the examination of hydraulic brake fluid in the MOT compulsory road test.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have no evidence that the condition of hydraulic brake fluid has contributed to a significant number of road accidents. I do not believe this would be justified.

Ferries (Safety)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the safety record of passenger and car ferries and other forms of transport over the last 30 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Complete data for the last 30 years are not readily available. A table of comparative casualty rates for different forms of transport for the period 1975-85 is given in table 1.9 of "Transport Statistics 1976-1986" published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, a copy of which is in the Library.

Information Services

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by grade the personnel currently employed in the information division within his Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of staff currently employed by the Department of Transport information division is 34, broken down by grade, as follows:

	Number
Grade 5	1
Grade 7	[1]4
Senior Information Officer	7
Information Officer	5
Assistant Information Officer	1
HEO	1
EO	3
AO	8
AA	2
Personal Secretary	1
Allocated Typist	1
	34

[1] One Principal.
Three Principal Information Officers.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of maintaining the information division within his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The cost of maintaining the information division within the Department of Transport in each year since 1984-85 is as follows:

	Running costs £
1984-85	857,145
1985-86	837,432
1986-87	850,721
1987-88	[1]826,224

[1] Estimated increase of 6 per cent.

Before that date, information was a common service of the Departments of Transport, Environment and Property Services Agency.

The allocation of overheads such as accommodation has changed considerably between years, which explains the decrease in the cost of the division.

Cambridge Park, Wanstead

Mr. Neil Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to have completed the requisition of all property required to widen Cambridge park, Wanstead; and when this project is programmed for completion.

Mr. Peter Bottomley There are no proposals to widen Cambridge park but part of the A12 Hackney Wick-M11 link road is planned to pass in cutting parallel to and immediately south of it and then beneath it at George Green. Except in one case where negotiations are still in progress, all the properties in Cambridge park likely to be required have been purchased at the owners' request under the blight provisions. Subject to the satisfactory outcome of the statutory procedures, construction of the scheme could start in 1990 for completion in 1994.

Nuclear Waste

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why British Rail trains carrying nuclear waste have passed through Halifax without specific notification to the local council; and what safety measures are being taken to ensure the safety of people living near to the line in the event of an accident.

Mr. Peter Bottomley The regulations which control the transport of radioactive materials require full protection to be built in to the design of the containers so that they would not present a significant radiological hazard, even in the event of a severe accident. The choice of routes used is not therefore dependent on safety considerations and there is no need to involve local authorities.

Anti-Lock Brakes

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made towards making mandatory the fitting of anti-lock braking systems to articulated lorries.

Mr. Peter Bottomley Agreement was reached last week in the European Community for an amendment to the braking directive enabling member states to require anti-lock brakes on the following categories of heavy vehicle:

Towing vehicles over 16 tonnes
Trailers over 10 tonnes
Coaches over 12 tonnes

This means that all articulated lorries with a total gross weight of more than 26 tonnes would have to be equipped. The amended directive will enable member states to impose the requirements from 1 October 1989 to new type approvals and to all new vehicles registered from 1 October 1991. We shall be consulting in the new year on draft regulations to apply the requirements in this country.

National Bus Company

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by type of purchase, all former National Bus Company subsidiaries which have been privatised since his answer of 24 July, at column 604.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A further 10 National Bus Company subsidiaries have been sold since 24 July 1987. The details are as follows:

Management/employee buy-outs
Luton & District Transport Ltd.
Midland Fox Ltd.
Milton Keynes City Bus Ltd.
Northumbria Motor Services Ltd.
Southdown Motor Services Ltd.

Third Party Purchasers
Alder Valley South Ltd.
Bristol Omnibus Company Ltd.
Vogage National SA.
Western National Ltd.
West Yorkshire Road Car Company Ltd.

Abb Scott Lane, Bradford

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what survey of traffic in Abb Scott lane, Bradford, has been undertaken to examine the effects of low-cost engineering methods; whether any survey results will be published; whether there are plans to curb the traffic weighing over 3 tonnes currently using Abb Scott lane; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Abb Scott lane is a local authority road. Bradford city council is responsible for its traffic management. The transport and road research laboratory is collaborating with the Bradford city council in a trial project to reduce accidents over a large part of Bradford including Abb Scott lane. The results of this project should be published early in 1989.

London Buses

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what have been the financial results of competitive tendering for bus routes in London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: About 15 per cent. of London Regional Transport's bus network mileage is currently operated under contracts obtained by competitive tendering. The average cost per bus mile of all tendered services at 31 March 1987 was £1·54, compared with an average cost of £1·99 per bus mile when the services were operated by London Buses Ltd. before tendering. After the additional costs of service improvements and administration are taken into account, LRT estimate that the net savings of the order of 15 per cent. are being realised from the tendering process.

Airline Competition Policy

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the Government's airline competition policy, following the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the proposed British Airways-British Caledonian mergers.

Mr. Channon: As the House knows, the Monopolies and Mergers Commission has concluded that the proposals made by British Airways may be expected not to operate against the public interest. It is a matter for BA and the British Caledonian Group whether the merger proceeds. But if it does now go ahead, the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority has agreed that he will report to me one year later about implementation of the merger on the basis proposed.

The commission considered only the merger proposal before it and made it clear that any investigation of airline or airports policy as such, or of the powers of the CAA, was outside its terms of reference. I believe that the commission made a sensible distinction. Its job is to report on mergers or proposed mergers. My responsibility, as Secretary of State for Transport, is the much wider one of ensuring that the objectives of the Government's airline competition policy and airports policy can be achieved. The CAA, within its statutory duties and statement of policies, is responsible for the day-to-day regulation of the aviation industry and for providing me with expert advice.

The Government's airline competition policy objectives are set out in the 1984 White Paper. The main elements are:

promotion of competition in all markets;

encouraging a sound and competitive multi-airline industry with a variety of airlines;

enabling the United Kingdom industry to compete aggressively against foreign airlines.

The merger—if it proceeds—will clearly strengthen the international competitive position of the United Kingdom industry in a world which is seeing moves towards larger carriers. Removing the present uncertainty about BCal's future and the opportunities for improved efficiency will also contribute to the competitive position of the industry.

However, while securing these benefits, we must also promote competition within the United Kingdom industry, and provide suitable safeguards against anti-competitive behaviour.

The CAA has a duty to publish its air transport licensing policies and to consult the air transport industry and users before doing so. Before the proposed merger was announced, the CAA was engaged in public consultations about its policies on market entry and anti-competitive behaviour. If the proposed merger goes ahead, it will be all the more important that the CAA should press ahead with those consultations and I shall be discussing with the chairman their scope, timing and whether any other aspects of its policies should be covered.

M1

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the cost of widening the M1 from three lanes to four in both directions between London and its junction with the M6; and if he has any plans to authorise the widening in whole or in part of the M1.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Expensive and quite detailed studies would have to be carried out before any useful estimate could be given for the cost of widening the M1 between London and its junction with the M6. Apart from the provision of a climbing lane to both carriageways of the M1 at junction 9, I have no plans at present to authorise the widening of any part of this motorway.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why the scrapped offside lane hard shoulder on the M1 north of junction 6 cannot be utilised as a vehicle carriageway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The extra lane would not be long enough to be useful or safe.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reason the stretch of offside lane hard shoulder on the M1 north of junction 6 was scrapped almost immediately after construction.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It was decided in 1972 to provide offside hard shoulders on four-lane motorways on the understanding that the police would supervise the re-entry of vehicles to the carriageway. By 1982, there was much concern about the safety of re-entry and the police advised against such provision. The offside hard shoulder planned for this section of M1 was therefore covered over.

Motorways (Repairs and Maintenance)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why he does not require 24-hour working to take place on repair and maintenance work which involves lane closures on motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department allows 24-hour working on major maintenance sites whenever possible. Occasionally environmental reasons preclude this. There are often practical reasons why contractors choose not to work the full hours offered. There can be difficulties in maintaining accuracy with some types of work outside daylight hours, and with supplies of materials.

Lane rental contracts provide ample incentive for contractors to complete works as quickly and efficiently as possible.

Stimulants (Research)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his reply of 3 November, Official Report, column 654, where the research referred to in his reply has been published; and when the further work he refers to in his reply wil be completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The position on research into road accidents and drugs or medicines is summarised in a paper published by the transport and road research laboratory. I am having a copy placed in the Library of the House. The current research under way will taken about two years. Results dealing with the presence of different drugs in road accident fatalities should be ready next September.

A607 (Croxton Kerrial)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will request a senior representative of his east midland regional office to visit Croxton Kerrial, Leicestershire, to observe traffic conditions there and advise him on the desirability of reducing the speed limit on the A607 road to 30 mph.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A senior representative of the east midland regional office has already visited Croxton Kerrial and given advice. Since then no accidents have occurred. A speed limit of 30 mph would not contribute to road safety.

Cars (Registrations)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total number of (a) new cars registered and (b) cars registered in the United Kingdom in each year since 1970.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The available information is as follows:

Cars licensed: Great Britain

Defective Tyres

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will seek powers to stop the export from the United Kingdom of defective tyres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We could not take action against the export of these tyres under powers contained in the Road Traffic Act.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning faulty tyres manufactured by Arvoland Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Representations were made in 1986 by various trading standards and consumer protection bodies that tyres remoulded by Arvoland Ltd. were faulty and unsafe. The matter was taken up with the manufacturers who went out of business at the end of the year and a recall campaign was undertaken. The Department continues to monitor the position on remoulded tyres generally.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to provide for the forfeiture and destruction of faulty tyres; what improvement he proposes in controls over the sale of unroadworthy vehicles or vehicle parts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and I will be meeting the Director General of Fair Trading next month to discuss, among other things, the sale of unroadworthy vehicles and components, including tyres.

Traffic Lights

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information or recent evidence is available to him about the probability of motorists inadvertently crossing red traffic lights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In a recent small-side survey the transport and road research laboratory found that one in 36 drivers was faced with a difficult decision about whether to proceed once traffic lights had started to change. Of those drivers who decided to jump a red light, it appeared that 50 per cent. could in practice have stopped safely. The percentage of drivers crossing lights after they have started to change varied widely between sites. Further research is now in hand on conditions at signalled junctions, and on factors affecting driver behaviour.

SCOTLAND

Sport (Violence)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy on the monitoring by police of all professional football matches, to observe for the commission of chargeable offences; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend considers that it would be inappropriate for him to intervene in what is an operational matter for the police.

Road Safety

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have died as a result of road traffic accidents in Scotland in each of the last five years; and if he will break down these figures by age, sex, and regional council area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to promote road safety in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend is concerned about Scotland's poor road accident record. He has therefore taken a number of steps aimed at reducing casualty levels. These include the extension for a further two years of the Scottish road safety campaign, which was initially set up to organise Scotland's contribution to European Road Safety Year in 1986. The campaign committee has been set the task of devising and implementing initiatives which will quickly and significantly reduce road accident rates. In addition, the work of the Scottish Development Department's road safety advisory unit is being reviewed with the aim of subsequently increasing the number of accident black spots investigated on trunk roads.

Police Establishments

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the establishments of the police forces in Scotland; and whether any of them are operating below establishment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The position as at 30 September 1987 was as follows:

Force	Police authorised establishment	Police actual strength
Central Scotland Police	568	568
Dumfries and Galloway Constabulary	344	341
Fife Constabulary	754	733
Grampian Police	1,008	1,007
Lothian and Borders Police	2,393	2,427
Northern Constabulary	620	613
Strathclyde Police	6,954	6,775
Tayside Police	1,001	1,004
Total	13,642	13,468

Note: Actual strength figures include officers on national training courses, on central service, and with the Scottish crime squad.

All forces, with the exception of Strathclyde police, are operating at or close to authorised establishment. Fife constabulary is in the process of implementing an increase in authorised establishment agreed earlier this year.

Radioactivity

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the monitoring stations for the initial detection and measurement of radioactivity proposed for the Highlands and Islands to become operational.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is hoped that the first group of new monitoring stations will begin to operate in the spring of 1988. These will be based largely on existing Meteorological Office sites throughout the United Kingdom, and will be supplemented by the monitoring capabilities of the existing nuclear sites. Precise locations of monitoring sites in the area of the Highlands and Islands have still to be determined.

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects his discussions with the Council of Scottish Local Authorities about the dissemination of information and advice on radioactivity levels in Scotland to the public and to local authorities to be concluded; and whether he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Officials of the Scottish Office met representatives of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities on 14 October this year and had a useful discussion of the detail of the proposed national response plan for nuclear incidents occurring overseas. They are now awaiting the convention's formal comments on the plan.

Elections (Psychiatric Patients)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what facilities were available during the last general election to psychiatric patients interned in Scottish hospitals for the exercise of their right to vote as ordered in the Representation of the People Act 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Patients detained in mental hospitals under the Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984 are not entitled to be registered as electors or to vote. Most patients in mental hospitals have been admitted without formality and are not subject to detention. Of these informal patients, some are already registered as electors in respect of their home address. Others not registered as electors in respect of their home address may, by making a "patient declaration", have their names included on the electoral register in respect of an address outside the hospital where they would otherwise be resident (or, failing which, a former address). It was open to informal patients included on the electoral register to vote in person at the general election or, if unable to do so, for example because of distance or physical illness, to apply to vote by post or by proxy. Appropriate guidance was issued to health boards in 1983, 1986 and 1987.

Health Service

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will explain the effects of the SHARPEN report with regard to registration for people with a mental handicap;

(2) if he will explain the effects the SHARPEN report will have on long-stay patients in the Clydesdale constituency;

(3) if he will explain the effects the SHARPEN report will have on patients with a high level of dependency in the Clydesdale constituency;

(4) if he will make a statement explaining the effects the SHARPEN report will have on general practitioners in the Clydesdale constituency; and what incentive payments will be made to general practitioners in the Clydesdale constituency;

(5) if he will make a statement explaining the effects the SHARPEN report will have on hospital in-patient facilities for children in the Clydesdale constituency;

(6) if he will make a statement explaining the effects the SHARPEN report will have on special care baby provision in the Clydesdale constituency;

(7) what effect the SHARPEN report will have on acute services and their future share of resources;

(8) what kind of financial support and taxation systems Her Majesty's Government will implement to encourage informal care, as recommended in the SHARPEN report;

(9) what will be the criteria for the evaluation to determine a hospital at home scheme for cost efficiency, as recommended in the SHARPEN report;

(10) what effects the SHARPEN report will have on local government provision of long-stay accommodation;

(11) if he will explain the effects the SHARPEN report will have on the number of hospitals for the mentally-handicapped in (a) Scotland and (b) Clydesdale.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The report "Scottish Health Authorities Review of Priorities for the Eighties and Nineties" (SHARPEN), has the status at present only of a working document that is under consideration by the Scottish Health Service planning council. The council will consider the recommendations in the report in detail at its meeting in March and will thereafter advise the Secretary of State.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure that all members of Scottish health boards, Scottish health councils and Scottish health service unions will receive copies of the SHARPEN report immediately.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of inquiries he has received for copies of the SHARPEN report.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has received eight inquiries for copies of the SHARPEN report.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations were made to the working party on the SHARPEN report by the Scottish health service unions.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to make a visit to a hospital in the Clydesdale constituency; and if he will meet the health service unions on such a visit.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to visit a hospital in the hon. Member's constituency.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the information held by him centrally on Scottish National Health Service hospitals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The main items of information on Scottish National Health Service hospitals are contained in "Scottish Health Service Costs", published each year jointly by the Scottish Home and Health Department and the National Health Service and in "Scottish Health Statistics" published annually by the common services agency for the Scottish Health Service. Copies of each are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what effects the SHARPEN report will have on William Smellie hospital;

(2) what effects the SHARPEN report will have on Birkwood hospital;

(3) what effect the SHARPEN report will have on staffing levels at each hospital in the Clydesdale constituency.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 26 October, at columns 138-39.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he received a copy of the SHARPEN report.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 26 October, at columns 138-39. My right hon. and learned Friend has not yet formally received a copy of the SHARPEN report.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his response to the recommendations of the SHARPEN report.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 28 October, at columns 329-30.

Rivers

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to improve the quality of rivers over the next four years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for the control of pollution of rivers lies mainly with the local river purification authorities. The results of the latest survey conducted by the Scottish Development Department in 1985 — which my predecessor announced in the House on 25 March 1987, at columns 178-79 — show that overall the quality of Scottish waters continues to be very high and that there have been some marked improvements since the 1980 survey. We are considering what further measures might be taken to maintain these standards as well as to improve the few waters of poor quality.

Water and Sewerage

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on progress on compliance with the terms of European Community environment directives within the water and sewerage industries; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are more than 20 EC directives relating to the quality of water and these are applied by the local authorities, the river purification authorities and the Scottish Development Department, as appropriate. Where required, information on compliance with directives is collated by the Scottish Development Department and passed to the authorities in Brussels.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what contact Scottish Office officials have had with NIREX with regard to nuclear waste disposal sites in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In common with other environmental and regulatory Departments, Scottish Office officials have periodic contact with NIREX on general radioactive waste management matters and were consulted about the terms of the discussion document to be issued by the executive on 12 November.

Cytology Services

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the date on which he received the report on cervical cytology services in Scotland prepared by the Scientific Services Advisory Group under the chairpersonship of Professor J. Strong; and what action he intends to take to implement its recommendations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am presently considering the report of a group under the chairmanship of Professor Strong, which was received on 5 November 1986. I shall be making an announcement shortly.

Scottish Film Council

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the names and qualifications of the women members appointed to the Scottish Film Council; and if he will list the criteria used in the selection process.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The following women are members of the Scottish Film Council:

Mrs. Paddy Higson
Ms. Penny Thomson
Mrs. Rae Milne
Ms. Gale Chrisman.

The chairman and two of the 21 members of SFC are appointed by my right hon. and learned Friend for the personal qualities which they can bring to the work of the council. The remainder of the membership consists of nominees of representative organisations.

Private Health Services

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the information held by him centrally on private health services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Comprehensive information relating to private health services is not held centrally. Some information is, however, held about private hospitals and nursing home places, type of establishment and staffing numbers.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the annual revenue costs to the Scottish electricity industry of nuclear power stations.

Mr. Lang: I am advised by the South of Scotland Electricity Board that the annual revenue costs associated with its nuclear generating stations, including depreciation but excluding interest and supplementary depreciation, for 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87 were £143 million; £165 million and £183 million respectively.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of debt charges still outstanding on each of the nuclear power stations in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I am advised by the South of Scotland Electricity Board that it does not allocate borrowings to specific capital projects and much of its new capital expenditure is internally financed. However, certain loans have been arranged through Euratom and the European Investment Bank specifically for Torness power station and at 30 September 1987 these totalled £635 million.

Motherwell (General Hospital)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make an updated statement on the provision of a new general hospital in Motherwell.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Lanarkshire health board is currently conducting a general review of its long-term acute services strategy. This review will include an examination of the case for a new general hospital in Motherwell.

Lanarkshire (Hospitals)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the hospitals currently the responsibility of the Lanarkshire health board in the Clydesdale constituency;

(2) if he will give in percentage terms the change in spending in real terms over the previous year on each of the hospitals in the Clydesdale constituency, for each year since 1979-80.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally on a constituency basis.

Forensic Science Laboratories

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many police forensic laboratories there are in Scotland; how many forensic scientists are employed by police forces in Scotland; and what are the grades and pay scales of forensic scientists employed in police forensic science laboratories in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are three such laboratories—in Grampian police, Lothian and Borders police and Strathclyde police—which currently employ a total of 40 forensic scientists. The grades and pay scales of the scientists employed in each laboratory are matters for the police authorities concerned.

Cancer Screening

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average wait for results of cervical smear tests in the Greater Glasgow health board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Prison Statistics

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the ratio of prison officers to prisoners on each Scottish prison.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table.

Establishment	Ratio of prison officers: inmates
Aberdeen	1:2·10
Barlinnie	1:3·11
Barlinnie Special Unit	1:0·54
Castle Huntly	1:2·79
Cornton Vale	1:1·21
Dumfries	1:1·39
Dungavel	1:2·80
Edinburgh	1:2·04

Penninghame	1:2·77
Perth	1:1·99
Peterhead	1:0·74
Polmont	1:2·36
Shotts	1:1·77

These ratios exclude former members of the chief prison officer grade who became members of the unified prison service grades on 1 June 1987. Comparison between these and previously published ratios is therefore inappropriate.

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of prisoners held in each of Her Majesty's prisons in Scotland at the present time.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On 3 November 1987 the numbers of inmates held in Scotland's penal establishments were as follows.

	Total population
Prisons
Aberdeen	161
Barlinnie	1,147
Barlinnie Special Unit	7
Cornton Vale	162

Nursing Homes

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when the new regulations designed to supersede the Nursing Homes Registration Regulations (Scotland) 1938, the Nursing Homes Registration (Scotland) Amendment Regulation 1974 and the Nursing Homes Registration (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1981, will be made;

(2) if he will make it his policy when amending the Nursing Homes Registration Regulations (Scotland) 1938, to increase the supervision by local health boards over private nursing homes in their area.

Mr. Rifkind: The recent review of the subordinate legislation governing the registration of private nursing homes proposed an extension of the controls health boards may exercise over the conduct and inspection of nursing homes, and the facilities and services provided there.

I hope to make new regulations shortly.

Residential Homes

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to enable local health boards to increase their supervision over private residential homes for the elderly in their area.

Mr. Rifkind: Health boards have no supervisory functions in relation to private residential homes.

Springburn Initiative

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will be meeting Glasgow district council and Strathclyde regional council to discuss the setting up of the Springburn initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: No such meeting is planned. Preparatory discussions between the Scottish Development Agency, local authorities and other local interests are continuing and when all the parties agree on a programme of action and on the necessary administrative arrangements the initiative will be launched.

Mortality Statistics

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the mortality rates for Scotland as a whole and for Greater Glasgow, in particular, for the years 1984, 1985 and 1986; and if he will also give such equivalent information as is available to him for France, the German Democratic Republic, the German Federal Republic, Italy, the Soviet Union, Spain and the United States of America for the same years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The available information is as follows:

Death rates (per 1,000 population) 1984 to 1986

	1984	1985	1986
Scotland	12·1	12·5	12·4
Greater Glasgow	13·6	13·5	13·8

United States of America	8·7	8·7	[1]8·7•

[1] Provisional rates.

N/A Not available.

Note: Due to different methods in collecting and collation these rates may not be strictly comparable.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the mortality rates for the Clydesdale constituency area during the years 1984, 1985 and 1986; and if he will give the comparable figures for the rest of Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not readily available for parliamentary constituencies. Information for Clydesdale district and the rest of Scotland is as follows:

Death rates per 1,000 population

Year	Clydesdale District	Scotland (excluding Clydesdale District
1984	10·7	12·1
1985	11·3	12·5
1986	11·1	12·4

Patients (Readmissions)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients, for each year since 1980, discharged from hospitals in Scotland and in the Greater Glasgow area in particular, had to be readmitted, suffering from the same illness or complaints which had caused them to be previously admitted.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients, for each year since 1980, discharged from hospitals in the Clydesdale constituency area had to be readmitted again suffering from the same complaints or illnesses which had led to their original entry.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money he has allocated to the social security and health services, in accordance with the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Only seven provisions of the Act have been brought into force so far. Their limited resource implications for local authorities have been taken into account in provision for social work in the 1988-89 rate support grant settlement. Neither these nor one further section being considered for implementation in the present financial year have significant implications for the level of health services or for the provision of social security benefits.

Cancer Deaths

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many deaths from cancer of the lung, the trachea and bronchus occurred in Greater Glasgow in the years 1984, 1985 and 1986; and how these figures compare with those from England, Wales and Northern Ireland in percentage, for the same years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Deaths from cancer of the lung, trachea and bronchus Greater Glasgow 1984 to 1986

	Number
1985	1,112
1985	1,152
1986	1,117

England	6·4	6·1	6·1
Wales	5·5	5·3	5·6
Northern Ireland	5·0	4·7	4·6

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many deaths due to cancer of the lung, bronchus and trachea occurred in the Clydesdale constituency area in the years 1984, 1985 and 1986; and how these percentages compare with those in Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not readily available for parliamentary constituencies. I have tabulated mortality data for Clydesdale district and for Scotland.

Deaths from cancer of the lung, trachea and bronchus Clydesdale district 1984 to 1986

	Number
1984	28
1985	24

Scotland	6·8	6·7	6·5

Life Expectancy

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the present figures for male and female life expectancy in Scotland as a whole and for Greater Glasgow in particular; and how these figures compare with those for England, Wales and Northern Ireland; and what equivalent information he has for France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal German Republic, Italy, Spain, the Soviet Union and the United States of America.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information available is as follows:

Male and female life expectancy at birth

	Male	Female
Scotland[1]	70·0	76·0
Greater Glasgow[1]	68·7	75·2
England	N/A	N/A

Note: These figures may not be strictly comparable, due to different methods of collection and collation and the different years to which they relate.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest figures for male and female life expectancy in the Clydesdale constituency area and for the rest of Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not readily available.

Cook-chill Kitchens

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if there are plans to build cook-chill kitchens in Clydesdale area hospitals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hospitals in Scotland use the cook-chill system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Seven hospitals in Scotland are presently operating a full or partial cook-chill system. It is for health boards to assess the suitability of this system for their own specific requirements.

Community Medicine

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when will he publish the report on the future development of public health functions and community medicine in Scotland set up by the chief medical officer.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The chief medical officer issued a discussion paper in July 1986 on the future development of community medicine in Scotland. In the light of responses to that paper we issued proposals in June 1987 which we are considering with health boards, local authorities and professional bodies.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what have been the numbers, for every year since 1975, of community medicine specialists in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is given in the following table:

Number of Community Medicine Specialists[1] in Scotland

	Number
1975	145
1976	131
1977	135
1978	138
1979	145

NHS (Consultants)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is, for each year since 1975, the percentage of expansion of the number of full-time consultants working for the National Health Service in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is shown in table A. This table does not indicate true change in consultant numbers because it excludes consultants employed on maximum part-time contracts (these are normally counted as full-time staff, but separate information about their numbers is available only from 1981). The annual percentage change of full-time consultants, including those with maximum part-time contract, is shown in table B.

Table A:
Full time Medical and Dental Consultants excluding those on maximum part-time contracts

Years[1]	Percentage change

1982-83	1·2
1983-84	2·5
1984-85	0·5
1985-86	1·0

[1] The percentage change given is that between 30 September in the first year and 30 September in the second year.

Doctors (Lists)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the average size of a medical practitioner's list in the urban areas of Scotland;

(2) what is the average size of a medical practitioner's list in the inner cities of Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: For statistical purposes medical practitioners' lists are classified as urban, semi-urban or rural. At 1 October 1986, the date of the latest information available, the average size of a medical practitioner's list in Scotland classified as urban was 1748.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he is putting forward to seek a reduction in the hours of work for junior doctors.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Home and Health Department instructed health boards in 1983 to eliminate regular rota commitments of one night on duty in two and, where practicable, to aim for a maximum commitment of one night in three or better. Surveys carried out by SHHD in 1983 and 1985 indicated that there had been a reduction in rotas more onerous than one in three from 449 (13·8 per cent.) to 340 (11 per cent.). SHHD is collecting similar data for 30 September this year and will participate in national discussions with the British Medical Association on juniors' hours which are to be held soon.

Community Care

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will urgently provide special funds for the Greater Glasgow and Lothian health boards as a compensation for the relative loss of resources, transferred in order to improve the care in the community under the SHARE arrangements.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No such loss of resources to health boards has occurred and the question of compensation does not therefore arise.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give effective support to the efforts of the health boards to improve the availability of up-dated waiting lists to patients, with fresh provisions of funds aimed specifically at such an objective.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I regard it as very important that health boards improve the provision to general practitioners and their patients of accurate information about waiting lists—and particularly waiting times—for hospital procedures. This will offer wider possibilities for exercising choice and reducing patient waiting times. I therefore expect all boards, as part of their quest for improvement in the quality of patient care and for greater efficiency in management, to pursue the objective of better information flow to GPs and patients. Since action to achieve this is an integral part of a health board's main role, boards should give it appropriate priority when deciding how to spend the total resources allocated to them.

Doctors (Patients' Choice)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it one of his priorities for patients to have more freedom to choose their own doctors, and take all the steps necessary to put such a policy into practice.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The existing arrangements whereby patients may choose their doctors are currently being considered by my right hon. and learned Friend in the course of the review of primary health care, which followed publication of the Government's consultative document "Primary Health Care: An Agenda for Discussion". The conclusions reached on this review will be announced shortly.

Rents

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the average rent rise over the previous year for (a) public sector and (b) private sector accommodation in each district authority area in Scotland for each year from 1979 to 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information for the public sector is given in table 1. Details of SSHA rents by district have only been collected centrally since 1984 and are shown in table 2: figures for 1987 are not yet available. Information for private sector accommodation in each district is not collected.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on changes in private sector rent levels in Dundee since 1979, and on the Government's policy for such rent levels; and whether he plans any measures to protect tenants on low incomes in future.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No information on private sector rent levels in general is held centrally. The Government's policy for the private rented sector in Scotland was set out in "Housing: The Government's Proposals for Scotland" (Cm. 242), published on Wednesday 11 November.

Mortgage Defaulters

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish information available to him concerning the number of mortgage defaulters in Dundee in each of the past eight years involving (a) private sector houses and (b) public sector houses purchased under the right to buy legislation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Nursery Education

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the level of nursery education in each regional authority area in Scotland; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information at September of the years available is set out in the table:

School Boards

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate and publish the cost of setting up school boards in each regional authority area in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave the hon. Member for the Western Isles (Mr. MacDonald) on 28 October at column 235.

Crime Statistics

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the recorded number of crimes against the person in Dundee in 1987; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: "Crimes against the person" is not an established term in Scottish criminal statistics. Groups 1 and 2 of the standard classification of crimes and offences, however, include most such crimes. The figures for these groups are set out in the table. Information for 1987 is not yet available.

Board and Lodging

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many families in Dundee are currently in bed-and-breakfast accommodation paid for out of public funds; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No overall figures are available for the number of persons in bed-and-breakfast accommodation paid out of public funds. However at 30 September 1987 no households were in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in Dundee district under the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977. The corresponding figures for 30 September each year since 1980 are also nil. Figures for 1979 are not available.

Housing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of the housing capital programme for Dundee district council for each year since 1979, at 1987 prices.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Gross housing capital allocations (ie the aggregate of housing revenue account and non-housing revenue account allocations) to the city of Dundee district council have been as follows:

	1987-88 prices[1] £ million
1979-80	15·048
1980-81	13·808
1981-82	12·114

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest number of houses in need of urgent repair in Dundee; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of people on housing waiting lists in each district authority area in Scotland; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Reliable and consistent information on waiting list figures is not available centrally.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest figures for house building by public and private sectors in (a) Scotland as a whole and (b) Dundee district authority area; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest figures for housebuilding in the public and private sectors in Scotland as a whole were published in table 1 of "Statistical Bulletin HSIU No. 31-Q1(87)" which is sent to all hon. Members for Scottish constituencies. The details requested for Dundee district are set out in the table:

Dundee district—Housebuilding

Year	Public sector	Private sector
1979	342	261
1980	224	244
1981	351	160
1982	162	162

Regional Assistance

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been paid in (a) regional development grants and (b) regional selective assistance in Fife in 1986-87 and so far in 1987-88.

Mr. Lang: Payments of RSA to firms in Fife in 1986-87 and in the period April to October 1987 totalled £6·2 million and £1·7 million respectively. Information on old RDG is available only in respect of payments of over £25,000 in the Cowdenbeath, Dunfermline, Cupar, Glenrothes, Kirkcaldy, St. Andrews and Leven and Methil local employment office areas. Such payments of RDG totalled £28·2 million in 1986-87 and £3·4 million in the period April to September 1987. Under new RDG, payments of over £25,000 in Fife totalled £0·1 million in 1986-87, and there have been no such payments so far this year.

Special Housing

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many homes were specially built for the elderly or disabled by each district council in Strathclyde region in the last financial year;

(2) if he will give the number of homes currently being built by the district councils of Scotland specifically for the needs of elderly and disabled people.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Consistent and reliable information is not available.

Rating Reform

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will (a) supply all hon. Members who request it with a copy of the CIPFA report commissioned by his Department on implementation of the poll tax and (b) place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Lang: The report, which is a long and technical document, has already been placed in the Library and hon. Members who wish may obtain extracts from it there.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has determined how the severely mentally handicapped will be defined for the purposes of poll tax exemption.

Mr. Lang: The definition of persons who are severely mentally handicapped for the purposes of exemption from liability for the personal community charge is contained in section 8(9) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987. A consultation paper on the procedures for identifying such people was sent to interested bodies on 22 October.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many young people under 25 years in (a) the Dundee, East constituency and (b) the Dundee travel-to-work area have been unemployed for more than one, two, three and four years.

Mr. Lang: The numbers of unemployed claimants under 25 years of age on 9 July 1987, the latest date for which this information is available, are shown in the table:

Duration unemployed	Dundee, East parliamentary constituency	Dundee travel-to-work area
Up to 1 year	1,803	3,799
1 to 2 years	416	820
2 to 3 years	222	393
3 to 4 years	82	144
Over 4 years	134	239
Total	2,657	5,395

This information is available in the Library.

MSC Schemes

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in (a) Dundee, East constituency and (b) Dundee district authority area have received financial assistance to attend interviews on Manpower Services Commission-sponsored schemes in the past 12 months; and what proportion of total applicants for such finance this represents.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is not available in the form requested. However, during the 12 months to end October 1987, 9,518 payments were made to people in the Dundee jobcentre area attending interviews about Manpower Service Commission employment and training schemes.

Fuel Disconnections

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, for each year since 1974, the number of disconnections of gas and electricity supplies to domestic consumers due to unpaid bills in the Dundee area.

Mr. Lang: The information requested on electricity disconnections is not held centrally but I am asking the chairman of the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board to write to the hon. Member.

Information in respect of gas disconnections is a matter for British Gas plc. I am asking the chairman to respond to the hon. Member's request.

Population Statistics

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of people in (a) the Dundee, East constituency and (b) the Dundee travel-to-work area broken down by sex, who are (i) under 25 years, (ii) between 25 years and 35 years, (iii) between 35 years and 50 years and (iv) over 50 years.

Mr. Lang: I understand that the hon. Gentleman means unemployed people. The number of unemployed claimants on 9 July, the latest date for which this information is available, is:

	Dundee, East Constituency			Dundee Travel-to-Work Area

This information is available in the Library.

Hunting

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the policy of the Forestry Commission with regard to hunting on the land it manages; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is the commission's policy to allow hunting to continue over land where it has traditionally taken place.

Social Security Fraud

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in the Glasgow, Central area have been prosecuted for fraudulent social security claims in the past six months; and how many of these received custodial sentences.

Mr. Portillo: I have been asked to reply.

In the six months ended on 31 October 1987, 65 prosecutions involving social security offences were instituted by local social security and unemployment benefit offices covering the Glasgow, Central area. None of those prosecuted received custodial sentences.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Blood Products

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action is being taken to ensure the United Kingdom is self-sufficient in blood products.

Mr. Newton: Scotland and Northern Ireland are self-sufficient in all blood products. England and Wales are already self-sufficient in many. To ensure complete self-sufficiency a new blood products laboratory has been built at Elstree at a cost of £60 million. The new factory was officially opened on 29 April 1987. Production is expected within the next few months leading to very substantial output in 1988 and self-sufficiency in 1989.

Civil Defence

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when guidance on planning for the National Health Service in war will be made available for inclusion in the emergency planning guidance to local authorities;

(2) if he will make available in the Library a copy of his plan for the organisation of the National Health Service in war.

Mrs. Currie: Individual health authorities are responsible for the preparation of plans for the organisation of the National Health Service in war, in line with guidance issued by the Department. This guidance, which has recently been revised, will come to Ministers for approval before being issued to the National Health Service in England as a health circular and before inclusion in the emergency planning guidance to local authorities. Health circulars are routinely placed in the Library.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many students at St. Andrew's university are currently in receipt of housing benefit; and what is the average payment received.

Mr. Portillo: The housing benefit scheme is administered by local authorities, and information about payments made in a particular locality is not held centrally.

Whipps Cross Hospital

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services for what reasons there are regularly waiting times of three to four hours at Whipps Cross hospital in London.

Mrs. Currie: As this is a local matter, my hon. Friend might like to contact the chairman of Waltham Forest health authority.

Storm Damage

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to assist the South East Thames regional health authority and district health authorities in southern England with the cost of damage caused to hospitals and other buildings under their control during the storm on Friday 16 October 1987.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what extra financial provision he intends to make for the Mid-Downs health authority to deal with storm damage.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friends to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) on 4 November, at columns 781-82.

Residential and Nursing Homes

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total expenditure made by his Department in each of the last five years on payments to residents in (a) residential homes and (b) nursing homes.

Mr. Portillo: The only benefit payable to people in residential care and nursing homes for which there is information on total expenditure is supplementary benefit. The table sets out the position for the last five years., 1986 being the most recent year for which information is available.

Supplementary benefit for people in residential care and nursing homes

Year	Expenditure (£ million)	Total expenditure (£ million)
1982		39
1983		104
1984		200
1985[1]		—
1986[2]
Residential care homes	330	459
Nursing homes	129

[1] There are no figures for 1985 because for operational reasons there was no inquiry in that year.

[2] Until 1986 it has not been possible to identify separately expenditure on people in residential care homes and nursing homes.

Smoking

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representation he has received from the tobacco manufacturers or from lobbying organisations seeking the reduction of public funding for anti-smoking campaigns.

Mrs. Currie: None.

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what action he is taking to discourage smoking in workplaces;

(2) if he has any plans to introduce legislation to prohibit smoking in public places or to reduce the number of public places in which it is permitted;

(3) when the report by the independent scientific committee on smoking and health on the effects of the involuntary inhalation of tobacco smoke by non-smokers will be published.

Mrs. Currie: We expect to receive the fourth report of the independent scientific committee on smoking and health around the end of the year, after which a decision on publication will be taken. I understand that the report will include references to the dangers associated with breathing environmental tobacco smoke, on which the committee made an interim statement earlier this year. We shall then be able to consider any further action that may be needed on smoking in public places and the workplace. The Government's "Look After Your Heart" campaign is working with employers to encourage the introduction of no-smoking policies at the workplace, and through the newly introduced "Heartbeat Award Scheme" we hope to encourage more no-smoking areas in restaurants.

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the latest estimate of the number of deaths caused by smoking in one calendar year in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Currie: It is not possible to be precise. Most deaths associated with cigarette smoking arise from three diseases: lung cancer, chronic bronchitis and "heart attacks" due to obstruction of the arteries of the heart. However, the proportion of deaths attributable to smoking from each of these diseases varies. Furthermore, smoking is also implicated in certain other conditions where no estimate of the numbers of the deaths caused by smoking is available—for example, obstruction of the arteries of the lower limbs, and strokes.

It is estimated that at least 90 per cent. of deaths from cancers of the lung, lip, oesophagus and larynx, and 90 per cent. of deaths from chronic bronchitis obstructive lung disease, chronic pulmonary heart disease and aortic aneurysm are attributable to smoking. The total number of deaths from these conditions involved is given in the table.

United Kingdom—1986

ICD Code[1]		Number
162	Malignant neoplasm of trachea, bronchus and lung	40,139
140-149	Malignant neoplasm of lip, oral cavity and pharynx	1,906
150	Malignant neoplasm of oesophagus	5,227
161	Malignant neoplasm of larynx	945
416	Chronic pulmonary heart disease	844
441	Aortic aneurism	8,342
490-492, 496	Bronchitis and emphysema, chronic airways obstruction, not elsewhere classified	30,043

In 1983 the Royal College of Physicians in its report "Health or Smoking" estimated that perhaps 20 per cent. of deaths due to obstruction of the arteries of the heart were related to smoking. The medical term for this condition is "ischaemic heart disease" but it is commonly referred to as "coronary heart disease". The total number of deaths from this condition for United Kingdom is as follows:

United Kingdom—1986

ICD Code[1]		Number
410-414	Ischaemic heart disease	181,491

[1] International Classification of Diseases 9th revision.

Industrial Diseases

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive a report from the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council into respiratory disease in textile workers.

Mr. Scott: I understand that the council is still considering the evidence it has received on this subject. I cannot say when its report will be produced.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any proposals to classify bronchitis and emphysema as industrial diseases.

Mr. Scott: No. The Secretary of State for Social Services is advised on the prescription of industrial diseases by an independent statutory body, the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council. The council has conducted an investigation into bronchitis and emphysema and its report is expected by the end of the year. We shall give careful consideration to any recommendations it may make.

Elections (Psychiatric Patients)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what help and opportunities psychiatric patients in British hospitals received in order to exercise their right to vote in the last general election, according to the Representation of the People Act 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The Representation of the People Act 1983 ensures that informal patients in mental hospitals who are not registered as electors in respect of their home address are able to register as electors by making a "patient's declaration." This declaration entitles patients to have their names included on the electoral register in respect of an address outside the hospital where they would be resident if they were not in hospital (or, if the patient cannot provide such an address, a former address). Patients who are unable to vote in person at an election may apply to vote by post or by proxy.

Current guidance from the Department to health authorities in England recommends that at the time of an election a member of the hospital's administrative staff—that is, someone who is not directly involved in the patient's treatment—should personally deliver the voting documents to the patient and then, or subsequently, be present not only to assist the patient, if required, but also to ensure the patient may record his vote without any person seeing how he has recorded it.

Leaflets for the use of the patients notifying these provisions and telling them how to register to vote in elections have been provided by the Department. Health authorities are urged to take all practicable steps annually to ensure that patients are informed of their entitlements; and the staff of the hospital should help patients who have difficulty in reading the leaflet.

Responsibility for help and opportunities given to psychiatric in-patients in Scotland and Wales to enable them to exercise their right to vote in parliamentary, European or local government elections, is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

War Widows (Pension)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received to increase the non-discretionary amount of war widows' pension disregarded in the calculation of housing benefit.

Mr. Portillo: Over the past year representations on this issue have been received from two organisations representing war pensioners. Additionally, about 50 letters have been sent by individual pensioners.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the percentage increase in the social security budget if all war widows' pensions were disregarded in the calculation of housing benefit.

Mr. Portillo: We do not have the necessary information to make a very precise estimate, but in the context of a social security budget of around £46·5 billion in the current financial year, a full disregard of all war widows' pensions and allowances in the calculation of housing benefit would increase expenditure by less than 0·1 per cent.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has plans to increase the non-discretionary amount of war widows's pension disregarded the calculation of housing benefit when phase 2 of the Social Security Act 1986 becomes effective in April 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Yes. The statutory disregard is being increased by 25 per cent. from £4 to £5 when the revised housing benefit scheme is introduced in April 1988.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of patients awaiting (a) urgent and (b) non-urgent operations in (i) Leeds Eastern health authority and (ii) Leeds Western health authority on the latest available figures; and if he will give the figures for the previous six and 12 months, respectively.

Mr. Newton: The information is given in the table.

Number of cases on in-patient waiting list for surgical specialties

District Health Authority	31 March 1986		30 September 1986		31 March 1987
	Urgent	Non-Urgent	Urgent	Non-Urgent	Urgent	Non-Urgent
Leeds Eastern	595	4,939	493	4,543	445	5,523
Leeds Western	555	3,650	401	3,744	343	3,989

At 31 March 1986, 1,345 non-urgent cases had been on the waiting list more than one year in the Leeds eastern district health authority. This represented 23·8 per cent. of the total list. By 31 March 1987 the figure had fallen to 907 (15·0 per cent.). In the Leeds western district health authority at 31 March 1986, 807 non-urgent cases (18·4 per cent.) had been on the list for more than one year. By 31 March 1987 this had fallen to 732 (15·4 per cent.).

Abortions

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what steps have been taken by his Department to monitor the number of deaths abroad of overseas women upon whom abortions had recently been performed in England and Wales;

(2) what specific steps have been taken by his Department to monitor the number of emergency admissions for treatment abroad of overseas women upon whom abortions had recently been performed in England and Wales.

Mr. Newton: Non-resident abortion patients are provided with an information sheet and a discharge letter for their own doctor usually in their own language. In general, after-care is a matter for the doctors and medical institutions involved in any individual case.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown by health authority of the numbers of abortions which have been performed upon non-resident women in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: The information is shown in the table.

[1] Figures for the London Teaching Hospitals have been included with those of the Regional Health Authorities for the appropriate geographical area.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many deaths of overseas women upon whom abortions have been performed in England and Wales have been drawn to his attention by the Governments of other member countries of the EEC in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Newton: None.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for the latest year for which figures are available, the number of abortions on (a) non-residents and (b) residents at 18 weeks and over together with the statutory grounds for abortion, place of residence for (a) and age.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 27 October 1987]: The information requested is in the tables.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received in respect of the regulations governing the payment of social security benefits to elected members of local authorities who may be, or are authorised to be, in receipt of attendance allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 9 November 1987]: In 1986 and earlier this year previous Ministers in this Department received representations about the adverse effect of eligibility for local government attendance allowances on a councillor's entitlement to incapacity benefits. As a result a scheme was introduced last May under which ex gratia payments are being made to councillors. The effect of these payments is to overcome the previous abrupt withdrawal of benefits and to ensure that councillors' available income is at least equal to the full amount of incapacity benefits payable in normal circumstances and in most cases greater.

Since May we have received three letters about the scheme and one about the effect of attendance allowances on supplementary benefit. More recently several hon. Members have drawn our attention to the impending lobby by the Association of Councillors in support of an alternative approach to the interaction of attendance allowances and incapacity benefits.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the number of people who have died during the last year for which figures are available, whilst an application for an attendance allowance for them was (a) being considered and (b) in the process of appeal.

Mr. Scott: This information is not recorded as a matter of course and could be extracted only at disproportionate cost.

Social Fund

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will announce the allocation of the social fund grants and loans budgets for 1988-89 to the Dunstable local office of his Department.

Mr. Portillo: The allocations for grants and loans for 1988-89 are £39,269 and £90,778 respectively. The inclusion of these figures brings the total allocations to offices in the London, north social security region given in my hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 4 November at columns 774-81 to £7,545,089 for grants for £17,672,023 for loans.

Income Support

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide a revised version of the information contained in the document, "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income-Related Benefits", issued in October 1987, so as to show the income effects on claimants after April 1988 and their position at the time the Social Security Act 1986 received the Royal Assent, in particular taking into account changes to housing benefit in April 1987; and if he will provide, with each table, a list of the main assumptions used to arrive at the totals contained therein.

Mr. Portillo: The information could be prepared only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide a breakdown of the extra £100 million to be spent on families with children on income support, referred to in his statement of 27 October, Official Report, column 181.

Mr. Scott: £100 million is a rounding down of the figure arrived at by multiplying the total number of families with children on income support by the average gain in real terms after meeting housing costs shown in the revised technical annex. A breakdown is provided below:

Type of claimant	Numbers (thousands)	Average real terms gain	Increase in expenditure £ million
Lone Parent	600	2·60	81
Unemployed and others	510	1·50	40
Total	1,110	2·10	121

Elderly People (Residential Care)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the implications for his policies on residential care for the elderly of the different arrangements in respect of the payment of increase in retirement pension paid to (a) those in local authority funded residential care and (b) those funded primarily by his Department in private residential accommodation.

Mr. Portillo: At present there are no differences in the arrangements for payment of retirement pension or increases in it as between pensioners in local authority residential care and private residential accommodation. The Department has, however, consulted local authority associations with proposals for easing administrative difficulties for authorities and residents over the encashment of pension order books for pensioners in local authority residential homes or sponsored by authorities in private and voluntary homes. Further proposals are expected to be made shortly, taking account of views expressed in the consultation.

Speech Therapist

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many speech therapist posts there are in the North Staffordshire district health authority, how many are vacant; and what is the waiting time between referral and an appointment.

Mr. Newton: This information is not available centrally. Staff-in-post figures for qualified speech therapists in North Staffordshire district health authority as at 30 September are shown in the table:

	Whole time equivalent
1985	19·4
1986	19·7

The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of North Staffordshire health authority for the information she requires.

Health and Community Services (Expenditure)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest estimated outturn in 1987-88 for health and community services current expenditure.

Mr. Newton: The voted provision for the hospital and community health services in England in 1987-88 is £10,339,619,000. This sum is cash-limited and expenditure is expected to be contained within it.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money he has allocated to local authorities in accordance with the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Scott: Individual local authorities in England will not be allocated particular sums of money specifically for the purpose of implementing the provisions of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 but account of the costs will be taken in determining planned figures for personal social services spending nationally.

Doctors (Career Structure)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to propose a career structure for medical doctors which ensures that the demands of National Health Service work do not oblige them to abandon teaching and research.

Mr. Newton: "Achieving a Balance: Plan for Action", published on 27 October on behalf of health departments, regional health authorities and the joint consultants committee, deals specifically with the career structure for hospital doctors. As I said in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt) on 27 October at column 258 its aims are to improve the quality of patient care by a number of measures designed to correct the present imbalance in hospital medical staffing. One of these measures is to relate the number of doctors in the training grades more closely to expected career opportunities.

The steering group which drew up the "Plan for Action" fully recognised the importance of teaching and research, both in their own right and as an integral part of doctors' postgraduate training. In particular, it recognised the special need of academic medicine to be able to respond quickly to unforeseen academic developments. The mechanisms set out in the "Plan for Action" therefore make special provision for additional posts to be set up where exceptional circumstances indicate this, while ensuring that the total number of academic and research posts in the training grades is brought into line with future opportunities.

Benefit Claims

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of outstanding claims for social security benefits in the Dundee, East and Dundee, West offices of his Department on the latest available date; and what were the figures for the same months in each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: Details of the number of claims outstanding at the two offices concerned are shown in the table.

	26 October 1982	25 October 1983	23 October 1984	22 October 1985	21 October 1986	20 October 1987

[1] Injury benefit was abolished in April 1983.

[2] No figures were kept before June 1986 for the number of severe disablement allowance claims outstanding.

Note: Figures prior to 1982 are no longer available.

Single Payments

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many appeals against decisions relating to single payments for people on supplementary benefit are currently being dealt with by the Dundee, East and Dundee, West offices of his Department on the latest available figures; and how many were made up each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: At 10 November 1987 Dundee, East and Dundee, West local offices had respectively 25 and 45 appeals against decisions on supplementary benefit single payments where the appeal had been forwarded to the local social security appeal tribunal but a submission by the adjudication officer on the appeal had not yet been made. An adjudication officer's submission had been forwarded to the local social security appeal tribunal in respect of a further 331 and 357 single payment cases respectively and these appeals are awaiting a hearing.

I regret that the equivalent figures for each year since 1979 are not readily available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single payments for people on supplementary benefit are currently being made by the Dundee, East and Dundee, West offices of his Department on the latest available figures; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The number of single payments made to people receiving supplementary benefit from the Dundee, East and Dundee, West local offices of my Department are given in the table below. The figures are for the years April to April.

Year	Dundee East	Dundee West
1979–80	6,021	4,307
1980–81	5,442	4,009

[1] The figures for the years 1985–86 and 1986–87 are provisional.

Pensioners

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pensioners he estimates now receive a full rate rebate but are not on supplementary benefit or supplementary pension; and if he will give his estimate for (a) Scotland, (b) England and (c) Wales.

Mr. Portillo: The information is not available in the form requested. It is estimated that in the autumn of 1986, 280,000 people in Great Britain were in receipt of a full rate rebate but were not on supplementary benefit or supplementary pension.

Trainee Social Workers

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the shortages of placements for trainee social workers; and what assessment he has made of the implication for social work education.

Mr. Newton: National data on practice placements are not collected either by the Department or the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work, the statutory independent council responsible for promoting and validating social work training. Reports to CCETSW from social worker training courses however do confirm that shortages exist in some regions. Further information on the position is expected to be available from a survey recently carried out by the Association of Directors of Social Services.

In correspondence earlier this year between the chairman of CCETSW and myself about the council's reforms to social work training, emphasis was placed on the immediate improvements which could be made to current training. As a result, and through a grant of £250,000 from the Department, CCETSW will be addressing with social services departments ways of increasing the quantity and improving the quality of practice placements.

Social Work Students

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will monitor the means by which social service departments make available student placements to social work students in polytechnics and universities.

Mr. Newton: Monitoring the availability of practice placements is not a matter on which we propose to take action. It is best dealt with by those with a direct involvement in social work education — the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work, the social worker training centres and the employers. CCETSW has promoted a new examination of how to secure practice placements of good quality through the recent publication of its discussion document "Accreditation of Agencies and Practice Teachers in Social Work Education".

Children's Hospital, Birmingham

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he gave his consent to the partial closure of the cardiac unit at the children's hospital, Birmingham.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that a number of beds in this unit have had to be closed temporarily, so as to maintain a safe standard of nursing care. Health authorities are not obliged to consult Ministers before implementing a temporary closure for this reason.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why there has been a reduction in paediatric nursing care at the children's hospital, Birmingham.

Mrs. Currie: The provision of paediatric nursing care at this hospital is the responsibility of the Central Birmingham health authority. The hon. Member may therefore wish to write to the chairman of Central Birmingham health authority for the information he requires.

Sick Children's Nurses

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the recruitment, training and retention of registered sick children's nurses in Birmingham.

Mrs. Currie: Information on the recruitment, training and retention of registered sick children's nurses in Birmingham is not held centrally. The hon. Member may therefore wish to write to the chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority for the information he requires.

Maternity and Funeral Payments

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what amounts he has allowed for (a) maternity payments and (b) funeral payments in the budget for the social fund for 1988-89.

Mr. Portillo: Maternity and funeral payments under the social fund are not subject to budget discipline and are not therefore a part of the social fund budget announced recently.

Supplementary Budget

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of families with children claiming supplementary benefit were in receipt of one or more additional requirements at the latest date available.

Mr. Scott: At February 1986, the latest date for which information is available, 75·5 per cent. of supplementary benefit claimants with dependent children under 19 had one or more additional requirements.

Source: Annual statistical inquiry.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the current average waiting time for a decision on supplementary benefit claims in his Department's Dundee, East and Dundee, West offices; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The average number of days taken to process claims to supplementary benefit are shown in the table.

	Dundee, West	Dundee, East
26 October 1982	4	4
25 October 1983	1	6
23 October 1984	2	4

21 October 1986	3	2
20 October 1987	3	3

Figures prior to 1982 are no longer available.

Invalid Care Allowance

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will consider taking steps to amend the Supplementary Benefit (Conditions of Entitlement) Regulation 6*(b)* to insert a specific reference to receipt of the invalid care allowance being an acceptable reason to exempt a person from the requirement to register and be available for employment in order to receive supplementary benefit.

Mr. Scott: At the moment a person receiving invalid care allowance is usually exempt from the requirement to be available for work under the provisions of Supplementary Benefits (Conditions of Entitlement) Regulation 6*(b)* which applies where there are no alternative means of caring for a disabled person in receipt of attendance allowance. From the start of the income support scheme in April next year there will be a specific exemption for persons in receipt of invalid care allowance by virtue of paragraph 4*(a)* of schedule 1 to the draft Income Support (General) Regulations.

Homeless Persons

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance his Department give to local authorities concerning the resettlement of homeless persons outside their own borough in relation to the provision of health and social services.

Mrs. Currie: People from one borough who are accommodated in another are entitled to the full range of health and social services in the same way as any other resident. No specific guidance has been issued to local authorities.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will advise regional health authorities to ignore district health authorities' raising of income when allocating resources; and if he will ignore the extent to which income is raised in each region when allocating resources to the regional health authorities.

Mr. Newton: The allocation of funds between regional health authorities is concerned with net Exchequer resources and takes no account of the income which health authorities may raise and retain. The allocation of funds to districts is a matter for regions, and we have no plans to issue advice on this point.

Heating Allowances

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what precise guidelines he proposes to issue on heating allowances covered by the social fund.

Mr. Portillo: As my hon. Friend announced on 26 October at column 184, we intend to provide for a regulated system of help towards the cost of heating in cold weather. This will be paid as a right in a similar way to the arrangements for maternity and funeral payments under the social fund. Precise guidelines will be considered in the light of this winter's experience. Heating allowances are not included in the social fund though loans may be offered, in certain circumstances, for payment of fuel bills. The new income support scheme will continue to give people money to pay for heating. Extra help will be directed more effectively through the premiums to those in greatest need—pensioners, sick and disabled people and families.

Rating Reform

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if there will be a rebate for those paying water rates under the proposed community charge legislation.

Mr. Scott: When the community charge rebate scheme is introduced, it will not include rebates in respect of liability for water charges. In setting the levels of income support for April 1988, account was taken of the overall amount spent in supplementary benefit on water charges. This will be carried forward and reflected in community charge rebate thresholds.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if pensioners and low-income families, now on full rate rebates but not claiming supplementary benefit or the new income support, will be eligible for the 80 per cent. community charge rebate.

Mr. Scott: People eligible for income support will be eligible for the maximum community charge rebate of 80 per cent. irrespective of whether they claim income support.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Social Services whether (a) any rebate on the community charges will be paid separately to the husband and wife and (b) any rebate on the 20 per cent. for which they are liable, will be paid separately to the husband and wife.

Mr. Scott: The intention is that in normal circumstances each partner in a couple should receive separate demand notices showing their individual community charge liabilities, and that where the couple is entitled to a rebate the liabilities should be appropriately reduced. The maximum community charge rebate will be 80 per cent. and there will be no rebate on the remaining 20 per cent.

Wakefield District Health Authority

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the names, addresses and ages of the chairman, deputy chairman and members of the Wakefield district health authority, together with their nominating bodies.

Mrs. Currie: The chairman of Wakefield health authority is Sir Jack Smart, CBE, JP, aged 67 years. He may be contacted at the health authority offices at Stanley Royd hospital, Wakefield. The responsibility for appointing health authority chairmen is entirely that of my right hon. Friend and is not a matter of direct nomination. The members of Wakefield health authority are appointed by the Yorkshire regional health authority and Wakefield city council. Details are not held centrally but may be obtained from the chairman of the regional health authority.

Tax Benefit Model Tables

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will publish the tax benefit model tables for April 1987.

Mr. Portillo: I am placing copies of these tables in the Library today.

Cash Limits

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether there has been any change in the cash limits or running costs to his Department for 1987-88.

Mr. Scott: The cash limit for class XV, vote 5 (Administration and Miscellaneous Services) has been reduced by £3·049 million (from £1,342·968 million to £1,339·919 million).

The revision takes account of a number of changes, namely reductions of £2·6 million, arising from revised assumptions for unemployment, and £1,132 million in respect of the Department of Employment's 1986-87 cash limit overspend, (both reflected on this vote in reduced agency payments to the Department of Employment); an increase of £0·818 million following a reassessment in the announced abatement in respect of the DHSS 1986-87 cash limit overspend (from £4·284 million to £3·466 million), and transfers to the Department of Trade and Industry and the Welsh Office of £0·050 million and £0·085 million respectively.

As a result of the above-mentioned transfers to the Department of Trade and Industry and the Welsh Office, the gross running costs limit of the Department of Health and Social Security is reduced by £0·135 million from £1,700·813 million to £1,700·678 million.

Psychiatric Hospitals (Deaths)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total number of deaths from accidents or suicide in psychiatric hospitals in England in each of the last five years; and if he will list in the Official Report each such hospital where more than three deaths occurred in any one year, giving the total for that hospital in that year.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 9 November 1987]: I regret that the full information requested can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, my hon. Friend may be interested in the tables, which show readily available figures.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members (Salaries)

Mr. George: To ask the Lord Privy Seal how many right hon. and hon. Members are currently drawing their full parliamentary salary.

Mr. Wakeham: Six hundred and forty-nine right hon. and hon. Members are currently drawing their full parliamentary salary. The one hon. Member who is not receiving a parliamentary salary is not eligible to do so, since he has not yet taken the oath.

Select Committee on Welsh Affairs

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Lord Privy Seal if he will list by date the reports issued by the Welsh Affairs Select Committee since 1979 together with the dates on which Government replies were received.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested by the hon. Member is as follows (dates of reports are the dates when the report was made to the House):

Session 1979-80

First Report: The Role of the Welsh Office and Associated Bodies in Developing Employment Opportunities in Wales —HC731 (30 July 1980); Government Observations—Cmnd 8085 (December 19[illegible]).

First Special Report: Sub-Committees — HC417 (9 February 1980).

Session 1980-81

First Report: Supplementary Estimates — HC61 (9 December 1980); Government Observations contained in the First Special Report—HC122 (January 1981).

Second Report: Broadcasting in the Welsh language and the implications for Welsh and non-Welsh speaking viewers and listeners — HC448 (23 July 1981); Government Observations—Cmnd 8469 (January 1982).

First Special Report: Supplementary Estimates—HC122 (28 January 1981).

Session 1981-82

First Report: Welsh Water Authority: Establishment of Local Consumer Advisory Committees—HC335 (21 April 1982); Government Observations contained in First Special Report—HC499 (July 1982).

Session 1982-83

First Report: Water in Wales — HC229 (24 February 1983); Government Observations — Cmnd 9138 (February 1984).

First Special Report: The impact of the European Community on Wales—HC377 (11 May 1983).

Session 1983-84

First Report: The impact of regional industrial policy on Wales — HC427 (9 May 1984); Government Observations contained in the Second Special Report—HC576 (18 July 1984).

First Special Report: Response from the Welsh Water Authority to the Committee's First Report of session 1982-83 (Water in Wales)—HC237 (1 February 1984).

Session 1984-85

First Report: Public Transport in Wales — HC35 (21 January 1985); This inquiry was undertaken in response to a Government Consultation paper. No Government response was expected.

Session 1985-86

First Report: Coastal Sewage Pollution in Wales — HC101 (10 December 1985); Government Observations — Cmnd 9764 (7 April 1986).

First Special Report: Response of the Welsh Water Authority to the Committee's First Report of session 1985-86 (Coastal Sewage Pollution in Wales) — HC401 (14 May 1986).

Session 1986-87

First Report: Tourism in Wales — HC256 (26 March 1987); Government Response awaiting appointment of new Committee.

Second Report: The condition and repair of privately-owned housing — HC230 (13 May 1987); Government Response awaiting appointment of new Committee.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Lord Privy Seal if he will give the dates on which reports of the Welsh Affairs Select Committee have been discussed by the House of Commons.

Mr. Wakeham: As far as I am aware, no report from the Welsh Affairs Committee has been cited as being directly relevant to a debate. However, in recent years there has been a debate, as near as possible to St. David's day, when the subject of any of these reports could have been raised.

Security Vetting

Mr. Wray: To ask the Lord Privy Seal if he will make a statement on the criteria which the Select Committee on House of Commons (Services) consider should be used in the vetting of staff of hon. Members, as envisaged in paragraph 23 of its second report, HC 195, Session 1984-85, indicating those organisations membership of which would be proscribed.

Mr. Wakeham: The Services Committee has made no recommendation about the criteria to be used in checking staff, and has not suggested the proscription of any particular organisation.

Recycled paper

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Lord Privy Seal if he will make available recycled paper in equivalent styles and sizes to the House of Commons notepaper currently available for use by hon. Members, their staff, and staff of the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: Recycled paper for use as House of Commons stationery has been considered in the past, but was rejected as not being of satisfactory quality. However, a further request for updated information has been put to Her Majesty's Stationery Office and, once that advice has been received, the matter will be re-considered by the relevant sub-committee of the Services Committee.

DEFENCE

NFR 90 Frigate

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimate of the cost to the United Kingdom of the NFR90 collaborative frigate project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The estimate of current expenditure on NFR 90 is £1·7 million on the feasibility study. A decision is to be made shortly whether the United Kingdom will enter the next phase, which is project definition, at a cost of about £10 million. Any further expenditure will depend on the outcome of project definition and on subsequent decisions.

Low-flying Aircraft

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilians have been killed in accidents involving low-flying aircraft in Britain since 1983.

Mr. Freeman: None.

Departmental Statistics

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total civilian work force employed by his Department in Wales; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury: The number of full-time equivalent civilian staff, excluding casual staff, employed by the Ministry of Defence in Wales as at 1 October 1987 was 5,944.

Corresponding figures for each year from 1979 to 1986 are as follows:

	Number
1979 (1 January)	7,659
1980 (1 October)	7,600
1981 (1 October)	7,273
1982 (1 October)	7,024
1983 (1 October)	6,925
1984 (1 October)	6,680
1985 (1 October)	6,396
1986 (1 October)	6,236

For the purposes of consistency and comparability the above figures exclude personnel employed at Royal Ordnance factories, which ceased to be part of the Ministry of Defence on 2 January 1985.

Ministry of Defence full-time equivalent staff in Wales have therefore reduced by 12·9 per cent. between 1 January 1979 and 1 October 1987. Although the figures for Scotland and England are not available in precisely the same form, it is estimated that the corresponding reductions for Scotland and England are 10 per cent. and 26 per cent., respectively.

AIDS

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the United States authorities regarding AIDS testing of United States service personnel based in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: None. The United States forces in Europe are autonomous in medical matters. At a medical level the MOD maintains liaison with the United States armed forces.

Arms and Ammunition (Security)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his replies of 28 October, Official Report, column 338, to the hon. Member for Burnley, he has any proposals to tighten security at locations where the Air Training Corps and similar bodies store arms and ammunition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Arrangements for the security storage of arms and ammunition in the service cadet forces are kept under constant review.

In the Air Training Corps a major programme of works services to improve units' physical security has been under way for the past three years. Custom-made steel containers have been installed for the storage of ammunition and rifle bolts, and new alarm systems are being installed. New buildings will have concrete armouries fitted with steel doors. A programme of security education has been undertaken for all ATC personnel. Crime prevention surveys of all units are also being carried out.

In the Army Cadet Force and Combined Cadet Force a survey is currently being conducted into the standard and state of existing armouries. Some new armouries are being provided and older armouries are being strengthened by the provision of window grilles, stronger doors and more secure locks. Structurally approved armouries are being upgraded by installing alarm systems linked to police stations or private homes.

In the Sea Cadet Corps naval security staff carry out regular and spot checks of each unit's security arrangements and if these are not up to standard arms and ammunition are removed until security has been improved. Special contingency plans have been agreed with the police to deal with any thefts, especially in inner city areas.

Security arrangements for the storage of arms and ammunition by the service cadet forces are prescribed centrally by my Department and comply fully with the requirements of the Firearms Act 1968.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his replies of 28 October, Official Report, column 338, to the hon. Member for Burnley, he will give the place and details regarding each of the 53 break-ins which occurred over the past 12 months at sites where the Air Training Corps and other similar bodies store arms and ammunition.

Mr. Freeman: Details of break-ins involving arms and ammunition (including inert drill purpose items) over the 12 month period October 1986 to September 1987 at service cadet corps sites are as follows:

	Date	Place	Unit	Stolen	Recovered

2.	September 1987	Guildford	Guildford Unit, Surrey	1 × drill purpose machine gun

These figures have been compiled using the latest information available and update the figures previously provided. Twenty-two break-ins included in my previous answer did not involve arms or ammunition, while three others fall outside the given period.

Search and Rescue Service

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what control his Department proposes to exercise over a privatised search and rescue service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We continue to study the proposals put forward by Bristow Helicopters Ltd., advocating the transfer to commercial contractors of the search and rescue helicopter service, currently provided by the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force. No conclusions have yet been reached and no decisions taken.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the financial implications for mountaineers of a privatised search and rescue service.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Hillhead (Mr. Galloway) on 27 October 1987, at column 241.

Noise Insulation (Leuchars)

Mr. Menzies Cambell : To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost to his Department of noise insulation and double glazing grants so far provided because of the arrival of the conversion squadron at RAF Leuchars earlier in the current year; and how many such payments have been made.

Mr. Freeman: It is not possible to provide the information in the form requested. However, the extension to the noise insulation grant scheme, which was introduced in March this year, took account of the predicted increase in aircraft activity that would result from the arrival of the Phantom operational conversion unit at RAF Leuchars. To date, some £45,000 has been paid in grants under the extended scheme and a total of 30 payments made. Grant applications have so far been received from more than half of the estimated 620 homes within the area of the new scheme.

Foxhunter Radar

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by how much the Foxhunter radar programme has been overspent; and why information about the cost of this programme has been deleted from the major project list in volume 2 of the Defence Estimates.

Mr. Sainsbury: Negotiations are continuing with Marconi Defence Systems towards a firm price for the remaining work necessary to achieve the required radar performance. Information about the cost of the Foxhunter programme was not included in volume 2 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates" to avoid prejudicing these commercial negotiations. By the same token it would be inappropriate to give details now, while negotiations continue.

Trident

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimated cost of the Trident programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: As I announced to the House on 27 January this year, the latest estimated cost of Trident is £9,265 million at 1986-87 prices and £1 = $1·50.

Aldermaston

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the outcome of the audit carried out by John Brown of the Aldermaston redevelopment; what cost overruns were revealed; what action is being taken to remedy them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: A contract was let following competition to John Brown Engineers and Constructors Ltd. in March 1987 to advise and assist the Atomic Weapons Establishment (AWE), Aldermaston, with the co-ordination and integration of key projects in the programme of new capital facilities at the Establishment.

Following advice from John Brown as part of its initial task, competitive tenders have now been issued for the provision of an integrated project management service to the establishment, through to the completion of the capital programme.

Information on the cost of the capital works programme at AWE Aldermaston is included in the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General on the "Control and Management of the Trident Programme" (HC27). A statement on the report would be inappropriate at this time for the reason I gave in my answer to the hon. Member on 30 October at column 485.

RNAD Milford Haven and RAF Trecwn

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the report on the future of RNAD Milford Haven and RNAD Trecwn is to be published; and what period will be allowed for consultation.

Mr. Sainsbury: The report has yet to be considered by management. No date has been fixed for publication of a consultative document version of the report.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total number of (a) full-time staff, (b) part-time staff, and (c) apprentices employed at (a) RNAD Milford Haven and (b) RNAD Trecwn in each of the past 15 years.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information is available only from 1978. This is as follows:

	Trecwn		Milford Haven
	Full-time Staff	Apprentices	Full-time Staff	Apprentices
31 January 1978	480	7	287	23
31 January 1979	497	7	275	23
31 January 1980	483	8	271	19
31 January 1981	454	8	258	17
31 January 1982	427	8	252	16
31 January 1983	425	9	254	18
31 January 1984	[1]448	11	[1]278	12
31 January 1985	[1]454	30	[1]268	9
31 January 1986	[1]389	45	[1]241	6
31 January 1987	[1]370	50	[1]238	3

No part-time staff have been engaged over this period.

[1] Includes Ministry of Defence Police.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total wage and salary bill of (a) RNAD Milford Haven and (b) RNAD Trecwn in 1986-87.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information is as follows:

(a) RNAD Milford Haven
£2·191 million + £0·416 million for pension and gratuity.

(b) RNAD Trecwn
£3·483 million + £0·662 million for pension and gratuity.

Military Personnel (Private Activities)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of all occasions in the past three years when serving members of the armed services have been engaged in activities associated with private individuals, companies, associations and in each case provide details of the number of military personnel involved and the cost charged to the user.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 2 November, Official Report, column 600, if he will provide details of the standard procedures adopted by the Directorate of Naval Recruiting when the services of military personnel are sought by commercial companies.

Mr. Freeman: Such requests are considered in the light of prospective training, publicity and recruiting benefits, the availability of the relevant personnel and the adequacy of safety and financial arrangements.

Harrier Aircraft

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he had on the future of the AV8B/Harrier GR5 on his recent visit to the United States of America.

Mr. Sainsbury: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Secretary of State on 10 November, at column 148.

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Harrier GR5 aircraft have been ordered from British Aerospace; how many have so far been delivered; and how many are scheduled for delivery in each financial year up to 1995.

Mr. Sainsbury: Sixty-two Harrier GR5s have to date been ordered from British Aerospace, including two prototypes. Seven have been delivered, although not all of them are in RAF service. Deliveries will continue at a rate of some 20 a year until early 1990.

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the AV8B/Harrier GR5.

Mr. Sainsbury: Sixty-two Harrier GR5 aircraft are currently on order from British Aerospace and deliveries have begun; a further order is under consideration. As far as the United States Government's position on AV8B is concerned, I would refer the hon. Member to my replies of 6 July 1987.

Hunting and Polo

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) to what extent military personnel in corps and units not holding Army horses participate in hunting and polo during duty time;

(2) if he will take action to ensure, that the benefits of equestrian training bestowed by hunting or playing polo in those units which hold Army horses are shared equally between officers and other ranks.

Mr. Freeman: Military personnel of all ranks serving in mounted units have the opportunity to derive the benefits of equestrian training afforded by hunting when this is done using military horses. However, hunting also takes place as a recreational activity on the same basis as polo and other sports in duty time, other duties permitting, at the commanding officer's discretion. In these circumstances, privately owned horses only are used and personnel in mounted and non-mounted units participate largely at their own expense. It is for individuals to decide whether they wish to spend their money in this way.

Gulf

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has of the current average monthly cost of the Royal Navy's mine counter-measures and escort activity in the Gulf.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 5 November 1987 at column 888.

BP Flotation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 2 November, Official Report, column 600, when he expects to announce the precise costs to be recovered by the Directorate of Naval Recruiting from BP for services rendered on 15 October.

Mr. Freeman: The costs to the Ministry of Defence of the Royal Marine participation in the BP share launch ceremony total £2,293 and this sum is being recovered from the publicity company employed for the event.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to publish the doctrine for the use of British tactical nuclear weapons.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The British Army of the Rhine operates Lance surface-to-surface missiles and artillery systems which are capable of firing nuclear warheads supplied by the United States. Battlefield nuclear weapons are an important and effective element of the deterrent forces maintained by NATO in support of its strategy of flexible response. As is the case with all of NATO's nuclear forces, the employment of battlefield nuclear weapons in the defence of the Alliance would be governed by general political guidelines agreed by the Nuclear Planning Group. These guidelines are classified.

Battlefield Artillery Target Engagement System

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost to date of the battlefield artillery target engagement system to Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Sainsbury: The total expenditure to date on all phases of the BATES programme is some £130 million at 1987-88 average outturn prices.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the in-service date for the battlefield artillery target engagement system as specified in the battlefield artillery target engagement system original contract is on schedule; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 2 November at column 605.

Civilian Workers

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total civilian work force employed by his Department in Scotland; and what was the corresponding figure for each year since 1980.

Mr. Sainsbury: The number of full-time equivalent civilian staff, excluding casual staff, employed by the Ministry of Defence in Scotland as at 1 October 1987 was 12,258.

Corresponding figures for each year from 1980 to 1986 were:

	Number
1 October 1980	19,439
1 October 1981	18,850
1 October 1982	18,430
1 October 1983	18,645
1 October 1984	18,440
1 October 1985	18,162
1 October 1986	18,257

For the purpose of consistency and comparability the above figures exclude personnel employed at royal ordnance factories, which changed from being part of the Ministry of Defence to independent Companies Act status on 2 January 1985.

The reduction in numbers between October 1986 and October 1987 is largely due to the transfer of some 5,700 royal dockyard, Rosyth staff to commercial management on 6 April 1987.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with the progress of the European fighter aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 10 November to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies).

NORTHERN IRELAND

Intergovernmental Conference

10. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will now reconsider his decision not to place in the Library minutes of the Anglo-Irish Conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The position remains as stated by my right hon. Friend in his reply to the hon. Member on 29 June. A copy of the joint statement issued after the meeting of the Intergovernmental Conference on 21 October has been placed in the Library.

17. Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference last discussed the administration of justice in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Stanley: At the last meeting of the Intergovernmental Conference on 21 October.

21. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what subjects were discussed at his last meeting with representatives of the Government of the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier to a question from the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett).

36. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make a statement on the measures agreed at the last meeting of the Intergovernmental Conference to gain the support of the minority in Northern Ireland for the administration of justice.

Mr. Tom King: At its meeting on 21 October the Intergovernmental Conference discussed, among other things, a report from the official group which reviewed the progress that had been made and the further measures that had been proposed to enhance public confidence in the administration of justice. It was agreed that the two sides should remain in close contact on this issue.

"Elected Representatives and the Democratic Process"

12. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received following the publication of the discussion paper "Elected Representatives and the Democratic Process".

30. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what response he has received to his consultative document concerning the conduct of elected representatives.

34. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received regarding his discussion paper "Elected Representatives and the Democratic Process" in Northern Ireland.

41. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make a statement on the discussion paper "Elected Representatives and the Democratic Process".

Mr. Needham: The discussion paper invited comments by 30 November. To date we have received 11 letters on the subject and we have been given a number of comments orally.

Equal Opportunity

13. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to publish his White Paper on equality of opportunity.

Mr. Viggers: We shall announce details of our legislative proposals on equality of opportunity as soon as possible in the new year.

31. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make a statement on the Government's intention to legislate following on the standing advisory committee report on equality of opportunity.

Mr. Viggers: I refer the hon. Member to my answer earlier today to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd).

Security

16. Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: Since I last answered questions in the House on 23 July, 29 people have been killed in incidents arising from the security situation. These include a number of believed terrorists killed by their own devices. Against that serious background, the security forces have achieved some significant results. So far this year, 394 people have been charged with serious offences, including 25 with murder. A total of 230 weapons and approximately 1,300 rounds of ammunition and 12,725 lb of explosives have been recovered.

In addition, the Garda Siochana has recovered 118 weapons, 10,000 rounds of ammunition and some 4,000 lb of explosives. In addition, the House will be aware of the substantial arms seizure on the Eksund for which we are most grateful to the French authorities.

As I informed the House, I am having further urgent discussions with my security advisers in the light of the recent outrages. I shall also be having early discussions with Irish Ministers about security matters.

The House will be aware of the universal condemnation that Sunday's outrage in Enniskillen has received. It is vital that that condemnation is backed by the fullest help and support from all sides of the community to the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the security forces in their vital fight against terrorism.

24. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of cross-border security co-operation.

Mr. Stanley: The Anglo-Irish Agreement has given us the best opportunity we have so far had for enhancing security co-operation with the authorities in the Republic of Ireland. In the last two years we have made worthwhile advances, and look forward to making still further progress in enabling the security forces both north and south of the border to deal more effectively with the terrorist threat.

33. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current security situation in the Province.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make a statement on the security position in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North-West (Mr. Bellingham) and the hon. Member for Londonderry, East (Mr. Ross).

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make a statement on the current operation of the Anglo-Irish Agreement regarding security matters.

Mr. Tom King: The Anglo-Irish Agreement has given us the best opportunity we have so far had for enhancing security co-operation with the authorities in the Republic of Ireland. In the last two years we have made worthwhile advances, and look forward to making still further progress in enabling the security forces both north and south of the border to deal more effectively with the terrorist threat.

Abortion

18. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent consideration has been given to extending the Abortion Act 1967 to Northern Ireland.

19. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent consideration has been given to extending the Abortion Act 1967 to Northern Ireland.

26. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent consideration has been given to extending the Abortion Act 1967 to Northern Ireland.

27. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent consideration has been given to extending the Abortion Act 1967 to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise).

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of convictions in Northern Ireland for procuring an illegal abortion in each year since 1957.

Mr. Needham: Police records show that since 1975, two persons have been found guilty of procuring an illegal abortion—one each in 1981 and 1983. Information is not available for the period prior to 1975.

Extradition

20. Mr. John David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the reasons why the legislation for extradition in accordance with the European convention for the suppression of terrorism has not been brought into effect by the Government of the Republic of Ireland, as referred to by the Prime Minister at Hillsborough on 15 November 1985; what representations he has made to the Government of the Republic of Ireland in this respect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The Extradition (European Convention on the Suppression of Terrorism) Act 1987, which was enacted on 21 January this year, provides for it to come into effect on 1 December. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made clear to the Irish Government the importance we attach to this.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current state of extradition agreements between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: Extradition arrangements with the Republic of Ireland are governed by the backing of Warrants (Republic of Ireland) Act 1965 and by similar legislation in the Republic. Since the signing of the Anglo-Irish Agreement, both Governments have been working to make existing arrangements more effective.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many requests for the extradition of persons from Northern Ireland to the Republic of Ireland have been received in each of the last five years, and how many of these requests have been (a) granted and (b) refused.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 2 November 1987]: The information is as follows:

Year	Number of persons sought	Number extradited	Number of requests refused
1983	5	1	0
1984	15	13	0
1985	0	0	0
1987	3	1	0

Note: In no case was an extradition request refused. Where the number extradited is less than the number whose extradition was sought, this is because the others concerned either could not be located in Northern Ireland or they surrendered voluntarily to the Garda in the Republic or were arrested by them.

Employees (Religious Beliefs)

22. Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what success he is having in his campaign to compel employers in Northern Ireland to keep records of the percentage of religious beliefs of their employees.

Mr. Viggers: The Government have strongly recommended, in the "Guide to Effective Practice", published on 15 September, that employers in Northern Ireland should monitor the religious affiliation of their employees. It is too early to assess the response of employers to this recommendation, but I am aware that monitoring is already under taken by a number of employers in both the private and public sectors. I urge other employers to follow their example.

Maguire Family

23. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received concerning the case of the Maguire family.

Mr. Tom King: None.

Kincora Boys' Home

25. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he is prepared to re-open investigations into events at the Kincora boys' home.

Mr. Needham: No.

Shoot-to-kill Policy

28. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a further statement about the investigation by Mr. Colin Sampson into the alleged shoot-to-kill in 1982.

Mr. Tom King: I have informed the House that I will make a statement about any aspects of the report that fall within my responsibility at the earliest appropriate time. I am not yet in a position to make that statement.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

29. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a further statement on the effects on the people of Northern Ireland of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

37. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the latest developments in the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave earlier to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Sir J. Biggs-Davison).

42. Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what evidence he has on the level of support from the Unionist population for the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: I take note of Unionists' views expressed by right hon. and hon. Members of this House and others, and of the findings of such independent research as is available.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of the Anglo-Irish Agreement following his recent meeting with the Tanaiste, Mr. Lenihan.

Mr. Tom King: Substantial progress has been made towards the objectives of reassuring the majority on the status of the Province, increasing confidence in the minority community in Northern Ireland, and enhancing security co-operation with the Republic of Ireland.

Youth Training Programme

32. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many young people in Northern Ireland have (a) refused a YTP place and (b) left prematurely from a YTP scheme, in each year since 1983.

Mr. Viggers: The numbers of minimum age school leavers who refused the guaranteed offer of a training place in each year since 1983 are:

	Number
1983-84	2,348
1984-85	1,974
1985-86	1,080
1986-87	1,257

Records of premature leavers were not recorded for each of the years in question.

Jury Trials

35. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to bring forward legislation to reintroduce jury trials in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Stanley: Trial by jury already takes place in all contested cases in the Crown court involving non-scheduled offences and in those contested cases involving scheduled offences which have been "certified out" by the Attorney-General.

Last year the list of scheduled offences which the Attorney-General can "certify out" was extended but, because of the risk of intimidation of jurors and perverse verdicts by juries, we do not believe that it is possible at present to reintroduce jury trials generally for scheduled offences.

Planning Appeals

38. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many planning applications were approved on appeal to the planning appeal commission during the last three years; and how many of these approvals had conditions attached.

Mr. Needham: In each of the last three years the figures were 52, 71, and 94. Conditions are attached to all planning permissions.

Salmon Farming

39. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action has been taken by Her Majesty's Government to support Northern Ireland private enterprise efforts to develop salmon farming; and what assessment he has made of the effects on the Ulster economy which are likely to accrue from such an enterprise.

Mr. Viggers: Over the past year the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland made two offers of grant-aid for salmon farming projects in Northern Ireland. Whilst salmon farming would have a positive effect on the Northern Ireland economy, the siting of projects has to take account of environmental factors and other interests.

North Down (Hospital Facilities)

40. Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide a new hospital and better hospital facilities for the North Down area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Decisions on the planning and delivery of hospital services for the local population of the North Down area are primarily a matter for the eastern health and social services board. I understand it has consulted a wide range of interests about its proposals for hospital services in the area.

Final decisions have yet to be taken, but I understand that the board's policy is to consolidate acute services at the Ulster hospital, Dundonal, with appropriate support from the Ards and Bangor hospitals.

Housing

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new houses the Housing Executive has constructed from 1982 to 1987 in the areas covered by the following district offices: Downpatrick, Kilkeel, Banbridge, Newry district 1 and Newry district 2.

Mr. Needham: This is primarily a matter for the Housing Executive. I understand from the chairman that in the period from 1 April 1982 to 31 March 1987 the Housing Executive has completed the following numbers of dwellings in these areas:

	Number
Downpatrick Office	387
Kilkeel Office	72
Banbridge Office	163
Newry No.1 Office	202
Newry No.2 Office	153

Terrorism

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the names and party political affiliation of elected representatives at all levels in the United Kingdom murdered by Irish Republican Army terrorists since 1968.

Mr. Needham: The information that is readily available regarding Northern Ireland elected representatives murdered by terrorists is set out in the table. The murder of elected representatives from other parts of the United Kingdom is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Home Secretary and the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Date	Members of Parliament Westminster	Members of Parliament Stormont/ Northern Ireland Assembly	Sitting Councillor	Party	Terrorist Organisation Responsible

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons died as the result of terrorist activity in Northern Ireland in (a) 1985, (b) 1986 and (c) 1987 to date; and of these how many in each year were murdered by terrorists.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 10 November 1987]: The information up to 9 November 1987 is as follows:

	1985	1986	1987
Number of persons murdered by Terrorists (also includes those murdered as a result of internal disputes)	48	55	76
Number of persons believed to be terrorists and assumed to have been killed by their own devices or weapons	1	—	4
Number of persons believed to be terrorists killed by the security forces	3	4	8
Total deaths associated with terrorist activity	52	59	88

Explosives

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of commercial explosive recovered in Ulster during 1985, 1986, and 1987 to date, can be traced back to the Republic of Ireland; and if he will define this in terms of weight.

Mr. Stanley: The percentage and weight of commercial explosive recovered in Northern Ireland having been manufactured in the Republic of Ireland in each of the years in question was approximately as follows:

	Percentage	Weight kgs
1985	59	47
1986	69	61
[1]1987	74	58

[1] To date.

Homelessness

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the proposed Northern Ireland legislation on homelessness will be published.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 6 November 1987, at column 950.

Republic of Ireland (Ministerial Meeting)

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his last meeting with the Foreign Minister of the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: I last met Mr. Lenihan on 21 October, at a meeting of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference. A joint statement was issued after the meeting, and a copy has been placed in the Library.

Fire Service

Mr. John David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many full-time fire stations there are in Northern Ireland; what is the size of population served by each of these stations; what is the size of population served by Newtownards fire station; and when he proposes to provide a complete full-time unit in Newtownards.

Mr. Needham: There are seven full-time fire stations in Northern Ireland — six in Belfast and one in Londonderry.

The six Belfast stations service a population of approximately 300,000. The Londonderry station services a population of approximately 63,000. The Newtownards retained fire station services a population of approximately 28,000.

The Fire Authority for Northern Ireland completed its review of fire cover in Northern Ireland in 1986. The review recommended an enhancement of fire services throughout the province, including a one pump full-time fire station in Newtownards. The fire authority has embarked on the first phase of a development programme providing for a number of new fire stations. Newtownards is not included in this first phase, but on its completion in the early 1990s the Newtownards position will be considered again in the light of circumstances prevailing at that time.

Road Bridges

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has completed a survey into the damage caused to road bridges in Northern Ireland as a result of the floods on 21 October; if he will list (a) the bridges damaged, (b) the bridges destroyed and, (c) those which will have to be demolished and replaced; and what is his estimate of the cost of (i) repairing damage and (ii) replacing bridges.

Mr. Viggers: There are approximately 5,000 bridges in Northern Ireland and it has not yet been possible to complete a detailed survey. To date, 25 bridges have been found to be damaged. They are:

Glasker Bridge, Rathfriland, County Down
Tullyah, Camlough, County Armagh
Maintain, Camlough, County Armagh
Ashtree Hill, Laurelvale, County Armagh
Fry's Bridge, Dromara, County Down
Kilnhill Road, Dromara, County Down
Old Mill Road, Scarva, County Down
Ballyroney Road, Rathfriland, County Down
Darkley Road, Keady, County Armagh
Drumhillery Road, Middletown, County Armagh
Tassagh, Keady, County Armagh
Cladybeg, Markethill, County Armagh
Dromore Road, Lurgan, County Armagh
Aghadowey (2), County Londonderry
Legavallon Pot, Limavady, County Londonderry
Ahoghill Road, Randalstown, County Antrim
Parkgate, County Antrim
Crumlin, County Antrim
Magheramason, County Tyrone
Greencastle, County Tyrone
Usnagh Burn, County Tyrone
Drumbinnion, County Tyrone
Railway Bridge, Newtownstewart, County Tyrone

At this stage it is not possible to say whether these bridges will need to be demolished and replaced or can be strengthened. All necessary precautions have been taken to safeguard and assist traffic movement.

The following seven bridges have been washed away:

Rathtrillick, County Armagh
Derryhennet, County Armagh
Carrick, near Clogher, County Tyrone
Drumnakilly, County Tyrone
Killymaddy, County Tyrone
Footbridge, Sionmills, County Tyrone
Cullycapple, County Londonderry

Estimates of the cost of refurbishing and replacing these bridges are not yet complete, but are unlikely to be less than £1 million.

Democracy

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what information he has in relation to the 20 delegations of councillors, which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State the hon. Member for Wiltshire, North (Mr. Needham) saw, concerning the discussion paper on elected representatives and the democratic process in Northern Ireland, as to whether any member of any of the delegations has taken part in any official or unofficial march, leading to outbreaks of violence or riotous behaviour;

(2) what information he has in relation to the 20 delegations of councillors, which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State the hon. Member for Wiltshire, North (Mr. Needham) saw, concerning the discussion paper on elected representatives and the democratic process in Northern Ireland, as to whether any member of any of the delegations had appeared on a platform or marched in procession with others dressed in para-military uniform;

(3) what information he has, in relation to the 20 delegations of councillors which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State the hon. Member for Wiltshire, North (Mr. Needham) saw, concerning the discussion paper on elected representatives and the democratic process in Northern Ireland, as to whether any member of any of the delegations had threatened, or implied their support of, the use of force by speaking or being present at a meeting of an organisation such as the Ulster Clubs, the Ulster Defence Association or the Provisional Sinn Fein, in each case listing the organisation;

(4) what information he has, in relation to the 20 delegations of councillors which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State the hon. Member for Wiltshire, North (Mr. Needham) saw, concerning the discussion paper on elected representatives and the democratic process in Northern Ireland, as to whether any member of any of the delegations had participated in the organisation of the 1974 Ulster workers' stoppage or similar acts or had demonstrated outside the Maryfield headquarters of the Anglo-Irish secretariat.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 2 November 1987]: Information about the elected representatives of the constitutional political parties in Northern Ireland is not available in a form which would enable me to answer these questions. I would deprecate, however, any illegal or irresponsible behaviour by elected representatives from either end of the political spectrum.

Widdicombe Report

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to implement in Northern Ireland any of the proposals contained in the Widdicombe committee report on the conduct of local government; what advice his Department is giving to local councillors on this subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 5 November 1987]: The report of the committee of inquiry into the conduct of local authority business related to local government in Great Britain. When decisions are taken on the application of the report's recommendations to local authorities in Great Britain, we shall assess their relevance to local government in Northern Ireland.

NHS (Private Contractors)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of each health and social services board which has contractual arrangements with a private non-National Health Service hospital to provide acute medical services, showing (a) the hospital with which a contract is made, (b) the number of patients treated by that hospital during 1986-87, (c) the total amount spent by each health and social services board on treatment under the contract during 1986-87 and (d) the amount which (c) represents as a percentage of the overall health and social services budget for 1986-87.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 6 November 1987]: Only the Southern health and social services board has any such contractual arrangements. Details are as follows:

(a) St. John of God Hospital, Newry
(b) 188
(c) £81,029
(d) 0·1 per cent.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of all new contracts awarded by each health and social services board, by hospital, since 31 December 1986, for (a) portering, (b) catering, (c) laundry, (d) cleaning and (e) other ancillary work: and if he will give the estimated annual savings for each contract awarded.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 6 November 1987]: No new contracts for catering, laundry or cleaning have been awarded by Northern Ireland health and social services boards since 31 December 1986. Information about portering and other ancillary work is not available centrally.

Terrorists (Escapes from Custody)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many incidents of escapes of terrorists there have been from police custody and from prisons in Northern Ireland since 1968 to date; from which police stations, courts or prisons each such escape took place; how many persons escaped on each occasion; and to which terrorist group or groups they belonged.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 10 November 1987]: Information is not available for the whole period requested nor are details of terrorist affiliations, but such information as is readily available is shown in the table:

Numbers of escapes from custody per year to date

Notes:

Figures in brackets identify numbers of escapees per incident.

The figures do not include prisoners who have not returned from Home Leave, those who were convicted of non-scheduled offences and those who were detainees. Statistics are only available from 1970 onwards.

There were no escapes from custody for the years 1977, 1978, 1979, 1982, 1985, 1986, and 1987 (to October).

AIDS

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what advice his Department is giving to employers about preventing discrimination against people with HIV and haemophilia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: In January 1987 the Department of Economic Development posted copies of a booklet "AIDS and Employment" to all known employers in Northern Ireland. The purpose of the booklet is to prevent unnecessary fear and worry at work which could lead to discrimination against those who might be infected. No general advice has been provided by the Department in respect of haemophilia. In addition the employment medical advisory service of the Department has medically qualified staff available to give free advice to employers and employees about all occupational health matters including AIDS and haemophilia. The Labour Relations Agency is also available to give expert advice on the employment aspects of such matters.

River Roe

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the minimum, mean and maximum flow of the River Roe recorded at Ardnargle, Limavady, in each of the last five years and on 21 October.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 10 November 1987]: Mean flows at the Ardnargle gauging station are not normally calculated (and cannot be produced within the time available).

The other information requested is as follows:

	Maximum cubic metres per second	Minimum cubic metres per second
1982	163·0	1·09
1983	100·8	0·99
1984	179·0	0·75
1985	170·4	0·99
1986	148·3	0·91
[1]1987	171·0	0·91

[1] To date.

The maximum flow recorded so far in 1987, 171 cu m per second occurred at 0200 on 22 October. However in the flood of 21-22 October 1987 the banks were widely breached upstream of the automatic recording gauge resulting in a lower figure being recorded than would have been the case had the flow been contained within the floodbanks.

Cullycapple Road (River Bridge)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the drainage division of the Department of Agriculture, Northern Ireland, first received a report of a tree lying across the arch of the bridge on the Cullycapple road, County Londonderry; and why it was not removed before the flood of 21 October.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 10 November 1987]: The report was received on 19 October 1987, but high water levels on 20 October prevented the removal of the fallen tree from the river. The tree was removed on 27 October when water levels had fallen sufficiently to allow the work to proceed.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects the bridge over the Agivey river on the Cullycapple road to be replaced and the road reopened for traffic; whether he intends to erect a temporary bridge or a permanent structure in the first instance; and what is the estimated cost of the replacement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer, 10 November 1987]: It is intended to erect a temporary Bailey bridge in the first instance. The road is scheduled to reopen on Monday 15 November 1987. The design of the permanent replacement bridge will be included in the current emergency repair programme and construction will take place as soon as possible. The estimated cost of a permanent replacement bridge is £110,000.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Scientists

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish figures for the number of British scientists leaving to work abroad.

Mr. Jackson: There are no figures from official sources, but a recent sample of universities, research council institutes and Government and industrial research laboratories, carried out by the Royal Society and the Fellowship of Engineering, showed that in five major fields of science there were 931 emigrants from the United Kingdom over the period 1975-85. Over the same period there were 685 immigrants, including 183 returning Britons. For members of university research groups the emigration rate averaged about 2 per cent. annually. For staff from industry, Government and research establishments the rate was 0·5 per cent. or less.

Teachers

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give (a) the number of teachers' representatives to be included in the newly proposed teachers' negotiating group, (b) the number of representatives on the management side to be included in the teachers' negotiating group and (c) the number of management members who will be his representatives; and if he will make a statement about who the other management representatives are likely to be.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Green Paper "Teachers' Pay and Conditions: A Consultative Document", considers two main alternative types of arrangements which have been proposed in recent months and then sets out proposals for a teachers' negotiating group. It sets out the Government's view that the Secretary of State's representatives should have a majority of votes on the management side of the teachers' negotiating group. Paragraphs 7.25 to 7.52 identify various issues about the details of a teachers' negotiating group on which views are sought, which include issues raised by the hon. Member.

Trade Union Education

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the memorandum of arrangements 1987-88 governing Government grants towards spending on trade union education and training by independent trade unions not affiliated to the Trades Union Congress will be issued.

Mr. Jackson: The memorandum of arrangements for 1987-88 will be issued this month and will be circulated to all trade unions not affiliated to the Trades Union Congress.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy that the grant available for trade union education and training by independent trade unions not affiliated to the Trades Union Congress will rise at least in line with inflation, in the light of the fact that the grant for 1986-87 remained at the same level in cash terms as in 1985-86.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has recently determined that the grant available for education and training by trades unions not affiliated to the Trades Union Congress should be continued for the financial year 1987-88 at a rate 3 per cent. higher than that agreed for 1986-87.

Antarctica

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what special provision he has made for research in Antarctica within the additions to the science budget which he announced on 3 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Within the sums I announced for the science budget, the additions specifically for research in Antarctica are £8·6 million in 1988-89, £17·7 million in 1989-90 and £3·7 million in 1990-91. This additional funding will help to maintain and advance the high quality of United Kingdom research in Antarctica supported by the Natural Environment Research Council through the British Antarctic Survey. The greater part will be used to purchase a new research and supply ship. This will make important contributions to marine geology, geophysics and biology in the southern oceans and will support more scientists in Antarctica. Atmospheric research will continue from a new base at Halley, with further studies of the "ozone hole" discovered by BAS scientists. The additional funds will also support other research programmes of global relevance: on the continent's animal and mineral resources and on ice and climate, including the "greenhouse effect" caused by increasing carbon dioxide in the atmosphere.

Bogus Degrees

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the Government intends to legislate against bogus degrees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has today issued a consultation paper outlining the Government's legislative proposals. These are to define genuine United Kingdom degrees as being those awarded by bodies authorised by royal charter or Act of Parliament to award them, and to make it an offence for any other person or institution to award what purported to be such a degree. Subject to the outcome of consultation we intend to add the necessary provisions at Committee stage of the Education Bill to be introduced later this month. Copies of the consultation paper have been placed in the Vote Office.

NORTHERN IRELAND

"Ulster Year Book"

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why publication of the "Ulster Year Book" has ceased; and for what reasons.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer, 12 November 1987]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to a similar question from the right hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) on 9 November 1987 at column 61.

ENERGY

Electricity Prices

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library a copy of his letter of 5 November to Conservative hon. Members concerning electricity prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: No.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Civil Defence

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that planning by local authorities for emergencies arising from accidents or incidents at nuclear power stations in the United Kingdom or abroad takes precedence over planning for war emergencies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983 impose a number of civil defence duties on local authorities, and under the Civil Protection in Peacetime Act 1986 civil defence planning may take into account the possibility of a peacetime emergency. No statutory requirements are imposed on local authorities in relation to planning for accidents at nuclear power stations in the United Kingdom, but in practice all local authorities recognise the need to make plans in consultation with the operators of sites in their areas, and with other agencies involved. As regards incidents arising from nuclear installations overseas, the position was explained by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 30 June.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the principal differences between current plans for civil nuclear emergencies on the one hand, and war emergencies on the other, with particular reference to the evacuation of the civilian population and the role and location of emergency services.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Planning for a wartime emergency requires consideration of a wide range of possible scenarios, from a period of international tension to a nuclear attack. Plans for dealing with an accident at a nuclear installation are based on coping with the worst accident considered to have a practicable chance of occurring. The operations of an installation are required to draw up emergency plans (approved by the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive) in collaboration with local authorities and emergency services to deal with on-site and off-site aspects of an accident. Plans for each site cover all relevant factors, including questions of evacuation.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the implications for casualty numbers of implementing current civil defence advice to the public to stay put in the event of a nuclear attack; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Detailed assessments of this kind are not made. As the emergency planning guidance to local authorities makes clear, the effects of nuclear attack would be determined by such factors as the strategic intentions of the enemy and meteorological conditions.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether authorities charged with a duty to plan for the protection of the public in war will receive guidance from his Department on planning for a wartime rescue service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A report by the joint local authority-Home Office working group is currently under consideration. Guidance to local authorities will be issued in due course.

Prison Industries

Mr. Chris Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on the progress of his inquiries into the possibility of involving the private sector in running prison industries.

Mr. John Patten: The prison service industries and farms board of management includes two non-executive members from the private sector and private sector expertise has been engaged in several aspects of PSIF work such as marketing, computerising management information, and developing strategies for different areas of work. Further progress will be considered in the context of the management of the prison system as a whole, taking account of the need to implement and absorb the major changes associated with fresh start.

Licensing Laws

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many representations he has received against or expressing concern about proposed changes in the licensing laws in England and Wales in response to the Government's document outlining those proposals;

(2) how many representations he has received in favour of changes to the licensing laws in England and Wales in response to the Government's document outlining those proposals.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A total of 545 representations have been received since we published our proposals for the reform of the licensing laws on 4 August. It is not possible to divide representations between those expressing support and those expressing concern about the published proposals. Many supported some proposals, but opposed others. While many opposed any relaxation of the licensing laws, there were others who opposed the proposals because they were not sufficiently radical.

Greater Manchester (Crime Detection)

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the current crime detection rate in greater Manchester.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information on offences cleared up is collected centrally for police force areas for different types of offence and is published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1986" (Cm 233), tables 2.18 and 2.19. In 1986 the clear-up rate for notifiable offences in greater Manchester was 27 per cent.

Police Helicopters

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of maintaining the Metropolitan police force's helicopters in 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the estimated cost of the Metropolitan police air support unit in 1985-86 and 1986-87 was £1,383,000 and £1,422,000 respectively. Estimated expenditure between 1 April and 31 October 1987 is £840,000.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on how many times Metropolitan police helicopters have been used during the last year over (a) London and (b) Southwark; how many times their use has been (i) as a specific response to an incident or (ii) for general surveillance purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that between 1 November 1986 and 31 October 1987 a total of 4,460 assignments were carried out, 119 of which were in the Southwark area. Of the total assignments, 3,980 responded to emergency and other direct calls for assistance; the remainder involved routine patrol duties.

Hooligans

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he had at the Trevi conference on 14 and 15 October of permanent correspondents on football hooliganism on the problem of extreme right-wing hooligans who attach themselves to football and who travel to the continent for violent and racist activities; what action his Department is taking to stop such travel; and what actions are being taken within Britain to rid association football of such extreme Right-wing sympathisers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The conference in London on 14 and 15 October was a meeting of officials to discuss the means by which EC member countries exchange information to prevent and deal with football hooliganism. They will report the outcome of their discussions to Trevi senior officials and Ministers in due course. Against the general background of freedom of travel within the European Community, member states are seeking to improve the effectiveness of international co-operation against football hooliganism.

The ultimate objective of the partnership between the Government, the police and the football authorities is to rid football of all those who indulge in violent and racist behaviour. The measures adopted have brought a marked improvement in crowd behaviour at football matches in the last two years. The police have for some time been aware that there are those who seek to orchestrate violence, often without themselves becoming directly involved in it. The success of the police in targeting such hard-core hooligans was demonstrated earlier this year in the outcome of the Metropolitan police operation "own goal". Criminal proceedings have been instituted against many other individuals as a result of similar operations elsewhere.

Animal Experimentation

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many guinea pigs have been used in cyanide poisoning tests at Porton Down since 1980, by year;

(2) what other species apart from guinea pigs and dogs have been used in cyanide poisoning tests at Porton Down since 1980, by year.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given on 22 July 1986 to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) at columns 161-2.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mozambique

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if will list the contracts that have been granted to British companies relating to the rehabilitation of the railway routes across Mozambique.

Mr. Chris Patten: Aid-financed contracts awarded to British companies for work on the Limpopo line are shown in the table. For aid-financed work on the Beira line no contracts have yet been placed.

Date	Contractor	Purpose	Amount £

April 1987	Leyland Trucks	Vehicles	150,000
July 1987	Blackwood Hodge	Bulldozer	131,000

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the contracts that have been granted to British companies relating to the rebuilding of two Mozambican locomotives.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have financed the rebuilding of two Mozambican locomotives for use on the Nacala line at a cost of £191,000. The work was undertaken by Malawi Railways in Malawi. Information is not readily available on the extent to which they placed orders with British suppliers.

Malawi (Rail Link)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the contracts that have been granted to British companies relating to the northern route railway linking Malawi to Dar-es-Salaam.

Mr. Chris Patten: This project is still at the planning stage and no contracts have yet been awarded.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the contracts that have been granted to British companies relating to the upgrading of the rail link between Malawi and Mozambique.

Mr. Chris Patten: In 1984 we financed a study of the management and operation of the Nacala line linking Malawi and Mozambique. The study was undertaken by Transmark in association with Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Company and Sir Alexander Gibb and Partners.

We are now assisting the Mozambican authorities to improve railway operations in support of the rehabilitation of the line. The contract for consultancy services was awarded to Mott Hay and Anderson International in April. Requirements for telecommunications and re-railing equipment are being studied by the consultants.

Jordan

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the contracts that have been granted to British companies relating to railway projects in Jordan.

Mr. Chris Patten: There have been no aid-financed contracts for the railway sector in Jordan in recent years.

Kenya

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the contracts that have been granted to British companies relating to the overhauling of railway locomotives in Kenya.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

Date: 1983
Contractor: G.E.C.
Purpose: Rehabilitation of locomotives
Amount: £1·4 million

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the contracts that have been granted to British companies relating to management assistance to the Kenya Railways Corporation.

Mr. Chris Patten: Since the inception of phase I of the Kenya railways sector aid project in 1983, the following consultancy contracts have been awarded:

	Consultant	Purpose
1983	Crown Agents	Supervision of locomotive rehabilitation
1984	Rendel, Palmer and Tritton	Organisation of railway workshops
1984	Henderson, Busby International in association with Coopers & Lybrand	Assessment of motive power requirements

Sri Lanka

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to increase the level of aid to Sri Lanka, particularly for emergency housing and medical care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: On 19 September, I approved an additional £1·5 million of relief assistance for Sri Lanka. I anticipate that a substantial proportion of this will be channelled through British voluntary agencies in support of a variety of relief activities, including those of a kind to which my hon. Friend refers. I also expect to approve a contribution to a medium-term programme of reconstruction to be discussed at a meeting of donors being held under World Bank auspices next month.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of aid to Sri Lanka.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) on 9 November at column 18.

Information Services

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of maintaining the information department within the Overseas Development Administration in each year since 1979.

Mr. Chris Patten: The cost of maintaining the information department of the Overseas Development Administration in each financial year from 1983-84 is as follows:

1983-84	281,000
1984-85	275,000
1985-86	293,000
1986-87	305,000

Comparable figures are not available for earlier years.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list by grade the personnel currently employed in the information department within the Overseas Development Administration.

Mr. Chris Patten: The number and grade of personnel currently employed in the information department of the Overseas Development Administration are:

1 Grade 5
1 Grade 7
3 Senior Information Officers
2 Information Officers
1 Higher Executive Officer (Development)
1 Executive Officer
1 Administrative Assistant.
1 Personal Secretary

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

AE-Turner and Newall (Takeover)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if his Department has yet completed its inquiries into the proposed takeover arrangements concerning AE and Turner and Newall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Inquiries concerning AE plc and Hill Samuel and Co. Limited to which the hon. Member presumably refers continue.

Hungary

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current level of import and export trade between the United Kingdom and Hungary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: For nine months to September 1987 United Kingdom trade with Hungary was: imports—£58·8 million; exports—£79·4 million.

Lonrho

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster pursuant to the answer of 29 October, at column 361, if he will specify the extent to which Lonrho's accounts currently contain the information which the company has assured him that they will contain fully in future.

Mr. Maude [holding answer, 12 November 1987]: The accounts of Lonrho plc for the company's 1985-86 financial year contain information on the valuations of the company's fixed assets and investments, but do not contain all the detailed information referred to in my answer to my hon. Friend on 28 October at column 301.

PRIME MINISTER

Lord Havers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister if she will appoint the former Lord Chancellor, Lord Havers, as a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Announcements on such matters will continue to be made at the appropriate time in the appropriate way.

Balderton Hospital

Mr. Irving: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on co-ordination between the Department of Health and Social Security and the Home Office of Government policy towards the possible closure of the Eastdale unit at Balderton hospital.

The Prime Minister: No decision has been taken to close this unit which was established to provide rehabilitation for patients in the special hospitals. Its future is currently being considered and the Central Nottinghamshire district health authority will shortly be issuing a consultation paper to interested organisations. The Department of Health and Social Security and the Home Office will be among those consulted, and remain in close touch on the matter.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Sentencing

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the particular types of offence on which the Lord Chancellor, as president of the Magistrates' Association, has expressed his personal view on the approach to sentencing since 1979.

The Attorney-General: The types of offence on which the Lord Chancellor, as president of the Magistrates' Association, has expressed his personal views on the approach to sentencing since 1979 include hooliganism and violence to the disruption of the public peace, cruelty or violence to the person, offences against those who serve the public, for example, the police, postmasters, transport staff and licensees, profit-related offences, theft from shops, badger digging, public health, safety of employees or public, pollution, the overloading of commercial vehicles, driving with defective tyres, brakes or steering, and road traffic offences generally.

Legal Aid

Mr. Battle: To ask the Attorney-General how many representations have been received (a) in favour and (b) against the White Paper "Legal Aid in England and Wales: A New Framework"; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Representations have been received from 24 individuals and organisations commenting on various aspects of the White Paper. In almost all cases they have concentrated on specific proposals and it would not, therefore, be appropriate to classify them as "in favour" or "against" the White Paper as a whole. The centrepiece of the White Paper—the establishment of a legal aid board to assume responsibility for administration of the legal aid scheme—has been widely supported.

TRANSPORT

Pilot Fatigue

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the extract from the current issue of the British Airline Pilots' Association's magazine The Log concerning fatigue and its effects on pilots, a copy of which has been sent to him; if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority is wholly responsible for aviation safety regulation. I will ask the chairman of the authority to respond to the hon. Member's inquiry about fatigue and its effect on pilots.

British Airways (London-Newcastle Route)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will refer the commercial activities of British Airways' London to Newcastle route to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; if he has plans to allow more competition on the London to Newcastle air route; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: References to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission are for my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and for the Director General of Fair Trading, as the case may be. Neither has any plans to refer British Airways' activities on the London to Newcastle route to the commission. Both British Airways and Dan-Air provide services on the route, British Airways from Heathrow and Dan-Air from Gatwick. Any operator who considers that there is a demand for further flights may apply to the Civil Aviation Authority for a licence on that route. Under Heathrow rule 3 of the traffic distribution rules 1986 further services from Heathrow would be permitted only if the user benefits were expected to override the economic and efficient use of the airport as a major international airport.

Cars

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if there are any proposals for European Economic Community regulations to limit the use of old-fashioned cars on British roads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no such proposals.

DEFENCE

Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the next British Army equipment exhibition will be held; and on which dates it will be open to (a) overseas customers, (b) the press and (c) the British public.

Mr. Sainsbury: The next British Army equipment exhibition is from 27 June 1988 to 1 July 1988 and will be open each day to overseas customers and the defence-related technical press. On 26 June there is a press day which the national, provincial and technical press may attend. The exhibition is not open to the public.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the list of names of countries to which invitations to the next British Army equipment exhibition have been extended.

Mr. Sainsbury: In common with all my predecessors, I do not intend to publish a list of names of individuals or countries invited to the British Army equipment exhibition.

Weather Forecasts

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review the size of the geographic areas for which weather forecasts are given.

Mr. Sainsbury: Weather forecasts for the United Kingdom made as part of the free public service and not intended for specialised use are necessarily rather general in their application. The national forecasts supplied thrice daily to the Press Association, which cover the ensuing day and the outlook for a further 48 hours, refer to 29 areas of the country, although these are grouped according to the prevailing weather. The scripts provided for broadcast by radio or television deal with areas that depend upon the service area of the broadcasting station, those for local radio applying more precisely in geographical terms.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total value of current British contracts arising out of the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) on 6 November at column 924.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what figure NATO has determined as the minimum number of nucleer weapons it requires in Europe in order to fulfil its strategy of flexible response; and whether that number is contingent on the number of nuclear weapons possessed by the USSR.

Mr. Ian Stewart: NATO's nuclear planning group Ministers agreed at Montebello in 1983 to reduce the Alliance's nuclear stockpile in Europe to 4,600 warheads. This has now been achieved. It is and will remain NATO's policy to maintain only the minimum number of nuclear weapons necessary for credible deterrence. The strategy of flexible response does not require us to match Warsaw Pact forces weapon for weapon.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his statement, 27 October, column 211, what further moves he would like the USSR to make if he is to have confidence in its commitment to a chemicals weapons ban; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State told the House on 27 October at column 211, the recent visit by conference on disarmament participants to the Soviet chemical weapons facility at Shikhany, was a welcome, albeit limited, step. However, it was only in April this year that the Soviet Union, which has a very substantial chemical warfare capability, admitted publicly for the first time that it possessed chemical weapons. In order to have confidence in the Soviet Union's commitment to a chemical weapons ban, we shall need far greater openness on their part about their stockpiles of, and production facilities for, chemical weapons. I understand the United States and USSR have discussed the possibility of bilateral exchanges of information on chemical weapons. Such a development would help to give the USSR the opportunity to demonstrate the increased openness we are seeking on their part.

Biological Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the statement of the Minister of State, the hon. and learned Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor), 22 October, column 1013, what is his precise assessment of the USSR's biological weapons threat; and upon what evidence he bases it.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, in his statement of 22 October at column 1013, was drawing attention to the tremendous Soviet advantage in chemical weapons. So far as the Soviet biological weapons threat is concerned, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton) to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 28 November 1986 at column 382. However, the Soviet Union is known to possess a significant microbiological research capability, the potential military implications of which we have to take into account.

Rainfall

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the amount of rainfall in the catchment areas of the rivers most affected by the recent flooding; and how the amount of rainfall on this occasion compares with other widespread rainfalls in those same areas and falling in the same time scale in recent years.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer, 6 November 1987]: Data from the Northern Ireland raingauge network are still being received by the Meteorological Office and subjected to quality control. Early returns do, however, show that during the latter half of October the heaviest rainfalls occurred in south Armagh, over the Mountains of Mourne, over parts of County Antrim in and around Belfast and northwards to Glen Whirrey, over Ballypatrick forest and from north-east of Londonderry through County Tyrone down to County Fermanagh. In these areas the daily rainfall totals were very rare with estimated return periods of around 200 years or more.

Ballistic Missile Attacks

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what would be the length and nature of the warning to the population as a whole in the event of a Soviet ballistic missile attack on the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding Answer 2 November]: I have been asked to reply.

In the event of a ballistic missile attack on the United Kingdom being detected by the ballistic missile early-warning station at RAF Fylingdales, an air attack warning would be issued immediately by the United Kingdom warning and monitoring organisation to the whole country. At least four minutes before impact of the missiles, the sirens would sound a distinctive rising and falling note for one minute and the public would be informed by radio broadcasts to take cover at once. Advice on the protective measures which the public should take on the issue of warnings has been prepared for publication in a period of international tension which might lead to war.

Defence Contracts

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many competitively placed contracts with his Department since 1979 have been subject to an upward revision of price after the original acceptance date.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer, 6 November 1987]: The information requested cannot be provided without disproportionate effort and cost. However, one objective of competition is to establish an agreed price or pricing arrangement at the outset. If the contractual requirement is varied by my Department we will consider whether an adjustment to the contract price is appropriate.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 22 October, Official Report, column 874 (1) if he will give the number of non-competitively placed contracts subjected to selective post-costing in each year since 1979; and what was the total number of non-competitively placed contracts in each of the same years;

(2) how many non-competitively placed contracts since 1979 were (a) subject to selective post-costing and (b) found to reveal a lack of equality of information at the time the price was fixed;

(3) when was the original decision taken to subject non-competitive placed contracts to selective post-costing examination;

(4) if he will make it his policy to subject all non-competitively placed defence contracts to post-costing examination.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer, 6 November 1987]: The total number of non-competitive contracts and value amendments placed in each financial year since 1979–80 is:

Year	Number
1979–80	20,453
1980–81	21,082
1981–82	20,656
1982–83	20,988
1983–84	19,539
1984–85	17,385
1985–86	16,220
1986–87	15,612

(Statistics for new contracts only are not available for the whole of the period).

These include those priced on the basis of cost plus percentage fee for profit (of which the proportion has reduced from 22 per cent. to 6 per cent. by value over this period); those priced on actual costs with incentives to minimise costs; those priced on estimates, but where the value is low and it would be inappropriate to include the right to post-cost; and those priced on estimates which include the right to post-cost. This latter category includes a very small proportion (on average some 1,200 contracts a year) of contracts placed non-competitively.

The right to post-cost contracts selectively derived from the 1968 agreement between the Government and the CBI for the pricing of Government non-competitive stores contracts. It would not be consistent with the terms of that agreement for all eligible contracts to be post-costed. However about 50 per cent. by value of eligible work is post-costed and the selection ensures appropriate coverage of companies, values and types of work.

The number of contracts post-costed in each year since 1979 is:

Year	Number
1979	84
1980	81
1981	80
1982	69
1983	96
1984	66
1985	78
1986	67

I will write to the hon. Member shortly about the number of contracts since 1979 where post-costing indicated a lack of equality of information at the time the price was fixed.

WALES

Teachers

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total number of (a) teachers, (b) full-time non-teaching staff and (c) part-time non-teaching staff employed by each local education authority in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information for teachers in service in maintained schools and further education establishments, as at January 1987, is as follows:

	Full-time equivalent numbers
Clwyd	4,472
Dyfed	3,770
Gwent	4,910
Gwynedd	2,688
Mid Glamorgan	6,323
Powys	1,397
South Glamorgan	4,427
West Glamorgan	4,311

Comparable county figures for non-teaching staff are not centrally available. The Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy publish such data in "Education Statistics 1986-87 Estimates", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

School Days (Duration)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information his Department has as to the average length of the school day in Wales in (a) maintained schools and (b) independent schools in 1957, 1967, 1977 and 1987.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not collected centrally.

Local Income Tax

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what would be the estimate charge, on the basis of current expenditure (a) per household and (b) per capita for each Welsh district if a system of local income tax were introduced.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information cannot be provided in this form. However, I have today placed in the Library of the House a table showing the rate of local income tax in each district and the bill for a single person on national average earnings. The figures are based on 1987-88 spending levels and assume full equalisation of income per head between local authorities.

Social Priority Schools

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) which schools in Wales are designated as social priority schools, and (b) the criteria used for social priority designation; if he will make a statement about whether there are any plans to increase the social priority allowance for teachers in these schools; and if he will make a statement about when social priority designations have been reviewed or revised since their inception and by whom.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Responsibility for this matter rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science and he will be writing to the hon. Member with a full reply as soon as possible.

Enterprise Zone (Milford Haven)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the names of (a) all manufacturing companies together with their principal products, (b) all non-manufacturing companies together with their principal purpose which have been established in the Milford Haven enterprise zone since it was set up.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. My hon. Friend might wish to approach the zone authority direct.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the estimated number of new jobs created by the establishment of the Milford Haven enterprise zone in (a) manufacturing companies and (b) non-manufacturing companies since the zone's establishment.

Mr. Peter Walker: The latest available information indicates that since designation in April 1984, zone employment in non-manufacturing firms has increased by about 600 whereas manufacturing employment has fallen by 180, a net gain in jobs of 420.

Sheepmeat

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the future of the European Community sheepmeat regime and the anticipated effect of any proposed changes upon sheep farming in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Negotiations on the review of the sheepmeat regime are continuing and it is too early, at this stage, to anticipate the effects of any changes that may be eventually agreed.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many persons in Wales were engaged directly in agriculture as (a) employees and (b) self-employed persons on 1 April 1985, 1986 and 1987, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information is not available for the dates requested. The annual censuses of agricultural holdings provide the following information on the numbers of people engaged directly in agriculture on the first Monday of June in each respective year.

Farmers, partners and directors	36,300	35,700	33,500
Spouses working on the holding	11,500	11,600	11,700
Total employees	20,700	20,300	20,200
of which
full-time	7,600	7,500	7,200
part-time	3,800	4,100	3,900
casual	9,200	8,800	9,100
Youth training scheme	700	600	900

[1] Provisional.

Notes:

(1) Figures are for main and minor holdings.

(2) Employees include family and hired workers.

Core Curriculum

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will deposit in the Library the analysis of the responses to the proposed core curriculum and the inclusion of Welsh as a foundation subject.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A policy statement on the implementation of the national curriculum in Wales will be published shortly, and this will take account of the responses we have received to the consultation document. No other formal analysis is available.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will arrange for copies of all responses to the proposed core curriculum and the inclusion of Welsh as a foundation subject to be deposited in the Library.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We are arranging for copies of the principal responses which have been received from organisations, institutions and other bodies in Wales to be placed in the Library of the House. The hon. Lady will understand that we are unable to publish responses from individuals without their express written permission.

Education Reorganisation

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing each of the consultation documents published by him in respect of proposals regarding the reorganisation of education in Wales and in respect of each (a) the date of publication, (b) the closing date for receipt of responses, (c) the number issued of each document and (d) the closing date of responses from (i) individuals and (ii) bodies and institutions.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is as follows:

Details of consultation exercise undertaken in Wales: Education Bill. Position at 12 November 1987

	Date of publication	Closing date	Number issued	Responses received from Individuals	Responses received from Bodies/Institutions	Total responses

NATIONAL FINANCE

Strip Searches

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were strip searched by customs officials in 1987, 1986 and 1985; whether individuals have any right of appeal when a strip search is proposed; and whether any code of practice exists in relation to these strip searches.

Mr. Lilley: Local records of personal searches are kept at ports and airports, but Customs have only recently started to keep strip search data separately and in a way suitable for central collection. There is no record of the information sought for the periods in question. During 1986, 46,215 personal searches were made, but the major part of these involve at most removal of outer clothing only. This total figure represents about 0.1 per cent. of passengers arriving.

Under section 164(2) of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 a person who is to be searched may request to be taken before either a justice of the peace or a superior of the examining officer who will consider the grounds for suspicion and confirm whether or not the search is to take place. This right of appeal is notified to the passenger as a matter of course prior to search.

Customs officers must have regard to the revelant provisions of the code of practice provided for by the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. In addition, officers are given guidance in internal departmental instructions in respect of search procedures.

Financial Strategy

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he intends to include a target for M3 in future editions of his medium-term financial strategy.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend announced in the 1987 Budget that there would be no formal target for M3 or any other measure of broad money in 1987-88. My right hon. Friend will announce his decisions on updating the medium-term financial strategy at the time of the 1988 Budget.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the percentage growth in M3 for the financial year 1986-87; and whether that growth exceeded his Department's M3 target in his medium-term financial strategy.

Mr. Lilley: M3 grew by 19 per cent. in 1986-87. The 1986 medium-term financial strategy set a range of 11-15 per cent.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what mechanisms exist for medium or long-term alteration of the exchange rate.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's speech to the International Monetary Fund of 30 September (a copy of which I have had placed in the Library). In it my right hon. Friend describes the experience gained over the two years since the Plaza meeting in September 1985 and how this should be used to build a more permanent regime of managed floating, in order to maintain the maximum stability of key exchange rates, and to manage any change that may be necessary in an orderly way.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the proposed cash increase in public expenditure which he announced on Tuesday 3 November is available to fund new services or facilities, taking into account (a) inflation, (b) pay awards, (c) commitments entered into or spending already being undertaken, over and above the previous public expenditure predictions on which his announcement was based, (d) "overspend" already taking place, (e) demographic changes and (f) announcements of increases made previously by him or other Ministers.

Mr. Major [holding answer, 9 November 1987]: The plans published in the Autumn Statement represent increases of about 5 per cent. a year in cash terms in general Government expenditure (excluding privatisation proceeds) between 1986-87 and 1990-91. Excluding the expected effects of general inflation, as measured by the GDP deflator, the real increase is about 1¼ per cent. a year. These plans will enable significant improvements in services and new initiatives in the Government's priority areas, including the NHS, inner cities, education and prison building, while at the same time reducing the proportion of national income devoted to public expenditure. The precise extent to which these cash plans fund new or improved services will depend on the extent to which public sector managers achieve moderate pay settlements or are able to generate additional resources by securing improvements in value for money.

Expenditure Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of expenditure in the latest year for which figures are available on (a) food, (b) fuel, (c) children's clothes and shoes, (d) books, newspapers and periodicals, (e) bus fares, (f) new house building and (g) funerals.

Mr. Major [holding answer, 12 November 1987]: Some estimates of expenditure on the categories requested are compiled in the context of personal sector transactions recorded in national accounts, covering years up to 1986 and published in the 1987 edition of the United Kingdom national accounts, the 'CSO Blue Book'. Total expenditure, which would include purchases by other sectors (for example, businesses) is not available.

Current and constant price estimates for expenditure on food, fuel and power, clothing and footwear, books, newspapers and magazines and buses and coaches are available from tables 4.7 and 4.8 of the CSO Blue Book. Spending on children's clothes and shoes is not separately identified. Current price estimates up to 1986 for expenditure on dwellings (excluding existing dwellings and land) are available from tables 12.1 and 12.3 of the CSO Blue Book.

The CSO Blue Book does not contain estimates of expenditure on funerals but available information suggests that undertakers' charges amounted to about £240 million at current prices in 1986.

ENVIRONMENT

Mobile Homes

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance his Department issues on the criteria for decisions relating to planning permission for the siting of mobile homes.

Mr. Waldegrave: Advice on the land-use planning criteria for the siting of mobile homes is contained in my Department's development control policy note 8, "Caravan sites". I will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Bathing Waters

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the results of virological monitoring of bathing waters undertaken by four water authorities in 1986.

Mr. Moynihan: The results were placed in the Library by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning following his reply on 30 April 1986 to my hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) at column 186.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why his Department permits water authorities one bacteriological failure in 12 samples in a bathing season, whereas the EC directive 76/160/EEC allows only one failure in 20; whether the Department has notified the European Commission of this relaxation in interpretation of the directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The bathing season in the United Kingdom runs from about mid-May until the end of September. If samples are taken at fortnightly intervals during this period, as the directive requires, about 12 will be obtained. Consequently, it is not possible to apply the 1 in 20 rule. We have therefore assessed compliance on the basis that where at least 12 samples have been taken and analysed, not more than one of them should fail. The Commission is aware of this interpretation. The monitoring of the quality of the bathing waters falling within the scope of the directive continued during 1987, on this basis.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the cost to the United Kingdom water industry of meeting the World Health Organisation guidelines for recreational water quality on all designated bathing beaches.

Mr. Moynihan: The basis for United Kingdom policy is the application of directive 76/160/EEC. Application of this directive is an obligation following from the Treaty of Rome, and we have not estimated the cost of applying other standards.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the likelihood of the European Community demanding tighter standards of bathing water quality that are currently required under directive 76/160/EEC; and what assessment he has made of the cost implications.

Mr. Moynihan: I am not aware of any proposal to change the requirements of directive 76/160/EEC.

British Waterways Board

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce the appointment of the chairperson for the British Waterways Board.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced on 22 October the appointment of Mr. David Ingman as chairman of the British Waterways Board. I am sending the hon. Member a copy of the press release.

Drink Tests (Football Matches)

Mr. Denis Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice the Minister for Sport has given to football clubs regarding the precise legal authority which would enable stewards to require breathalyser tests from citizens attending football matches; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer, 12 November 1987]: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given to him on 3 November at column 660. I have given no advice about the use of breathalysers to football clubs. It is the responsibility of each club to decide the terms and conditions under which it will admit spectators to its premises and how its stewards should enforce them.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EC (Sheep Support Scheme)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals have been made by the European Community Commission with regard to the establishment of a common sheep support scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Commission have made a number of proposals for reform of the Community's sheepmeat regime which was established in 1980. A copy of the proposals, in the Commission's document 8761/87/Add 3 was deposited before Parliament on 20 October. The Ministry's explanatory memorandum was considered by the Select Committee on European Legislation on 28 October when it was recommended for further consideration by this House.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals have been made by the European Community Commission with regard to the extension of the present milk quota system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Commission has proposed the extension of quotas at their effective level in 1988-89. The proposals are described in full in document 8761/87, which was deposited before Parliament on 20 October.

Radioactivity

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library details of (a) the precise location and (b) the geology of each of the sites for the monitoring of radioactivity conducted in Yorkshire during the weeks beginning 2 and 9 November.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Because it has not been practicable to monitor for radioactivity on all holdings in the relevant area of Yorkshire, it is not fair on occupiers to single out for publication those holdings that have been monitored. I will, therefore, identify sites to their general locality and I hope that this will be sufficient for the hon. Member. The details that the hon. Member requests for the last two weeks are still in the final stages of preparation, but I will place the detailed results in the Library of the House very shortly and let the hon. Member know when I have done so. In the meantime I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry) today which contains a general statement of results so far.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Lambs (Skipton-Ilkley)

Mr. Curry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the results of his Department's further safety checks on lambs in the Skipton-Ilkley area.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 9 November 1987, c. 63]: Monitoring for radioactivity in the Skipton-Ilkley area is continuing. Given in the table are the results available so far. Further vegetation samples have been taken and results on those are awaited. Monitoring of live sheep is also continuing and there are four teams currently operating in the area between Settle and Grassington, which includes the high ground of Penyghent, Fountains Fell and Darnbrook Fell. In addition to these results, the monitoring of a flock of breeding ewes grazing the moors above Grassington has shown a small number of sheep on which it would be desirable to seek confirmatory analysis of meat samples. This is in hand and the results will be announced as soon as possible.

EMPLOYMENT

"Opening Doors"

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration he has given to the report entitled "Opening Doors" from the disablement advisory committee of the Banking Insurance and Finance Union, a copy of which has been sent to him; if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: We shall be considering the report in the context of our future plans for employment and training services to people with disabilities. Of particular relevance is our current initiative to promote more actively the employment of people with disabilities by large companies, including those in the finance industry.

Migration

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any proposals for the ratification by the United Kingdom of International Labour Organisation convention No. 143 concerning migrations in abusive conditions and the promotion of equality of opportunity and treatment of migrant workers (1975).

Mr. Nicholls: There are no such proposals.

YTS Agents

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria are used to assess applications by YTS managing agents for approval as approved training organisations.

Mr. Cope: There are 10 criteria which managing agents must satisfy to achieve full approved training organisation status:

The ability to arrange a two-year training programme
A good previous record in training
Adequate resources
Staff competent to undertake training
Adequate premises and equipment
Proper means of assessing trainees
Effective means to review programmes
A positive commitment to equal opportunities
A positive commitment to health and safety
Financial viability

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of applications by YTS managing agents for approval as approved training organisations has been given full approval in the current years (a) nationally, (b) in the Yorkshire and Humberside region and (c) in the south-east region; and to what factors he attributes the different rates of approval in these areas.

Mr. Cope: During the period 1 November 1986-30 September 1987, the proportion of applications by YTS managing agents awarded fully approved training organisation status was: (a) 51 per cent. nationally, (b) 54 per cent. in the Yorkshire and Humberside region and (c) 42 per cent. in the south-east region.

Decisions are made by the Manpower Services Commission regional directors. In reaching a decision they are required to take into account the evidence collected by the MSC about the ability of the applicant organisation to meet the criteria for approved training organisation status, comments on that evidence by the applicant organisation, and recommendations made by the appropriate area manager and area manpower board.

Rates of approval by region are continually changing as new decisions are reached. The MSC intends that YTS managing agents in all regions shall have achieved fully approved status by April 1988.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people resident in Milford Haven are claiming unemployment benefit; and what percentage of the total labour force this represents.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have been asked to reply. At 8 October 1987, there were 723 unemployed claimants in wards 6, 7 and 8 of the Preseli district (which have been used as an approximation for Milford Haven). Rates of unemployment are not calculated at this level.

YTS (Coventry)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the youth training schemes provided at the latest available date, together with the number of places each is offering for Coventry, in the same form as the information provided in the answer of 14 May at column 317.

Mr. Cope [pursuant to his reply, 12 November 1987]: I regret that there was an error in the original text. The correct version is as follows.

A list of YTS providers at October 1987 in the Coventry Local Authority District and the number of places offered by each is shown in the table:

SOCIAL SERVICES

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of Government spending is accounted for by his Department; and how that compares with 1979.

Mr. Moore: I have been asked to reply.

The proportion of Government expenditure, excluding debt interest, accounted for by my Department in 1978-79 was 36·3 per cent.; the latest comparable estimate for 1987-88 is 44·6 per cent.

Rent and Rates

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on what date he expects to make an announcement that will enable any tenant currently benefiting from either housing benefit or rate rebate, or both, to calculate the proportion of rent and rates for which they will be responsible after April 1988.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend announced on 27 October at columns 179-81 the proposed maximum levels of housing benefit (including rate rebates), applicable amounts, tapers and other components of the calculation which will apply from April 1988. The level of an individual's rent or rates is the other important factor in the calculations.

Patients (Statistics)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the average number of patients on each general practitioner's list in England in 1957, 1967, 1977 and 1987 or the latest available year for which statistics are available.

Mr. Newton: The data at 1 October are:

	Number
1957	2,290
1967	2,490
1977	2,331
1985	2,068
1986	[1]2,047

[1] Estimate

Allowable Earnings

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if Her Majesty's Government will raise substantially the amount of earnings allowable without loss of benefit from part-time employment for those in receipt of supplementary benefit.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to increase the amount of earnings that can be disregarded for supplementary benefit purposes. However, in the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987, which were laid before the House on 10 November, we have proposed that in the income support scheme, which replaces supplementary benefit in April 1988, the basic level of disregarded earnings be increased from £4 a week to £5. We have also proposed that the higher level of disregard, of up to £12 a week, for lone parents be replaced by a flat-rate £15 a week, and be extended to the disabled and to couples who have been unemployed and receiving supplementary benefit or income support for two years or more. In order to simplify the new scheme there will be no separate disregard of work expenses.

Abortions

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what statistics on the annual number of abortions performed in (a) the first 12 weeks of pregnancy and (b) each week from the 12th to 28th week of pregnancy are collected by or on behalf of his Department.

Mr. Newton: The total numbers of notifications of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 by gestation are given in the table. Statistics on the number of abortions by increments of gestation and by age, category of premises, marital status, type of operation, planned day care, statutory grounds, duration of stay, non-residents, parity, complications, place of residence, and previous abortions under the Act are published in "Abortion Statistics 1986", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the number of terminations carried out by the Sefton area health authority for the years 1980 until its abolition in 1982 and for the relevant successor authorities for the years 1982 to 1987; if he will list the number of non-National Health Service terminations by the same authorities for the same periods; and if he will provide the same information for the 98 area health authorities in England and Wales for the period 1980 to 1982 and for the relevant successor authorities for the period 1982 to 1987.

Mr. Newton: Statistics on the numbers of abortions carried out by district health authorities (DHA) are not released. The number of abortions performed in Wales and in each regional health authority in England by category of premises for United Kingdom residents are given in table 20 of the volumes "Abortion Statistics" 1980-1986, copies of which are in the Library. Statistics of the number of abortions to usual residents of DHAs by category of premises are shown in table 24 of the same volumes, and for the Sefton area in the table.

Lithotripsy

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether lithotripsy is available in the North West regional health authority.

Mrs. Currie: Yes. I am pleased to report that a lithotripter was installed in Withington hospital in May of this year.

Age Addition

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has for uprating the age addition for retirement pensions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to uprate the age addition for retirement pensions. However, from April 1988, pensioners over 80 who are entitled to income support will receive premiums of £13·05 for a single pensioner and £18·60 for a couple. These premiums are respectively £2·40 and £2·35 more than those for younger pensioners. In this way, extra help will be directed to those who need it most.

Sign Language

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if Her Majesty's Government have any plans to give official recognition to British sign language for the deaf as a minority language; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Government fully recognise the vital importance of British sign language to some deaf people. Our policy is to support the development of a wide range of methods of communication for people with impaired hearing.

Mental Illness (Halifax)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he intends to take to ensure that (a) adolescents, (b mothers with babies and (c) women from certain ethnic minorities who are mentally ill in Halifax receive adequate care.

Mrs. Currie: Provision of health services in Halfax is a matter for Calderdale health authority, which is accountable to Yorkshire regional health authority through the annual planning and review process for service delivery. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the chairman of Calderdale for information relating to local services.

Consultants (Secretarial Assistance)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to recover from consultants employed by the National Health Service the cost to public funds incurred by them in employing secretaries, paid for by the National Health Service, in connection with their private practices; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Charges for private treatment within the National Health Service, which are set to recover full cost, include an element for administrative costs.

Benefit Payments (Birkenhead)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much was paid out in each of the last five years from both Birkenhead supplementary benefit offices in single payments; and what will the annual budget for social fund expenditure be for each of these two offices in the year beginning April 1988.

Mr. Scott: The amount of single payments paid to claimants in Birkenhead North and Birkenhead South local offices in each of the last four financial years is as follows. The figures include both full and partial awards. The information for 1982-83 is no longer available.

Year April to April	Birkenhead North	Birkenhead South
	£	£
1983-84	857,229	307,391
1984-85	1,145,736	411,781
1985-86	1,557,778	712,893
1986-87	1,588,995	716,782

The social fund grants and loans budgets for Birkenhead North and Birkenhead South were listed in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 4 November at columns 774-781.

Benefit Statistics

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in Scotland were in receipt of (a) attendance allowance at (i) the higher rate and (ii) the lower rate, (b) invalid care allowance, (c) mobility allowance, (d) invalidity benefit, (e) severe disablement allowance, (f) industrial disablement pension, (g) war disablement pension, (h) retirement pension, (i) unemployment benefit, (j) supplementary pension and (k) supplementary allowance, at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: The latest available information for each benefit is as follows:

	Numbers
(a) Attendance allowance
(i) the higher rate	18,500
(ii) th lower rate	30,600
(b) Invalid care allowance	n/a
(c) Mobility allowance	59,700
(d) Invalidity benefit	126,600
(e) Severe disablement allowance	28,500
(f) Industrial disablement pension	16,200
(g) War disablement pension	18,900
(h) Retirement pension	816,500
(i) Unemployment benefit	106,200
(j) Supplementary pension	1,670,800
(k) Supplementary allowance	1,509,300

Note.—The figures for supplementary pension and supplementary allowance are based on live load counts which are the number of cases in action rather than the number of people receiving benefit; the data are provisional and subject to amendment.

Single Payments

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of single payments went to (a) pensioners, (b) two-parent families with children and (c) one-parent families with children in 1985-86 and in 1987; and if he will estimate what proportion of single payments will go to these categories of claimants in 1987-88.

Mr. Portillo: The following information is available from a 100 per cent. count of single payment awards:

	Awards to pensioners (000s)	Total awards (000s)	Awards as percentage of total
1985-86	510	4,375	12
1986-87	680	4,230	16
April to September 1987	130	1,060	12

Source: Management Information System.

Further information is available from the February 1986 annual statistical inquiry as follows:

	Thousands
Pensioners
Number of awards	410
Awards as percentage of total	14
Lone parents
Number of awards	1,000
Awards as percentage of total	33
Total awards	3,040

Note: ASI data record the number of single payments made during the 12 months preceding the date of the inquiry to persons in receipt of supplementary benefit at the time of the inquiry. As a result they do not record all the single payments made during the year.

A special survey of single payments activity in a sample of offices in October 1986 showed that of 2,041 cases in which payment was awarded 291 (14 per cent.) involved pensioners, 493 (24 per cent.) single parents, 532 (26 per cent.) couples with children. In addition three involved pensioners with children.

Income Support

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the total savings in 1988-89 from uprating the illustrative figures for personal allowances in income support set out in the technical annex of the White Paper "The Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 9691) by 4·5 per cent. to 5 per cent. instead of 6·5 per cent. to 7 per cent.

Mr. Scott: The income support personal allowances have been uprated by between 6·5 per cent. and 9 per cent. from their technical annex levels.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide a breakdown of the composition of the personal allowances in the income support scheme.

Mr. Scott: The intention in the income support scheme is to give the claimant a single sum of money out of which he can budget to meet his normal weekly needs. Thus the personal allowance in income support is not broken down into individual components earmarked to cover specific expenses.

Free School Meals and Milk

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children will lose entitlement to free school meals and free welfare milk after the Social Security Act 1986 is fully implemented in April 1988.

Mr. Scott: Under the Social Security Act 1986 it is estimated that about 550,000 children will cease to receive free school meals as a result of the replacement of family income supplement by family credit and the abolition of local education authority discretionary schemes; about 200,000 children will cease to receive free welfare milk as a result of the replacement of family income supplement by family credit and the abolition of the low income scheme; there will be about 950,000 children in family credit families who will receive cash help in place of free school meals and free welfare milk.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what compensation is allowed for in the family credit child rates for the loss of free school meals and free welfare milk; and how this is calculated.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 5 November at columns 866-7.

The latest information from local education authorities indicates an average charge for a fixed price school meal of 65·6p. The £2·55 included in the child credit rates is rather more than the weekly equivalent of this average charge when spread over the whole year.

Pensioners

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to how many United Kingdom pensioners are at present resident (a) abroad, (b) in the United States of America and (c) in Canada.

Mr. Scott: The table shows the countries where United Kingdom pensioners are known to live, the number of pensioners living there, whether annual increases are paid and an estimate of the average pension paid at 31 December 1986. Pensioners living in the Channel islands are not included as there is no ready way of identifying payment to them separately from payment to pensioners in the United Kingdom.

Note: The above figures do not include 5,453 retirement pensioners and 241 widow beneficiaries residing abroad (other than in the Irish Republic) to whom the Department is making payment on behalf of the Northern Ireland authorities.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to treat British pensioners living in Canada on an equal basis with those in the United States of America, Yugoslavia and West Germany.

Mr. Scott: We cannot give any undertaking about payment of increases in retirement and widow's pensions to pensioners living in Canada.

The Government must keep a strict control over public spending as part of our long-term programme of rebuilding our economy. Extending arrangements for cost-of-living increases to further groups of pensioners abroad must be considered in relation to the Government's priorities for other improvements to our social security system.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what savings accrue to his Department from the lower rates of pension paid to retired Britons living in Canada.

Mr. Scott: The national insurance scheme does not in principle provide for cost-of-living increases to be paid to pensioners living outside Great Britain. It is funded on the basis that such increases are paid only where the United Kingdom has entered into a social security convention to provide for them. Consequently not paying cost-of-living increases to pensioners in Canada does not produce a saving to the scheme.

The additional cost of such payments, if there were funds available, would currently be about £41 million a year.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the basis on which cost of living payments are made to retired Britons living abroad.

Mr. Scott: Cost-of-living payments are made to recipients of British pensions if they are living in a country with which the United Kingdom has a social security convention which provides for such payments. Whether we negotiate a bilateral social security convention of this kind depends on the characteristics of the other country's scheme, how far reciprocity is possible and the extent to which the advantages to be gained by a convention justify the additional expenditure incurred by the United Kingdom.

Suicide

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what have been the rates of suicide in the Huddersfield health area for every year since 1957;

(2) what have been the rates of suicide in the Yorkshire regional health authority area in each year since 1960;

(3) what have been the rates of suicide in the United Kingdom in each year since 1960.

Mrs. Currie: The available information is shown in the table. Because of changes in boundaries and administrative areas, figures for Huddersfield from 1957 to 1973 and for Yorkshire regional health authority from 1963 to 1973 are not comparable with those for later years.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many suicides have occurred involving patients discharged from mental hospitals in the Huddersfield health authority area since the Government's care in the community campaign began;

(2) how many suicides have occurred involving patients discharged from mental hospitals in the Yorkshire regional health authority area since the Government's care in the community campaign began;

(3) how many suicides have occurred involving patients discharged from mental hospitals in the United Kingdom since the Government's care in the community campaign began.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that it is not possible to identify former in-patients of psychiatric hospitals from the registration of deaths.

Land Holdings

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in league order, with the highest at the top, the acreage of land held in each district health authority area within the National Health Service in England and Wales; and why those authorities whose land holding is not known do not hold such information.

Mrs. Currie: This information is not readily available centrally. From 1 April 1988, we are asking authorities in England to produce an aggregated annual return of their land holdings. These returns will be received from June 1989 and held on computer. Once that is done, to produce information of the sort requested will be a simple process. Information for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Hepatitis B Vaccine

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will expedite his decision as to whether general practitioners may prescribe courses of hepatitis B vaccine to all the at-risk groups recommended by the British Medical Association, including policeman and prison staff.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 2 November 1987]: The joint committee on vaccination and immunisation, which advises the health Departments on all aspects of immunisation, has all but finalised revised guidance on vaccination against hepatitis B. We hope to be able to gather all our own advice to promulgate this guidance at an early date.

Private Hospitals

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of each district health authority which has contractual arrangements with a private non-National Health Service hospital to provide acute medical services, showing (a) the hospital with which a contract is made, (b) the number of patients treated by that hospital during 1986-87, (c) the total amount spent by the district health authority on treatment under the contract during 1986-87 and (d) the amount of (c) expressed as a percentage of the district health authority's overall budget for 1986-87.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 6 November 1987]: Health authority annual accounts do not identify the financial information requested by the hon. Member. The latest available statistical information is given in the table.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chile

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he makes of the safety with which Chilean exiles may return to their homeland, in the light of the detention on 3 September of former refugees in Britain Luis Tricot and Rocio Reyes, and the subsequent alleged torture of Senor Tricot.

Mr. Eggar: We are aware of the practical difficulties faced by Chileans who are now returning to their own country, and of the concern felt in the United Kingdom for their security. I conveyed these concerns to the Chilean Foreign Minister of 23 October 1987. Her Majesty's ambassador is in regular touch with returnees from the United Kingdom. We have made representations on behalf of the Irish Government about Senor Tricot's case.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the refugee problem in Sri Lanka.

Mr. Eggar: We have received a number of letters about the refugee problem in Sri Lanka, both from private individuals and from Sinhala and Tamil organisations.

Belau

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs if he will raise in the United Nations Security Council the breaches of human rights, the intimidation of voters and the murder of Mr. Bedor in Belau; and if he will raise with the United States Government their obligation under the United Nations Trusteeship Council to promote the development of the inhabitants to self-government and independence and protect them against the loss of their lands and resources.

Mr. Eggar: The compact of free association which will terminate Palau's trusteeship status was approved by public referendum in Palau on 21 August. The referendum was observed by a United Nations team of observers. Several weeks after the vote there was some violence and a murder in Palau. The United States has registered its firm opposition to this violence and is assisting the Palau Government in investigations. In these circumstances we see no need to raise the matter with the United States Government.

European Council

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the cost of holding recent meetings of the European Council.

Mrs. Chalker: The cost of the London European Council in December 1986 was £234,050. We understand that the equivalent figure for The Hague European Council in June 1986 was approximately £295,000.

Hong Kong

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the treatment of foreign domestic helpers in Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have received three letters from right hon. and hon. Members and several letters from members of the public about this subject.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Hong Kong Government to alleviate the plight of foreign domestic helpers who find on arrival in the colony that their employers are willing to pay them wages less than the contractually agreed account, and consequently leave their employment to work elsewhere; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to any recent change of policy by the Hong Kong Government concerning the treatment of foreign domestic helpers whose employment has been terminated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The revised conditions of stay for domestic helpers in Hong Kong, announced by the Hong Kong Government on 16 April, state that if a foreign domestic helper's contract is terminated, he or she will be allowed to stay in Hong Kong for the remainder of his or her six-monthly period of stay, or for two weeks after the termination of the contract, whichever is the shorter. In special circumstances, a foreign domestic helper will be allowed to stay in Hong Kong for longer than two weeks after the termination of his or her contract, or will be allowed to change his or her employer.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will review the lawfulness of the new condition of stay imposed upon all new foreign domestic helpers arriving in Hong Kong since 21 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The conditions of stay are determined by the Hong Kong director of immigration under regulations made under the Hong Kong immigration ordinance. Any review of their lawfulness would therefore be a matter for the Hong Kong courts. The conditions of stay have recently been challenged in the Hong Kong High Court and Court of Appeal. Both courts upheld the Hong Kong Government's right to impose the revised conditions.

Hungary

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the state of political and diplomatic relations between the United Kingdom and Hungary.

Mr. Mellor: Relations with Hungary are increasingly varied and productive. My right hon. and learned Friend had useful discussions during a visit to Budapest in March, as I did during my visit in September. We hope to receive the Hungarian Prime Minister in London in the first half of 1988. Lively contacts and exchanges at all levels form an important part of our relationship.

Peter Hall and Monica Chambers

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what action has he taken concerning the case of Peter Hall and Monica Chambers, imprisoned in Saudi Arabia; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has concerning the date of a hearing or trial in the case of Peter Hall and Monica Chambers, imprisoned in Saudi Arabia; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what representations he has made to the Saudi Arabian ambassador concerning the case of Peter Hall and Monica Chambers, imprisoned in Saudi Arabia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Saudi Arabian authorities have indicated that the trial is scheduled to commence on 21 or 22 December 1987. Her Majesty's embassy at Riyadh has maintained regular contact with Mr. Hall throughout his period of detention and has closely monitored the progress of the case with the Saudi Arabian authorities.

Mrs. Hall, neé Monica Chambers, is, however, an Irish citizen; we, therefore, have no official standing to intervene on her behalf. Her case is being handled by the Irish embassy at Riyadh which is in close touch with our officials.

We have not made any representations to the Saudi Arabian ambassador about Mr. Hall's case.

Intermediate Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, under the terms of an intermediate nuclear forces treaty, the United Kingdom will have the right of veto over the inspection of United Kingdom territory by Soviet inspectors.

Mr. Mellor: The details of the INF verification regime are still being discussed. We have been fully consulted at every stage by the United States on their proposals. Any provision in the verification regime relating to access by inspectors to the territory of the United Kingdom will have been agreed in advance by us. We expect to conclude an agreement with the United States setting out in detail the arrangements for inspections in this country. We also expect to conclude an agreement with the Soviet Union which will safeguard British sovereignty and security.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his statement, Official Report, 22 October, column 949, that NATO wishes to ensure that an intermediate nuclear forces agreement could not be circumvented by missiles of slightly shorter range, what is NATO's policy towards preventing circumvention of the agreement by the deployment of new or additional missiles of similar range but different type, namely sea or air launched.

Mr. Mellor: There is no question of NATO circumventing an INF agreement. The INF treaty in prospect only concerns land-based intermediate range missiles. We and our NATO allies believe that nuclear weapons will be necessary for our security for the foreseeable future. Only the minimum number of weapons will be maintained. NATO defence Ministers recently reaffirmed our commitment to continue to implement those measures required to maintain the effectiveness and credibility of the Alliance's nuclear deterrent.

UNESCO

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to meet the new director of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation to discuss the possibility of Her Majesty's Government rejoining the organisation.

Mr. Eggar: We congratulate Professor Mayor on his appointment. We have no present plans to meet him, but would be happy to do so if he should suggest coming to London at an appropriate time to discuss UNESCO questions.

Bulgarian Foreign Minister (Visit)

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the recent visit to United Kingdom by the Bulgarian Foreign Minister, Mr. Peter Mladenov.

Mr. Mellor: Mr. Mladenov visited the United Kingdom on 16-17 September. We had useful discussions on bilateral matters and international questions. Mr. Mladenov signed two agreements, on bonded debt and on the avoidance of double taxation. We look forward to further progress in relations with Bulgaria to the benefit of both sides.

SCOTLAND

School Boards

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library copies of the submissions he has received concerning his proposals for school boards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have asked for copies of responses to the consultation paper "School Management and the Role of Parents" which were not marked as confidential to be available for public inspection on the open file in St. Andrew's House library. Photocopies of these responses can be obtained at cost by application to the Scottish Office librarian. In addition, to meet the hon. Gentleman's request, I will arrange for the open file to be transferred to the House Library on 3 December.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will specify the documents and sources which poll tax registration officers will use in compiling the basic register and any secondary registers; what steps will be taken to ensure that the full safeguards ensued in the Data Protection Act apply to such personal information on both registers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Sections 17 and 18 of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 set out the arrangements for the provision of information to community charges registration officers. The main sources of information will be a "responsible person" who will respond to canvass inquiries in respect of each address, and individuals who are required to notify the registration officer when their registration details change. The registration officer will also have access to relevant records held by the electoral registration officer, other community charges registration officers, and local authorities and other housing bodies (new town development corporations and the Scottish Special Housing Association) in his registration area. Draft regulations on registration matters were recently issued by the Scottish Office for comment by interested bodies.

The 1987 Act makes no change in the provisions of the Data Protection Act, and in addition, under section 20(1) of the 1987 Act, each person registered in the register has the right to inspect the whole of each entry in the register relating to him.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the number of adults in Scotland who will be liable to pay the community charge in 1987-88 and whose names should be registered in the community charge register for that year.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has made no estimate of the number of people who would be liable to pay the personal community charge in 1987-88, were the new system already in place, or of the number of people who will be liable to pay the charge in 1989-90. It is estimated that in Scotland there are some 3·9 million people aged 18 and over.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has advised community charge registration officers to run cross-checks with other lists such as the electoral register when they are compiling their community charge registers in order to obtain greater accuracy in the compilation of such registers.

Mr. Lang: No. The responsibility for preparing and maintaining the community charge register rests with the community charges registration officer.

Housing Associations

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, by name, the housing associations which are registered in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I suggest that the hon. Member approaches the Housing Corporation in Scotland for this information.

Scottish Special Housing Association

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of tenants living in Scottish Special Housing Association rented accommodation within the Glasgow, Central constituency in each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally by constituency area.

Information Services

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by grade the personnel currently employed in the public information division within the Forestry Commission.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

Principal Information Officer
Senior Information Officer
Information Officers (2)
Principal Photographer
Senior Photographer
Executive Officer
Administrative Officers (2)
Administrative Assistants (2)
Personal Secretary.

"School Management and the Role of Parents"

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to place in the Library any of the submissions he has received in response to his consultative paper "School Management and the Role of Parents".

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have asked for copies of responses to the consultation paper "School Management and the Role of Parents" which were not marked as confidential to be available for public inspection on the open file in St. Andrew's House library. Photocopies of these responses can be obtained at cost by application to the Scottish Office librarian. In addition, to meet my hon. Friend's request, I will arrange for the open file to be transferred to the House Library on 3 December.

Rates

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the cost to local authorities in Scotland of collecting domestic rates in each of the last five years for which figures are available, expressed in cash terms and as percentages of local authority revenue expenditure in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Centrally held information on costs of rate collection does not distinguish between domestic and non-domestic rates. The precise information requested is therefore not available.

Electoral Register

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the cost of compiling the electoral register in Scotland in each of the last five years for which information is available.

Mr. Rifkind: The information given in the table is the best available. Some authorities do not distinguish between expenditure on registration of electors and expenditure on lands valuation, both being services provided by the regional or islands assessor.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the number of adults in Scotland whose names appear on the electoral register for the latest year in which information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to table 2 in the "Office of Population Censuses and Surveys Monitor EL 87/1" issued on 22 April 1987, a copy of which is in the Library.

Expenditure

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the annual expenditure, expressed per head of population, in each of the cities of Dundee, Aberdeen, Glasgow and Edinburgh for each of the last 10 years from (a) the European regional development fund, (b) the European social fund, (c) the Scottish Development Agency, (d) the urban programme and (e) rate support grant.

Mr. Lang: Figures for expenditure under the European social fund and the urban programme are not readily available in the form requested; figures in respect of the others are:

Homicide

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons in Scotland have been convicted of homicide in the period since 1965 who had previously been convicted and sentenced for homicide; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since 1965, four people with a previous murder conviction have been convicted of murder. Comparable information about homicides other than murder is not readily available and could not be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Hospital Medical Staff (Report)

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he will be taking to implement the recommendations of the report "Hospital Medical Staff: Achieving a Balance—Plan for Action"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall be looking closely at what action should be taken in Scotland on the report. Although the basic principles apply with equal force north and south of the border, detailed arrangements to put them into practice in Scotland will need to be separately determined in consultation with professional and health board interests.

I have therefore decided to set up a working group, chaired by Dr. Graham Scott, the deputy chief medical officer of the Scottish Home and Health Department, which will include representatives of health boards, the Scottish Joint Consultants Committee, Scottish universities medical schools, the Scottish Council for Postgraduate Medical Education and the Department. The group will consider what action needs to be taken in Scotland. The aim will be to help bring hospital medical career and training grades into balance, and ensure quality of service to patients.

GEAR Project

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total expenditure by the Scottish Development Agency in the former GEAR area of Glasgow since the formal ending of the GEAR project to date.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 October 1987]: The agency intends to spend some £13 million over the three years from March 1987 when phase I of the GEAR project is concluded. During the current financial year the agency has spent £1·8 million in the GEAR area.

Cowlains Industrial Estate

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the success in attracting new companies to the Cowlains industrial estate.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 October 1987]: All seven blocks of factory units are occupied and the Scottish Development Agency is undertaking a feasibility study with a view to providing small units to meet market demand.

Council House Sales

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, by constituency, the number of public sector houses sold and repossessed in each of the years since 1980.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 October 1987]: Information on public sector house sales is not collected centrally by parliamentary constituency. The available figures for the years 1980 to 1986 are set out in the table. Statistics on repossessions of houses are not collected centrally.

Answers to Written Questions

Monday 16 November 1987

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Magistrates (Teesside)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Attorney-General what are the criteria which the Lord Chancellor uses in deciding whether to appoint stipendiary magistrates; whether the Teesside bench of magistrates meets such criteria; and if the Lord Chancellor will consider appointing stipendiary magistrates for Teesside.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor is at present examining the criteria which would lead to consideration of the appointment of a stipendiary magistrate for a petty sessional division or commission area. The policy has been for the Lord Chancellor to act on a request for the appointment of a stipendiary magistrate from the justices themselves. No such request has been received from the Teesside justices.

The Lord Chancellor is always ready to consider the appointment of a stipendiary magistrate in any commission area where the need is established.

Mr. Delvin: To ask the Attorney-General what is the size of the lay bench of magistrates at Teesside; and what is the average size of lay benches in England.

The Attorney-General: There are 265 lay justices of the peace assigned to the Teesside petty sessional division. As at 1 January 1987, there were 27,650 active justices in England and Wales and 583 benches, giving an average size of 47·7.

ENERGY

Information Services

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list by grade the number of personnel currently employed in the information division within his Department;

(2) if he will list by grade the personnel currently employed in the directorate concerned with marketing, publicity and promotion within the Energy Efficiency Office.

Mr. Parkinson: The number of personnel currently employed in the Department of Energy's information division is shown in column 1; those concerned wholly with marketing, publicity and promotion for the Energy Efficiency Office are shown in column 2. Other staff in the division also contribute to the work as part of their duties.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the cost of maintaining the information division within his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Parkinson: The information is as follows:

Year	£
1979	467,000
1980	580,000
1981	606,000
1982	565,000
1983	616,000
1984	614,000
1985	686,000
1986	758,000

Energy Efficiency Office

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the cost of maintaining the directorate concerned with marketing, publicity and promotion within the Energy Effciency Office in 1986.

Mr. Parkinson: The marketing directorate of the Energy Efficiency Office is part of my Department's information division. The cost of maintaining those employees concerned wholly with energy efficiency in 1986 was £158,000. Other personnel in the information division also contribute to this work as part of their duties.

Oil Exploration Licences

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what response he has had to his invitation to apply for onshore exploration licences in the second round which he announced on 21 July.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The second onshore round closed on 28 October and I am pleased to report that 78 applications were received from a total of 79 companies either as individual applicants or members of a group of applicants. This response underlines the continuing interest in onshore exploration in Great Britain. The results of the round, which I hope to announce early next year, should help to maintain the momentum generated by the first round.

North Sea Oil

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list the projects supported since !985 by the Offshore Supplies Office which are North sea oil-related and with no impact on the other non-North sea oil-related industries.

(2) if he will list the projects supported since 1985 by the Offshore Supplies Office which are not mainly North sea oil-related.

Mr. Peter Morrison: All research and development projects funded by the Offshore Supplies Office are principally aimed at the offshore oil and gas markets either on the UKCS or elsewhere. Provided this criterion is met, the subsequent exploitation of the developed product is a matter for the companies concerned.

Residential Accommodation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what residential accommodation is provided for departmental Ministers and civil servants and charged to public funds; and what has been the total cost in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Parkinson: None.

Electricity Industry

Mrs. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take steps to ensure that whatever the timing of the privatisation of the electricity industry there will be no delays on the investment programme on existing and future expenditure.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government are determined to ensure that privatisation does not delay any necessary investment.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Peter Shipley

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister under what terms and conditions Mr. Peter Shipley was employed in the policy advisory unit attached to her office, whether his appointment was subject to the same approval procedures as apply to Civil Service appointments; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Mr. Peter Shipley was employed as a special adviser in the policy unit in my Office between September 1982 and September 1984 on the standard terms applied to special advisers. The approval of the Civil Service Commission to such appointments is not required.

Civil Servants

Mr. Key: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the numbers of (a) industrial and (b) non-industrial civil servants employed in each year since 1979.

The Prime Minister: The information is as follows:

	Thousands as at 1 April each year
Year	Non-Industrial	Industrial	Total
1979	566	166	732
1980	547	157	705
1981	540	150	690
1982	528	138	666
1983	519	130	649
1984	504	120	624
1985	498	101	599
1986	498	96	594
1987	507	90	598

I refer my hon. Friend to the historical series published on page 33 of "Civil Service Statistics 1987", a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library, for the basis on which the figures are collected.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

North-South Interdependence

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have any plans to make a financial contribution to the European public campaign on North-South interdependence and solidarity, organised by the Council of Europe.

Mr. Chris Patten: As an indication of our support for the aims of this worthwhile campaign, I am making a contribution of £40,000 available to the British national organising committee plus a £30,000 contribution to the European organising committee. These funds are in addition to our long-standing agreement to meet the costs incurred by the United Kingdom reprsentative to the European organising committee and bureau.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Iraqi Nationals

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Iraqi nationals he has allowed to remain in the United Kingdom on the grounds that they faced execution if deported to Iraq; and how many Iraqi nationals he has deported to Iraq in each of the last five years.

Mr. Renton: The grounds on which a person might claim asylum are varied and it is not possible to identify the number of occasions on which a claim of threatened execution was a principal factor in the decision to allow an individual to remain in the United Kingdom. Information on the outcome of all applications for asylum from Iraqi nationals decided in each year from 1979 to 1986 is given in tables 2 to 4 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Refugee Statistics, United Kingdom, 1986" (Issue No. 13/87).

The numbers of Iraqi nationals deported in each of the last five years were:

	Numbers
1982	5
1983	2
1984	2
1985	2
1986	1

Those deported had not necessarily applied for asylum. Information is not available on the country of destination of persons deported but it is normally the country of which the person is a national.

Immigration

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make a decision about the immigration case involving Mr. M. B., Home Office reference B431103.

Mr. Renton: A decision on Mr. B's application to remain here with his wife was made on 27 October. He was given leave to remain until 7 October 1988.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the current delays in interviewing people at the various immigration offices.

Mr. Renton: The available information is given in the table and shows the approximate period of time which has elapsed between the receipt of the file at the immigration office and the interviews currently taking place:

Port Office	Entry Clearance Interviews	Other Interviews
Aberdeen Airport	2 weeks	2 weeks
Avonmouth	2 months	—
Birmingham Airport	6 weeks	6 weeks
Cardiff	1 week	2 weeks
East Midlands Airport	6 weeks	6 months
Edinburgh	—	3 months
Felixstowe	2 months	2 months
Folkestone	6 weeks	6 weeks
Gatwick Airport	2 months	1 month
Glasgow	2 months	2 months

Files have not been sent to immigration offices during the peak summer months other than for urgent interviews. Additional staff resources have now been deployed at the ports to deal with the backlog of cases. Variations in waiting times reflect the concentrations of applications in particular areas.

Neighbourhood Watch Schemes

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes there are outside the Greater London area.

Mr. John Patten: The latest available information suggests that there are now just over 35,000 such schemes.

Residential Accommodation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what residential accommodation is provided for departmental Ministers and civil servants and charged to public funds; and what has been the total cost in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Hurd: This information is not readily available and could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Misuse of Drugs Act

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given classifying the drugs temgesic and temazepam under the Misuse of Drugs Act.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Temgesic (buprenorphine) is not a controlled drug under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971, but we are ready to reconsider this in the light of any recommendation from the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs, which currently has this drug under review. Tamazepam, together with other benzodiazepine drugs, was brought within the controls of the Misuse of Drugs Act in 1986 following consultation with the advisory council.

Firearms

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy with regard to the imposition of a limit as to the number of part I firearms that can be held by an individual.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is at present no limit on the number of 'section 1' firearms that can be held by an individual certificate holder. However, the local chief officer of police must be satisfied that the certificate holder has a good reason for possessing each weapon that he wishes to acquire, and that the security arrangements are adequate for the number of weapons held. As my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced during the debate on firearms in the House on 26 October at columns 28-69, we are considering a number of issues relating to firearms controls in addition to the measures already announced, and we hope to make known our comprehensive proposals by the end of November.

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the past year officers of police have asked to see the firearms register of a gun dealer in the metropolitan district in accordance with section 40(4) of the Firearms Act 1968.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The register of a gun dealer will be examined at least annually when the dealers application for renewal of registration is under consideration.

Mr. Patrick Mackay

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date Patrick Mackay was released from Wormwood Scrubs; whether he participated in a pre-release scheme involving his being housed in a hostel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Information about inmates or ex-inmates is not normally given without the consent of the prisoner concerned.

Laboratory Animals

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has completed his consideration of the report "The Use of Non-Human Primates as Laboratory Animals in Great Britain"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I have completed my consideration of this helpful document. In doing so I have been much helped by the Animal Procedures Committee which has, at my request, made a detailed examination of the report and the proposals in it.

I entirely share the concern for non-human primates which underlies the report. There is a difficult balance to strike between the need to use these animals in some medical and scientific research, and the special care that is needed in looking after them and their increasing scarcity. This joint initiative by the Fund for the Replacement of Animals in Medical Experiments, the Committee for the Reform of Animal Experimentation and the British Veterinary Association has provided a most helpful opportunity to consider in detail the way in which the new controls under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 may be used to strike this balance correctly. I am pleased to say that I am able to accept many of the recommendations made in the report. The following is a summary of the resultant action which has been taken or is now in hand.

(i) The Home Office is to explore the possibility of encouraging certain establishments where non-human primates are used for scientific or experimental purposes to set up a special course or courses for the benefit of licensees and others who work with non-human primates used for experimentation.

(ii) A detailed breakdown of the use of non-human primates, using a classification scheme suggested in the report will be included in the annual published statistics of procedures carried out under the 1986 Act.

(iii) In examining project licence applications which propose the use of endangered non-human primate species, a high level of proof that the use of such species is necessary will be required for the application to be successful.

(iv) Establishments will be encouraged, wherever practicable, to use non-human primates which have been bred in captivity, as opposed to wild-caught animals.

(v) Establishments will be encouraged to ensure that the lowest possible order of species is used.

(vi) The Animal Procedures Committee will be notified of all projects where the use of non-human hominidae (the gibbon, siamang, the orang-utan, the chimpanzee and the gorilla) is proposed. The committee will have the opportunity, if it wishes, to examine any such application and to advice me of its views on the application.

(vii) When the controls of the 1986 Act are extended to cover establishments which breed or supply non-human primates, such establishments will be required to keep lifetime records for all non-human primates bred at breeding establishments, and for all wild-caught non-human primates lifetime records from the date of importation will be required. Similar records are already required at establishments where non-human primates are used for scientific or experimental purposes authorised under the 1986 Act.

(viii) Particularly close scrutiny will be given to all project licence applications which include proposals to keep primates in isolation.

(ix) The Animal Procedures Committee will be notified of all applications for work involving non-human primates which includes any procedure in the substantial severity category. The committee will have the opportunity to examine any such application and to advise me of its views on the application.

The particular importance of safeguarding non-human primates is recognised in the 1986 Act, section 5(6) of which specifies that a project licence authorising the use of non-human primates (or cats, dogs or equidae) may not be granted unless it is established that animals of no other species are suitable for the purposes of the programme to be specified in the licence or that it is not practicable to obtain animals of any other species that are suitable for those purposes. In addition, we shall do everything possible to ensure that the use of non-human primates is restricted to establishments which provide facilities of a very high standard for their husbandry and welfare.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Palace of Westminster (Repairs)

29. Mr. Janner: To ask the Lord Privy Seal if he will make a statement on the implications for the work of the House of the current repairs to the exterior of the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Wakeham: Currently there are no repairs to the exterior of the Palace of Westminster being carried out. However, a survey of the Central Lobby Tower is in hand prior to restoration and cleaning. This work will not start until next summer.

Data Storage

31. Mr. Stern: To ask the Lord Privy Seal if he has any plans to provide secure, fireproof data storage points for the use of right hon. and hon. Members at any place or places within the precincts of the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Wakeham: No, Sir. But I am aware of my hon. Friend's concern about this matter and am sure the Services Committee would be prepared to consider any points he has to make.

Select Committees

34. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Lord Privy Seal what representations he has received about the establishment of departmental Select Committees.

Mr. Wakeham: I have received representations from a number of right hon. and hon. Members, both on and off the Floor of the House.

Photography

35. Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Lord Privy Seal why hon. Members need the consent of the Central Office of Information before they reproduce the photograph of the House in session.

Mr. Wakeham: Photographs of the House in session are subject to crown copyright. Authority to reproduce resides with HMSO, and has been delegated to the Central Office of Information. As my hon. Friend will no doubt realise, crown copyright exists, unless restrictions have been agreed in the contract with the person commissioned to do the work, in all original work prepared or published by, or under the direction and control of, a Government Department. My hon. Friend has raised a very interesting point and I will ask the Services Committee to look at this matter.

Charities (Payroll Deductions)

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Lord Privy Seal what representations he has received regarding facilities for hon. and right hon. Members to participate in the payroll deduction scheme giving money to charities.

Mr. Wakeham: My predecessor and I have received letters from three hon. Members asking when the payroll deduction scheme will be available for Members and their staff. Additionally, two written parliamentary questions have been answered on this subject on 4 March 1987 at column 630 and on 20 July 1987 at column 10. The Fees Office is at present negotiating with an agency, approved by the Inland Revenue, to set up a formal scheme for Members and their staff. Detailed arrangements will be circulated shortly.

Members' Assistants

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Lord Privy Seal how many secretarial and research assistants in the Palace of Westminster are citizens of the United States of America.

Mr. Wakeham: One hundred and three.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Lord Privy Seal if he will give a breakdown, by party affiliation of employer, of the number, of the full or temporary (a) secretarial pass-holders and (b) research assistant pass-holders in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Wakeham: The numbers of Members' staffs broken down by party affiliation is as follows:

Party	Number of Members	Number of staff employed
Conservative	307	641
Labour	173	417
Liberal	17	63
Social Democrat	5	20
Plaid Cymru	2	4
Scottish Nationalist	1	1
Ulster Unionist	3	3
Democratic Unionist	2	2

I regret it has not been possible to subdivide these figures into secretarial and research assistant passholders without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Lord Privy Seal if he will give a breakdown of pass-holders in the Palace of Westminster who are citizens of (a) the United States of America and (b) of other foreign countries, broken down by party affiliation of employer where appropriate.

Mr. Wakeham: The latest available figures show that 126 Palace of Westminster photo-identity passholders are American nationals and 319 are from other foreign countries. These figures could only be subdivided by party affiliation of employer at disproportionate cost.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Education Statistics

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will commission a study on the reasons why children in Northern Ireland secure, on average, more high grade passes in O and A-level examinations compared with children in the rest of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The examination performance of Northern Ireland children relative to the rest of the United Kingdom has already been the subject of academic study, which has served mainly to emphasise the complexity of the factors involved, which in turn makes the drawing of firm conclusions difficult. I do not, therefore, consider that any useful purpose would be served by commissioning further study.

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money from public funds has been spent providing hospitality for Ministers and officials attending meetings of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference or of its secretariat since 15 November 1985; and if he will publish this information broken down by month.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 9 November 1987]: Information is not available in the form requested and would be disproportionately expensive to obtain, but I can tell the hon. Gentleman that total costs so far assessed in this financial year in respect of conference meetings and associated meetings between officials is £1,275.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures have been agreed, pursuant to paragraph 6 of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference on 17 June 1986, to ascertain the number of Irish speakers in Northern Ireland; what financial support has been agreed for Irish language-related cultural activities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. King [holding answer 13 November 1987]: A number of questions on the use of and interest in Irish and other languages have been included in the Government's continuous household survey of social trends in Northern Ireland. Support for Irish language-related cultural activities is being provided through the Department of Education, through the Arts Council for Northern Ireland, and through public funding of research into Irish place names. I recognise and respect the special importance of the Irish language to a number of people in Northern Ireland. I am ready to consider further support where an appropriate level of demand for the use of the Irish language can be established.

School Leavers

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what qualifications for school leavers are recognised by his Department other than O-levels; what proportion of pupils leaving school qualify in these examinations; what are the proportions for O-level; and if he will publish statistics for school-leavers with a breakdown of the qualifications they gain.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 9 November 1987]: For the purposes of the annual statistical survey of school leavers in Northern Ireland, the qualifications, other than GCE O-levels, recorded by my Department are GCE A-level, CSE, and other qualifications such as City and Guilds certificates, RSA certificates, Pitman's certificates, BTEC certificate and diplomas, and certificates of pre-vocational education.

Based on the latest information available (1985-86) the proportion of school leavers with "other" qualifications, irrespective of whether they obtained GCE A-level or O-level or CSE qualification, is 17·6 per cent.

A breakdown of the highest qualifications obtained by school leavers in 1985-86 is as follows:

	Number	Proportion (Percentage)
3 or more 'A' levels	3,529	13·2
2 'A' levels	1,763	6·6
1 'A' level	1,014	3·8
5 or more higher grade 'O' levels[1]	3,297	12·3
1-4 higher grade 'O' levels[1]	5,865	21·9
Other GCE/CSE grades[2]	5,498	20·4
Other qualifications	628	2·3
No qualification	5,237	19·5
Total	26,831	100·0

[1] Grades A-C only and Grade 1 CSE.

[2] Includes CSE (grades 2-5) and GCE 'O' level (grades D-E).

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make available to right hon. and hon. Members copies of the code of conduct for the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 13 November 1987]: I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to a question by the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) on 27 October at column 227.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Multiple Sclerosis

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will detail the nature and extent of research into multiple sclerosis.

Mr. Jackson: The Medical Research Council is the main Government agency for the direct support of biomedical research. The council is supporting a number of research projects on multiple sclerosis, including both basic work on the nature of the disease and clinical studies of its treatment. In the financial year 1986-87, the council spent £404,000 on research into multiple sclerosis. The council is always willing to consider soundly based research grant applications in competition with other applicants.

Research into multiple sclerosis is also carried out in universities and medical schools using funds for teaching and research allocated on advice from the University Grants Committee. In addition the medical charities are funding relevant research. The Government are not in a position to influence directly the scale and nature of these research activities.

AIDS

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what special provisions are being made to allow for adequate schooling for people with haemophilia and HIV.

Mr. Dunn: It is for individual local education authorities to ensure that appropriate educational provision is available for all pupils in their areas. The Government have made it clear that, since there is no evidence that HIV infection can be passed on through everyday social contact in a school setting, pupils who are known to be HIV antibody positive should be free to attend school in the normal way.

Education Reform

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps are being taken to ensure that the reconstituted National Council for Vocational Qualifications consults the Secondary Education Council and other bodies to bring vocationally-oriented A and AS levels within the eventual new framework.

Mrs. Rumbold: The National Council For Vocational Qualifications has not yet considered in detail the linkages and progression between its qualifications framework and A and AS levels, but the principle of such an association was clearly defined in Cmnd 9823 "Working Together—Education and Training". In recognition of the importance of such defined linkages, the Secondary Examinations Council has full observer status on the NCVQ, has a close day-to-day working relationship with the national council and its subgroups, and there are regular meetings between the chairmen of the two bodies. We expect such co-operation to continue when the SEC is replaced by the School Examinations and Assessment Council.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he has taken to ensure that opportunities within the proposed national curriculum will not only continue to exist for, but will expand, the potential for development education issues to be taught in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Topics such as development education may be taught through the relevant foundation subjects of the national curriculum where appropriate, or among the non-foundation subjects. The working groups drawing up attainment targets and programmes of study for foundation subjects are being reminded of the need to take account of related cross-curricular themes. It will be for schools to decide what to teach in the space available for non-foundation studies.

Merseyside (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State's visit to Merseyside.

Mr. Dunn: Whilst in Merseyside on Thursday 12 November 1987, I visited Childwall CE primary and the King David high school.

Residential Accommodation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what residential accommodation is provided for departmental Ministers and civil servants and charged to public funds; and what has been the total cost in each financial year since 1979.

Mrs. Rumbold: None.

Broughton Hall High School

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when his Department intends to reply to correspondence dated 1 September about Broughton Hall high school.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend is still pursuing inquiries with the Liverpool local education authority. He will reply shortly.

O and A-Level Pass Rates

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each local education authority in England and Wales pupil to teacher ratios, per capita costs and O and A-level pass rates.

Mr. Dunn [holding answer 2 November 1987]: The information requested for England is given in the table. Information for Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Residential Accommodation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what residential accommodation is provided for departmental Ministers and civil servants and charged to public funds; and what has been the total cost in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: This information is not readily available and could only be supplied at disproportionate cost.

Argentina

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had with the Football Association regarding inviting Argentina to play in the Rous cup in May 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Consular Services

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what (1) salary and (2) other expenses are payable to the honorary consuls at (a) Nice and (b) Perpignan.

Mr. Eggar: The honorary consul in Nice receives an honorarium of £800 per annum. In addition, he is entitled to a refund of expenditure incurred on official business, including postage, telephone calls and travel. He receives allowances of £175 per annum to cover the cost of secretarial assistance, and £190 per annum for entertainment expenses.

The post of honorary consul in Perpignan is currently unoccupied.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what rent is currently paid in respect of (a) office costs and (b) residential accommodation for his Department's staff based in Marseilles; and what allowance is currently paid to honorary consuls in (a) Nice and (b) Perpignan to cover office and residential costs.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's Government own the British consulate-general offices in Marseilles, and currently pay £10,200 annually for a maintenance and service charge and for car parking spaces.

The consul-general's residence is owned by Her Majesty's Government. That of Her Majesty's consul is rented at an annual cost of £8,400, including a condominium charge.

The honorary consuls in Nice and Perpignan receive no allowances for office and residential rents.

Hungary

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when next he intends to seek to visit Hungary.

Mr. Mellor: As I told my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) on 21 October, we hope that the Hungarian Foreign Minister will visit Britain next year. My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to visit Hungary again thereafter.

United Nations Conventions

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government intend to ratify the United Nations convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment, which was signed on 15 March 1985.

Mr. Eggar: We intend to ratify the United Nations convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment as soon as possible. We need first to introduce legislation, mainly due to the extensive provisions of the convention regarding jurisdiction; we also need to ensure that our law covers that part of the convention's definition of torture as including severe mental suffering. The legislation timetable this session is very full, but we intend to bring in the necessary legislation as soon as we can.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Information Services

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will list by grade the personnel currently employed in the information branch within the Office of Fair Trading;

(2) what was the cost of maintaining the information branch within the Office of Fair Trading in each year since 1979.

Mr. Butcher: I will ask the Director General of Fair Trading to write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will list by grade the personnel currently employed in the British Overseas Trade Board publicity unit within his Department;

(2) what was the cost of maintaining the British Overseas Trade Board publicity unit within his Department in each year since 1979;

(3) if he will list by grade the personnel currently employed in the fairs and promotions branch of the British Overseas Trade Board within his Department;

(4) what was the cost of maintaining the fairs and promotions branch within the British Overseas Trade Board in each year since 1979;

(5) he will list by grade the personnel currently employed in the information division within his Department;

(6) what was the cost of maintaining the information division within his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Butcher: The personnel currently employed, listed by grade, are as follows:

GATT

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made at the Uruguay round of talks concerning the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

Mr. Butcher: We are nearing the end of the first phase of this important negotiation, which will set the rules for the international trading system into the next century. It is essential to re-establish respect for the multilateral trading system in order to stop the tendency for countries to take unilateral trade action. GATT therefore has a crucial part to play. A large number of issues for negotiation and specific negotiating proposals have been put forward by many participants, including the European Community. These cover such topics as reform of agricultural support, trade in services, better protection for intellectual property, GATT disputes settlement mechanisms, tariffs and the treatment of tropical products. There is a good basis for the phase of substantive negotiation, which begins next year. The Uruguay round is due to be completed in 1990.

Residential Accommodation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what residential accommodation is provided for departmental Ministers and civil servants and charged to public funds; and what has been the total cost in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Maude: My Department does not provide residential accommodation for either Ministers or officials at public expense.

Petrol Prices

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if in the light of the current level of petrol prices (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) on the world market, he will ask the Director General of Fair Trading to report on anti competitive practices in the petrol market.

Mr. Maude: The Director General of Fair Trading is continuing to monitor certain aspects of the petrol market in the light of reports on the supply of petrol by the Monopolies Commission in 1965 and the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in 1979. I understand that the director general presently sees no justification in developments in the petrol market for taking action under the competition legislation.

FIMBRA

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will cause to be published, after he has received it, the report by the Director General of Fair Trading on FIMBRA's application for recognition as a self-regulating organisation; and whether he will invite comments on it from the financial services industry.

Mr. Maude: Under section 122(8) of the Financial Services Act, it is for the director general to decide whether to publish any report which he makes under that section. However, I understand that in the case of FIMBRA's application, the director general expects to publish his report. In reaching a decision on whether to give leave to the Securities and Investment Board to recognise FIMBRA, my right hon. Friend will take account of any representations made to him.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will request the Director General of Fair Trading to report as to whether the sample of category 1 practitioners in Arthur Young management consultants' survey, commissioned by him of potential FIMBRA members who are sole practitioners, is proportionate numerically to the membership characteristics of the other categories of financial services practitioners contained in their report.

Mr. Maude: It is for the director general to consider what should be covered in the reports which he is obliged to make under section 122 of the Financial Services Act. If my hon. Friend has material which he believes would be helpful to the director general in compiling his report, I should be happy to pass it to the director general.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will invite the Director General of Fair Trading to report on any characteristics of membership category balance in the council of FIMBRA when that body applies for registration as a self-regulating organisation, in so far as any lack of balance is judged to affect competition within the financial services industry.

Mr. Maude: It is for the director general to consider what should be covered in the reports which he is obliged to make under section 122 of the Financial Services Act. Paragraph 5 of Schedule 2 to the Act, will require FIMBRA, before it can be recognised under the Act, to satisfy the Securities and Investments Board that it has arrangements to ensure that its governing body represents a proper balance between the interests of its different members as well as between its interest of those of its members and the interests of the public.

EMPLOYMENT

YTS (Hampshire)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the working of YTS in Hampshire.

Mr. Cope: At 1 October 1987, there were some 9,600 people in YTS training in Hampshire, the highest figure ever for the programme. Of those young people leaving the scheme between April 1986 and April 1987, nearly 83 per cent. went into employment, further education or training.

It is encouraging that so many firms in Hampshire and throughout the country are now using YTS as their regular method of recruiting and training young employees. The Government hope that more and more companies will recognise the substantial benefits that YTS can offer to them and to the employees.

Tourism (Cornwall)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to increase employment in the tourist industry in Cornwall.

Mr. Lee: The English tourist board and West Country tourist board are currently negotiating the setting up of a tourism development action programme for Cornwall. The aim of this programme will be to boost investment and help realise the full tourism potential of the county.

Between April and October this year, the English tourist board has offered financial assistance under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969 to 18 tourism projects in Cornwall. The total value of assistance offered was over £249,000 to development with a total capital cost of £1·57 million.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of those unemployed had been unemployed for one year or over at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: On 8 October 1987, 42·6 per cent. of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom had been unemployed for one year and over.

Trade Unions (Members' Rights)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a pamphlet giving advice to members of trade unions about the steps which they can take under employment legislation if they consider that rules on ballots and picketing are being broken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department already publishes pamphlets which describe the provisions of employment legislation on ballots and picketing, and the statutory duties and rights owed to members by their unions. These explain, where appropriate, the steps which members can take to enforce these rights and duties.

The Green Paper "Trades Unions and their Members" (Cm 95) suggested that a special effort be made to publicise and draw to the attention of union members trade unions' statutory duties, and to offer guidance and advice on how individuals can seek to remedy breaches of those duties. Any such initiative could be undertaken when the new rights set out in the Employment Bill have been enacted.

National Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the age distribution of dockers covered by the national dock labour scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: At the time of the last annual survey, carried out in July 1987 by the National Dock Labour Board, the age groups of registered dock workers were as follows:—

Age	Numbers
Under 25	33
25-29	166
30-34	527
35-39	1,213
40-44	1,987
45-49	2,283
50-54	2,303
55-59	1,517
60-64	305

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the cost of buying out dockers' entitlements under the national dock labour scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: I have made no such estimate.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are now covered by the national dock labour scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: There were 9,983 registered dock workers on 10 November 1987.

Residential Accommodation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what residential accommodation is provided for departmental Ministers and civil servants and charged to public funds; and what has been the total cost in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Lee: This information is not readily available and can only be supplied at disproportionate cost.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how the activity rate among women in Wales compares with the figures nationally and in Scotland and the English regions; and what are the comparable breakdown figures for full and part-time employment.

Mr. Lee: The table gives estimates of the civilian activity rates for women aged 16 and over in Wales, Scotland and each of the regions of England in 1985:

Female civilian activity rate[1] Mid-1985

	per cent.
Wales	43·0
Scotland	47·6
Northern	45·4
Yorkshire and Humberside	47·5
East Midlands	49·2
East Anglia	48·1
South East	51·1
South West	47·6
West Midlands	48·8
North West	48·9
Great Britain	48·8

The available estimates of full and part-time employment are not fully comparable with the activity rates given.

[1] The activity rate is calculated as the percentage of women aged 16 and over who were economically active, that is in employment or seeking work in a reference week.

Estimates of the number of women employees in employment in each region, separately identifying those working part-time, are published in Table 1.5 of Employment Gazette, copies of which are available in the Library.

Jobcentres

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total spending on the provision of jobcentres in Scotland, England and Wales for each of the years from 1979 to 1986; and if he will give the estimated expenditure for the years 1987, 1988 and 1990.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 5 November 1987]: Figures for 1979-80 to 1986-87 are taken from the MSC annual reports. Figures for 1987-88 to 1989-90 are taken from the 1986 public expenditure survey.

TRANSPORT

Oadby and Wigston (Capital Projects)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list with the dates those significant capital projects his Department intends to commence in the next 10 years in the borough of Oadby and Wigston.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no significant capital trunk road projects programmed to commence in the next 10 years in the borough of Oadby and Wigston.

Harborough (Capital Projects)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list with the dates those significant capital projects his Department intends to commence in the next 10 years in the district of Harborough.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are three major trunk road improvement schemes currently planned for construction within the next 10 years in the district of Harborough—A6 Market Harborough bypass (April 1989 to March 1991) A6 Great Glen bypass (late 1992) M1-A1 link road (Part) (late summer 1988, subject to completion of statutory procedures).

British Rail (Investment)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much of British Rail's investment in renewing and improving the railway since 1983 has been spent (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in the United States of America.

Mr. David Mitchell: British Rail does not maintain separate detailed records of investment expenditure in this form. I understand that over 95 per cent. of BR's expenditure is placed with United Kingdom companies, and that no major capital expenditure has been placed in the United States of America.

Air Services

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what formal communications he has had recently with foreign airlines seeking extra services into United Kingdom airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Foreign airlines are in continual contact with the Department about extra services within the framework of the agreed bilateral arrangements. Where such services require the negotiation of new traffic rights, we would expect the Government of the country concerned to seek such rights in negotiation. They regularly do.

Planning Applications

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the criteria he uses to make decisions when a direction is given to planning authorities to refuse a planning application on grounds of existing volumes and future increased traffic.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Secretary of State is empowered to issue directions to local planning authorities in respect of accesses to trunk roads under the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1977 as amended in 1985. The order does not specify the grounds or criteria on which he may give a direction of refusal. These are essentially related to his role of providing motorways and other trunk roads to further the safe and expeditious movement of long-distance traffic.

In the case of motorways, there is a strict policy against allowing direct access to the main carriageway or slip roads from any development other than service areas and related facilities. In the case of all-purpose trunk roads refusal of permission may be directed in circumstances where, notwithstanding any road improvements proposed by the developer, the development would generate interference with the safe and free flow of traffic either on that or another trunk road in the vicinity. Regard has to be had in this to the effects both on existing traffic flows and those expected in the future.

Traffic Flows (Statistics)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give traffic flow statistics for (a) the M25 motorway at and around the M1 intersection and (b) the M25 intersection with the A30 at junction 13.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Traffic flows recorded on the M25 motorway this September, next to the M1 and A30 intersections, were:

	16 hour 5 day average	24 hour 7 day average	Highest 24 hour flow	Date of highest 24 hour flow
(I) M1 Intersection
J20-J21/21A (A41-M1/A405)	108,100	108,900	127,700	Friday 25 September
J21A-J22	89,200	89,800	106,600	Friday 4 September
(II) A30 Intersection
J12-J13 (M3-A30)	128,000	132,000	150,400	[1]Friday 25 September
J13-J14 (A30-Airport Spur)	140,000	142,000	165,700	Friday 4 September

[1] Estimated from limited data.

I shall write to the hon. Member with diagrams of traffic movements and volumes at these intersections.

Wraysbury and Staines

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his direction to refuse planning permissions in connection with (a) the Wraysbury development and (b) the Staines development.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Reasons for directing refusal in both cases were the large volume of additional traffic which would be generated on the M25 and A30, and related interference with safe and free flows of traffic on those routes, which are primarily designed to facilitate the safe and expeditious flow of long distance through traffic. Other reasons were:

(1) in the case of the Wraysbury project, the junction improvement proposed by the developer was considered unacceptable as entailing a direct access to the slip road for northbound traffic joining the M25; the developer had not shown that the modified junction would satisfactorily accommodate the additional traffic; and it would subsequently be difficult for the Department to improve the junction further to allow for future traffic growth;

(2) n the case of the Staines project, the development would entail the construction of a new junction on the A30 trunk road between M25 junction 13 and the A308 Crooked Billet junction; it had not been shown that there was sufficient space between those junctions for the safe construction of a new one to the Department's design standards; the developer had not proposed any alterations to M25 junction 13 or the Crooked Billet junction to deal with the additional traffic.

Ferries

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects boarding passes to be introduced on ferries.

Mr. David Mitchell: My Department has recently issued for statutory consultation a draft Order that would require ferry companies to have boarding card systems in place by 1 February 1988. The actual date required will depend upon the consultation process and the time needed to prepare any amendments in the light of the comments received.

Residential Accommodation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what residential accommodation is provided for departmental Ministers and civil servants and charged to public funds; and what has been the total cost in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None to my knowledge. Historic information is not readily available.

Waterdale

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement on his refusal to direct the local planning authority to refuse planning permission for the Waterdale development;

(2) if he will make a statement on the financial implications for his Department of the Waterdale development;

(3) if he will give details of what steps his Department has taken to improve road transport to the Waterdale development site.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department intervenes to direct a refusal of planning permission where a proposed development is considered to have unacceptable traffic and safety implications for motorways and other trunk roads within its responsibility.

It was concluded that such implications did not arise in this particular case, provided that certain improvements were made to the layout of the M1/A405 junction and to the A405. We have accordingly given a direction that the development shall not proceed until orders have been made under the Highway Act 1980 for these improvements and that public access to the development shall not begin until these improvements are substantially complete. If these conditions are satisfied, there are no grounds to direct refusal. The improvements would be carried out at the developer's expense.

The Department of Transport owns part of the site on which the development is proposed. Jointly with the owner of the adjoining land, we are negotiating an option agreement for the sale of the land to the developers.

The Department is entirely neutral on whether planning permission should be granted. As part owner of the site we are bound to ensure that if planning permission were granted the taxpayer should reap a proper share in the benefit of the increased value of the land.

THE ARTS

Residential Accommodation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts what residential accommodation is provided for departmental Ministers and civil servants and charged to public funds; and what has been the total cost in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Luce: No residential accommodation chargeable to public funds is provided for me or for the staff of the Office of Arts and Libraries.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Channel Tunnel

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 10 November, if he will make it his policy that no Bank of England issue department funds will be used for the purposes of underwriting the share issue for the Channel tunnel project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: There is no question of using issue department funds to underwrite the share issue for the Channel tunnel project.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 10 November, what information he has as to whether any funds controlled, managed or owned by the banking department of the Bank of England will be used for the purchase or underwriting of shares in the Channel tunnel share issue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The Bank of England has told the Treasury that it has no intention of using banking department funds in connection with the Channel tunnel share issue.

Bank of England (Underwriting)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give a direction to the Bank of England under section 4(1) of the Bank of England Act 1946 to the effect that no funds which the bank (a) owns, and (b) manages or controls on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, nationalised industries and public sector bodies shall be used for any purpose in connection with the purchase or underwriting of shares in the current Eurotunnel equity share issue.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will issue a general directive to the Bank of England that it should not use funds managed or controlled by it to underwrite the Eurotunnel share issue; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will give a general directive to the Bank of England that it should not risk the funds controlled or managed by it in Eurotunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: Such a directive would be inappropriate. Furthermore, it would be unnecessary because the Bank of England has told the Treasury that it has no intention of using such funds in connection with the current Eurotunnel equity share issue.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what discussions he has had with the Bank of England about the equity issue of Eurotunnel; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions he has had with the Bank of England about the underwriting of the Eurotunnel issue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has had no such discussions. But the Bank has told the Treasury that it has no intention of using its funds in connection with the Eurotunnel issue.

Privatisation

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost to the Exchequer, in each of the privatisation flotations undertaken by Her Majesty's Government since 1980, of the underwriting of each issue.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 29 October 1987]: The total cost of primary and sub-underwriting in the United Kingdom of each Government share sale since 1980 is given in the table. The cost of United Kingdom underwriting for the recent BP share sale was about £42 million, of which about £33 million was borne by the Exchequer.

WALES

Rating Reform

11. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to reach a decision as to when to introduce the poll tax in Wales and whether it should be phased.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has already announced his intention to replace domestic rates with the community charge in 1990.

Tree Planting

12. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he proposes to take to encourage tree planting in the Principality.

Mr. Grist: My hon. Friend will know that it was my right hon. Friend who launched the "Plant a Tree in '73" campaign which was the initiative of my hon. Friend, so he will know my right hon. Friend's support for tree planting. There are a range of measures we are taking in Wales; the valleys initiative, urban programme, forestry commission grant schemes, proposed farm woodland scheme and Coed Cymru—Save Welsh Wildwoods—all promote amenity or commercial tree planting and/or conservation of existing woodlands.

Health Services

13. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from the Gwynedd health authority concerning his funding of health services in Gwynedd.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend has recently been asked to meet representatives of the authority to discuss its current financial position, and a meeting will be held soon.

Coal Industry

15. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has had any recent discussions with the chairman of British Coal about the future of the south Wales coal industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend met the deputy chairman of British Coal on 30 September to discuss a range of issues affecting the south Wales coal industry. Officials of the Department are in regular contact with British Coal at all levels to keep abreast of developments in the industry which bear upon my right hon. Friend's responsibilities.

A55-A548 (Road Link)

16. Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet a deputation from Delyn borough council to discuss a trunk road link between the A55 and the A548 to serve the Delyn enterprise zone and the Greenfield business park.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Trunk roads are intended for major long-distance routes. Links such as this must be matters for the local highway authority.

Farm Incomes

17. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average income of farmers in Wales in the financial year 1986-87.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Based on the farm business survey, the average income of full-time dairy and livestock farms in Wales was £8,728 for the year ending mid-February 1987.

Hospital Waiting Lists

18. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest waiting list figures for hospital treatment in Wales.

Mr. Grist: At 31 March 1987, there were 77,964 people waiting for a first out-patient appointment and 41,396 people waiting for in-patient treatment.

Small Businesses

19. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken since June to assist small businesses in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Last month, I launched the Gateway network — a new initiative and a concept unique to Wales — which will help ensure that businessmen in Wales receive a uniformly high quality of service no matter which of the advisory agencies they turn to. I am delighted that all of the agencies providing support to small businesses — local authorities, enterprise agencies and others—have actively supported my initiative.

Labour Statistics

20. Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current level of unemployment in Wales at the latest available date; and what it was 12 months previously.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: On 8 October 1987, the number of unemployed claimants in Wales was 148,000, 26,055 lower than the corresponding figure for 1986.

22. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the most recent published number of unemployed males and females in the Ogmore/Mid Glamorgan area and in Wales as a whole; and what was the number for the same areas in May 1979.

Mr. Grist: On 8 October 1987, 2,938 males and 903 females were unemployed in the Ogmore constituency. The corresponding figures for Mid Glamorgan were 21,309 and 7,109; and for Wales 105,413 and 42,637. Unadjusted figures for 1979 are not available on a basis that enables a valid comparison to be made.

Education

21. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he is satisfied with the present state of education in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Welsh local education authorities provide a generally satisfactory education service, but there is always room for improvement.

The Government have published consultation documents setting out proposals for education reform. An Education Bill embodying those proposals is to be introduced shortly.

24. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the outcome of the consultation in Wales on the proposed national curriculum and other related papers on education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend and I have received almost 400 written representations on our proposals for the national curriculum in Wales, and I expect to publish soon a statement of policy for the curriculum in Wales. In addition, there have been a series of meetings between my officials and the various educational interests in Wales, on this and our other proposed developments in schools—financial delegation, grant maintained schools, open enrolment and collective worship. Our intentions will be made public as soon as the Education Bill is published.

WDA Factories

23. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the precise location of the five Welsh Development Agency factories ready for occupation in the Denbigh area; and what assessment he has made of the contribution of the five factories to solving the long-term unemployment problems of the Vale of Clwyd.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Four factories ready for occupation are on the Corwen industrial estate and one on the Denbigh industrial estate. A further WDA unit has recently become available at Corwen. I am confident that tenants for these factories will soon be found.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when his Department was first made aware that blood products contaminated with the AIDS virus had been given to haemophiliacs treated at the University Hospital of Wales.

Mr. Grist: The Department was first made aware in December 1984 that a batch of the blood product, factor VIII, which was thought to have been contaminated with the human immuno-deficiency virus had been used in the treatment of haemophilia patients at the University hospital of Wales.

Sir Raymond Gower: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest information regarding the total number of cases of AIDS reported in Wales; and how this compares with the number 12 months previously.

Mr. Grist: The latest available figures show that at the end of October 1987, 17 cases of AIDS in Wales had been reported to the communicable diseases surveillance centre. This compares with nine cases at the end of October 1986.

Figures for the reported cases of AIDS in the United Kingdom are published monthly in a press notice issued by the Department of Health and Social Security and copies are placed in the Library.

Cardiac Disease

Sir Raymond Gower: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest information concerning the incidence of cardiac disease in Wales; and what were the approximate figures at the latest convenient date for each of the Welsh counties.

Mr. Grist: Information on the incidence of cardiac disease in the population is not available centrally. Heartbeat Wales has recently produced estimates of the number of people reporting symptoms of angina but not of all heart disease. The following table shows the numbers of deaths where heart disease was recorded as the underlying cause.

Deaths in 1986 from heart disease[1] ICD 390-429

Area of usual residence	Number of registered deaths
Clwyd	1,626
Dyfed	1,383
Gwent	1,799
Gwynedd	1,008
Mid Glamorgan	1,286
Powys	461
South Glamorgan	1,460
West Glamorgan	1,569
WALES	11,592

[1] ICD 390-429 includes ischaemic heart disease, hypertensive disease, diseases of the pulmonary circulation and other heart diseases, chronic rheumatic heart disease and acute rheumatic fever.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans his Department has for future hospital treatment for infant cardiac cases needing catheterisation and surgery; what is the number of such cases treated annually; and where that treatment is currently undertaken.

Mr. Grist: The Department has recently approved in principle the development of a paediatric cardiac unit at the University hospital of Wales to provide cardiology for children of all ages and cardiac surgery for those of one year and above.

On the advice of the Welsh Medical Committee, the very specialised cardiac surgery for new-born babies and infants up to one year of age will continue to be provided at specialist supra-regional centres, the nearest of which is Bristol.

At present, cardiac surgery and catheterisation for infants is provided at supra-regional centres including Bristol, Southampton, London and Liverpool and it is open to consultants to refer patients to the most appropriate centre. Information on the number of children receiving treatment at all such centres is not held by the Department.

Storm Damage

Sir Raymond Gower: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest information concerning the damage caused by the recent storms floods to farms and to houses and other properties, respectively; and what assistance he may give for uninsurable losses sustained by the persons affected.

Mr. Peter Walker: My latest information is that about 600 residential and over 100 commercial and industrial properties were affected by the recent flooding in south-west and north Wales. However, reports from different sources are still be reconciled. Damage to farms has mostly been confined to hedges, banks, walls, culverts and farm access roads, whilst stock losses of 140 sheep, 60 cattle and 300 poultry were reported. Crop losses are minimal.

On the question of assistance, I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made to the House on 21 October, at column 745, in which I indicated that I would be making available special financial assistance to local authorities whose eligible additional expenditure, excluding insurable losses, exceeded a defined threshold. There is no special Government assistance available to individuals suffering uninsurable losses.

Ports (Employment)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to how many people are employed in each of the ports of Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The census of employment listed 2,976 persons as employed in "sea transport" in Wales in September 1984. Details of individual ports are not available.

Company Closures

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many companies have notified him of closures in Wales in each of the years since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Companies are not required to notify me of closures although some do so a s a matter of courtesy. Statistics on such notifications are not held.

Clwyd Health Authority

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make extra funds available to enable the Clwyd health authority to resume operations for hip and knee joints; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I understand that the Clwyd health authority will be continuing hip replacement operations at Ysbyty Wrecsam Maelor at the same rate as they have been carried out so far this year. I am told that knee operations are customarily carried out at Gobowen for Clwyd residents. Whether or not Clwyd health authority carries out such operations in future is a matter for the authority to decide.

On the question of funding, I understand that the authority plans to submit a late bid under the 1987-88 waiting times initiative for funding the specialty of orthopaedics. Full consideration will be given to that bid when it is received.

Alyn and Deeside (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make an official visit to the constituency of Alyn and Deeside to observe developments at Deeside industrial park and aircraft production at Broughton, and to review outstanding road improvement plans.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am anxious to visit all parts of Wales and have already undertaken visits to Clwyd. I look forward to visits to Alyn and Deeside in the future.

Welsh Language

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what measures are being taken to ensure that the reconstituted National Council for Vocational Qualifications has the expertise and competence to validate bilingual (Welsh and English) and Welsh language medium vocational qualifications;

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that employers from Wales who need to employ persons with bilingual skills in the Welsh and English languages will be represented on the current nine working groups established by the reconstituted National Council for Vocational Qualifications in order to present recommendations in various vocational areas.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The National Council for Vocational Qualifications was set up to establish a vocational qualification framework with currency in England, Wales and Northern Ireland but is not itself a validating or awarding body. The council operates by accrediting qualifications awarded by other bodies and assigning them to the vocational qualification framework. Where a possible accreditation involves competence in the Welsh language, the council will only proceed if it is satisfied that such competence has been taken into account in the development and delivery arrangements for the award. The council will draw on any necessary expertise to assist in its consideration of qualifications involving Welsh language skills.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress of the Cardiff Bay development corporation.

Mr. Grist: The corporation has made very useful progress since its formation in April this year in laying the foundations for a comprehensive strategy for the regeneration of the designated area.

Wales Tourist Board

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to introduce legislation to provide the Wales tourist board with the same statutory framework as the Scottish tourist board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Affairs Committee's report on tourism in Wales expresses an interest in this area. I hope to reply to the Committee shortly.

ENVIRONMENT

Information Services

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by grade the personnel currently employed in the information branch within his Department.

Mr. Ridley: The personnel employed in DOE (including PSA) information branch on 1 November 1982 were as follows:

Grade	Staff in post at 1 November 1987
Grade 4—Director	1
Grade 5—Assistant Secretary	1
Grade 6—Chief Information Officer	1
Grade 7—Principal	3
Grade 7—Principal Information Officer	5
Senior Information Officer	9
Information Officer	11
HEO	3
EO	2
Senior Personal Secretary	1
AO	6
Personal Secretary	2
AA	2
Typist	1
Total	48

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of maintaining the information branch within his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Ridley: The costs each year since 1984-85 of maintaining the information directorate of the Department of the Environment and, since 1985-86, of the information branch of the Property Services Agency have been (outturn prices):

Year	Administration Costs £k
1984-85	795
1985-86	1,043
1986-87	1,073

Before 1984-85 Department of the Environment information directorate provided some services in common with the Department of Transport. It is not therefore possible to give precise figures of costs before 1984-85.

Pollution

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has conducted further studies during the last six months into problems related to the scrutiny and control of river pollution derived from agricultural activities; if he is considering more far-reaching co-operation with other Departments with regard to this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The problems of river pollution derived from agricultural and other sources are kept under regular review and especially at the present time in the light of the Environment Committee's report on the pollution of rivers and estuaries. A number of initiatives are currently being considered to tackle the main sources of agricultural pollution and there is also ongoing research in this area.

My right hon. Friend expects to make a statement of the Government's policies in the near future.

United States Forces (Payment)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing (a) the amount due to the Property Services Agency from United States forces in respect of works expenditure at the end of each financial year, to date, since 1983, (b) the amount paid in each year and (c) the average delay in each year between the final submission of the account from the Property Services Agency and payment by United States forces;

(2) what has been (a) the total cost and (b) the annual cost since 1983 to public funds of pre-funding the Property Services Agency works expenditure for United States forces.

Mr. Chope: The table requested is as follows:

£ million

Financial Year	Arrears Brought Forward	Claimable Expenditure in Year	Receipts Received in Year
1983-84	21·0	95·2	93·7
1984-85	22·5	103·4	98·6
1985-86	27·3	117·2	115·2
1986-87	29·3	142·2	143·6
1987-88	27·9	[1]	[1]

[1] Not yet available.

The Property Services Agency does not keep information on delays or the annual cost to public funds of pre-funding works expenditure for United States forces in the form requested and this could not be obtained without disproportionate expense. However, checks undertaken earlier this year indicate that the USAF pays almost 70 per cent. of the bills raised within two weeks and about 95 per cent. within four weeks. Checks undertaken in previous years were on a different basis but confirm that a substantial improvement has taken place.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to include the United States army and navy within the scope of a revised and more effective rapid payment system for Property Services Agency works expenditure.

Mr. Chope: The rapid payment system is being refined for all of PSA's work for the USAF. Consideration is being given to extending the system initially to selected United States navy establishments in the light of experience with the USAF. The possible extension to other United States navy and United States army establishments will also be considered.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Property Services Agency staff are currently dealing with the rapid payment system in relation to works expenditure for the United States forces.

Mr. Chope: Twenty-four PSA accounts staff at Hastings deal with repayment claims for the United States forces: about 50 per cent. of their time is spent on the rapid payment system (RPS). Other PSA staff in the nine dedicated USAF district works offices and elsewhere in the agency deal with RPS together with a wide range of other duties, and the resource effort devoted to RPS cannot readily be identified separately.

Peak Park

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications in the last year were made to the Peak Park planning board; how many appeals from decisions of the board he has received; and how many have been successful.

Mr. Waldegrave: The latest available figures are as follows: 895 planning applications were made to the Peak Park planning board in 1986-87. Of 22 decisions in 1986 on appeal against refusal by the board, four were successful.

Water Authorities

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount of money was spent in 1985-86 and 1986-87 by each of the water authorities on pre-privatisation proposals; and how this expenditure is broken down.

Mr. Moynihan: This is a matter for the individual water authorities.

Water Industry (Pensions)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps will be taken to ensure that the quality of the pension schemes currently enjoyed by water industry employees is maintained following privatisation.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government have made clear that the existing accrued pension rights of current employees of the water authorities, and of pensioners, and deferred pensioners will not be affected by privatisation. We have also said that, following privatisation, existing employees will have the right to remain in a pension scheme with the same benefits, and requiring the same contributions, as the local government superannuation scheme, of which they are members. Any provisions necessary to secure this position will be included in the legislation to privatise the water authorities.

Housing White Paper

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will put copies of the responses to the consultation exercise on the housing White Paper in the Library.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall in due course place in the Library copies of responses to the individual documents recently issued on various aspects of housing policy where respondents have indicated that they are content for their views to be made public.

London Residuary Body

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount of money realised through asset sales by the London residuary body since its inception.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on Thursday 12 November 1987.

Rating Reform

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of poorer households, with an income of less than £75 per week, after taxes, referred to in the document "Paying for local Government — The Need for Change", how many of these households are single-adult households; how many of them occupy properties with above average rateable value; what is the average rateable value referred to in the document; how many of these households receive rate relief at present; what is the current contribution of the highest paid 10 per cent. to domestic rates relative to the lowest paid 10 per cent. of households; and what this figure is as a percentage of their respective incomes; and what has been the total cost so far of the production of general publicity material concerning the community charge.

Mr. Howard: Based on data from the family expenditure survey in 1985-86 prices, I estimate that 18 per cent. of households in England had an income after tax of less than £75 per week; 82 per cent. of these are single adult households and 22 per cent. occupy property with above average rateable value of the sample — £193. It is estimated that 82 per cent. would be entitled to rate rebates under the arrangements to come into effect from 1 April 1988.

In respect of the other matters referred to, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on Thursday 12 November 1987 and to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 29 October.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the types of hostel residents which will be made exempt from the community charge.

Mr. Howard: The exemption will apply to residents of hostels which provide accommodation and care to a professional standard, the cost of which is passed on to the residents as an addition to the rent.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to include parish and town councils in the distribution of resources to local government from the national uniform business rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Proposals for the payment of grants and non-domestic rate were published on 23 September. Under those proposals grant and non-domestic rate income together with income from the community charge will be paid into a collection fund from which the funding requirements of all the local authorities in an area, including parish and town councils, will be met.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish details of his proposals for dealing with appeals against non-domestic rateable values and appeals arising from decisions in relation to the community charge following reform of the rating system.

Mr. Howard: I have published a booklet entitled "Appeals and Valuation and Community Charge Tribunals", which sets out the broad outline of our proposals for appeals. Copies of the booklet have been sent to interested parties and have been placed in the Library. The canvas for and compilation of the community charges register will give rise to certain rights of appeal. It is proposed that such appeals will be determined by local valuation courts, whose current remit to determine rating appeals will be extended. In recognition of their new role, the courts will be renamed valuation and community charge tribunals.

The booklet sets out the Government's proposals for the procedures for making and determining community charge appeals and for the constitution and procedures of the new tribunals.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Her Majesty's Government's proposals for a new business rate will apply to farm businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 12 November 1987]: Yes. Those parts of a farm business which are currently liable to pay non-domestic rates will continue to do so at the level of the national non-domestic rate from 1990.

Hamilton Sheriff Court

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total cost so far, and what is the projected expenditure to completion, of the work being done on Hamilton sheriff court.

Mr. Chope: The work being carried out at Hamilton sheriff court house has cost £2,565,000 so far. The projected final cost is £3,185,000.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about damage to the ozone layer.

Mr. Moynihan: In the last three months my Department has received approximately 200 letters about the ozone layer, either directly from members of the public or forwarded by right hon. and hon. Members.

Football Violence

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the effect on the level of violence of Luton Town football club's ban on visiting supporters; and if he will enter into discussions with the Football Association and the Football League with a view to the extension of such a scheme throughout England.

Mr. Moynihan: I have seen the report of the chief constable of Bedfordshire showing the success of the first season's experience of the members only scheme at Luton Town FC. That success has continued so far this season; there have been no arrests, no ejections from or injuries sustained in the ground and no incidents of criminal damage attributable to football supporters in the town. As I said in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn, Hatfield (Mr. Evans) on 4 November, at column 920, I applaud Luton's approach and congratulate it on the example it has shown. Other clubs are pursuing membership schemes of their own, but there is compelling police evidence that the 100 per cent. scheme which Luton has adopted cannot be extended throughout England.

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he plans to advise the Football League and the Football Association that they should introduce a 100 per cent. members' only scheme to combat hooliganism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend on 4 November, at column 920. I have no plans to advise the football authorities that they should introduce members only schemes. I acknowledge the success of the members only scheme at Luton Town FC, but compelling police evidence at many other grounds exists to show that such schemes would not be appropriate at all clubs.

World Cup, Calcutta

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost to public funds of his trip to the World Cup in Calcutta; what was the composition of his party; and what was (a) the purpose and (b) the outcome of his visit.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short) on 12 November. It was important in the MCC's bicentenary year for me to be present to offer the England team congratulations on their magnificient achievement in reaching the World cup final.

Residential Accommodation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what residential accommodation is provided for departmental Ministers and civil servants and charged to public funds; and what has been the total cost in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Chope: No residential accommodation is provided for Ministers of this Department. The other information is not readily available and could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Birds of Prey

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply of 5 November, Official Report, column 858, he will list as precisely as possible the areas from which sparrow-hawks, merlin and peregrine falcons were taken under licences granted in 1986; what are the eligibity criteria for the granting of licences to take birds out of the wild; and if he has any proposals to restrict or phase out the system of granting licences for taking birds out of the wild.

Mr. Moynihan: The number of sparrow-hawks and peregrines taken in 1986 by area were:

Peregrines: 1 Dumfries and Galloway; 1 Cumbria.

Sparrow-hawks: 1 Strathclyde; 2 South Wales; 4 West Wales; 1 Cheshire; 2 Derbyshire; 4 Hampshire; 2 Lancashire; 2 Nottinghamshire; 2 North Yorkshire; 2 Oxfordshire; 1 Somerset; 2 South Yorkshire; 2 Staffordshire; 3 Surrey; 1 Tyne and Wear; 3 Warwickshire; 1 West Midlands; 4 West Yorkshire.

No licences were granted to take merlins from the wild in 1986. Applicants must be 18 years old or over. The Nature Conservancy Council advises on general areas from which birds may be taken, which avoid edges of each species ranges or where there is a lower than average density.

The Department also takes into account the views of the Hawk Board (which represents the interests of falconers and hawk keepers) and the Nature Conservancy

Council has recommended that licences should not be granted for taking from the wild any diurnal birds of prey after next year, and the Government intend to accept that advice.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 28 October, Official Report, column 275, what are the exceptional circumstances in which the taking of wild peregrine falcons will be allowed to continue after 1988.

Mr. Moynihan: Applications will be considered on their merits after consultation with the Nature Conservancy Council. There may, for example, be an occasional need for gene replenishment, to avoid in-breeding problems.

Argentina

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the exclusion of Argentina from the Rous cup in May 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I have received no representations about the exclusion of Argentina from the Rous cup next year. The Football Association consulted me in October about the possibility of inviting Argentina and I made it clear in my reply that there were no foreign policy or security reasons to deter an invitation and that the decision therefore was one for the Football Association to make. I also suggested that in making a decision the association would wish to have in mind the possibility of adverse public reaction and perhaps hooliganism which conceivably could occur if the invitation were to be accepted.

SCOTLAND

Local Income Tax

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what would be the estimated charge, on the basis of current expenditure (a) per household and (b) per capita for each Scottish district if a system of local income tax were to be introduced.

Mr. Lang: Information on local income tax rates required to replace the income from domestic rates in 1987-88, and the resulting tax bills for a single person on Scottish average earnings, is shown in the table. Tax bills per household and per capita would depend on household and personal circumstances in each district on which detailed information is not available.

Notes:

(1) The income tax rate for Scotland has been estimated for 1987-88 by dividing the amount to be raised from domestic rates, net of rate rebates, by an estimate of the yield of 1p on the basic rate of income tax for Scotland.

(2) The income tax rates by district assume resource equalisation, that is, the yield of 1p in the £ is the same per adult in all districts.

(3) The estimate of average gross earnings has been taken from the 1987 new earnings survey, and is the average of the male and female full-time adult earnings not affected by absence at April 1987.

(4) In calculating the tax bill for a single adult, it is assumed that earnings are the only source of income and that only personal tax allowances apply.

Information Services

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of maintaining the public information division within the Forestry Commission in each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The costs rounded to the nearest £ thousand were as follows:

	£
1979-80	89,000
1980-81	124,000
1981-82	137,000
1982-83	131,000

Alcohol-related Offences

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many breach of the peace convictions were related to alcohol consumption in each of the years from 1980; and if he will express the figures as a percentage of the total number of convictions for each of the years;

(2) if he will list the number of criminal convictions in which alcohol was a contributory factor, by region, in each of the years since 1972;

(3) how many breach of the peace convictions were made on persons aged under 18 years in which alcohol was a contributory factor in each of the years from 1980;

(4) how many criminal convictions were made on persons under 18 years of age in which alcohol was a contributory factor in each of the years from 1972.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many criminal convictions were made for drunkenness on persons under 18 years of age in each of the years from 1972.

The term 'drunkenness' is taken to mean offences of being drunk and incapable, drunk and disorderly, drunk in or attempting to enter a designated sports ground and similar offences.

Cirrhosis of the Liver (Death)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of deaths caused by cirrhosis of the liver in each of the years from 1972; and if he will express the figures (a) as a percentage of all deaths per year, and (b) as a percentage increase or decrease on each preceding year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Alcoholism

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of registered alcoholics in each of the years from 1972.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available as there is no requirement to register alcoholics.

AIDS

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of people have sero-converted to HIV in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of persons in Scotland who are HIV seropositive is not known. Of those who have chosen to be tested for HIV antibodies, by the end of September 1987 1,311 had been found to be HIV seropositive.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many and what proportion of haemophiliacs in Scotland are known to be infected with the human immunodeficiency virus.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: At the end of September 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 73 haemophiliacs in Scotland known to be carrying HIV antibodies. This figure represents approximately 15 per cent. of the total of about 500 haemophiliacs in Scotland.

Education Reform

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 9 November, what methods he will use to assess the weight of (a) opposition to and (b) support for the ceiling powers expressed by the respondents to the consultative document on school boards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have received many thoughtful and detailed responses, both from individuals and representative organisations. We will consider the points made on their merits.

Lay Observer

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to review the powers of redress available to the Lay Observer.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend is at present considering proposals from the Law Society of Scotland for legislation on solicitors' discipline, which include provision for the Lay Observer for Scotlad to report cases of apparent professional misconduct or inadequate professional services to the Scottish solicitors' discipline tribunal.

School Meals

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of children who take school meals who are entitled to free school meals in Scotland by reason of (a) their family being entitled to family income supplement and (b) the discretionary power of the local authority to extend free meal provision.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Rating Reform

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has of the total annual running cost to local authorities in Scotland of administering the new community charge in 1987-88.

Mr. Lang: The community charge system will come into full operation in 1989-90. We estimate that, in that year, the additional administrative expenditure will be in the range £17 million to £22 million.

Psychiatric and Mentally Handicapped Patients

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the financial allocations to each of the Scottish health boards for psychiatric and mentally handicapped provision as a proportion of their overall budget for the last five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is for health boards to decide the appropriate provision for the mentally ill and mentally handicapped from within their overall allocations, and there is no specific earmarking of resources for this purpose.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the Aberdeen Telford survey on nurse staffing levels in mentally handicapped and psychiatric hospitals carried out in 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Aberdeen formula and the Telford consultative approach are two methods of assessing nursing staff requirements at the individual hospital and ward level. The Telford approach was recommended to health boards by the Scottish Home and Health Department in 1986 for use in mental handicap hospitals.

Mental Welfare Commission

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he proposes to take in the light of the statement on the effect of staff shortages on patient care made by the Mental Welfare Commission for Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has asked the chairman of the Mental Welfare Commission to meet him today.

Rented Property

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate how many privately-owned dwellings suitable for letting are not available for letting.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information on unoccupied private sector dwellings was published in Scottish Development Department statistical bulletin HSIU No. 1 "Unoccupied Dwellings: A survey following the 1981 Census", which is available in the Library.

SHAPE (Implementation)

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of progress made by each health board in implementing each of the SHAPE priorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 23 October 1987]: The SHAPE report categorised each client group programme according to whether it should receive an increase in revenue expenditure relative to programmes generally (category A eg care of the elderly, mentally ill or mentally handicapped), a real increase in revenue expenditure but at a lower rate than category A (category B eg maternity services), or no increase at all in real terms with any developments being met by offsetting savings within the programme (category C eg general and acute hospital services). The table shows, on the basis of returns made by health boards, the expenditure by each board on each of the three SHAPE categories in 1981-82 and in 1985-86, expressed at 1981-82 prices. The figures demonstrate the general progress being made by each board in implementing the SHAPE priorities and, while much remains to be done, these results are encouraging.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Salmon Bill 1986

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will produce the dealer licensing scheme promised under the provisions of the Salmon Bill 1986.

Mr. Gummer: My officials have been developing a scheme for salmon dealer licensing in England and Wales under the provisions of section 31 of the Salmon Act 1986, consulting the water authorities, who will be responsible for enforcing it, and working in close liaison with officials of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, which is developing a parallel scheme under section 20 of the 1986 Act. We expect to issue a consultation paper to the trade and other interested organisations shortly. When these consultations have been completed, an order to give effect to the scheme will be submitted for parliamentary approval.

Pollution

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department has made any progress in the last six months in tightening its scrutiny and control of river pollution derived from agricultural activities; if he is considering more far-reaching co-operation with other Departments with regard to this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: My Department continues to strengthen its advice to farmers on how to reduce river pollution. I have also been considering with others, including my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, the need for further measures. Our conclusions will be contained in the Government's response to the House of Commons Environment Committee's third report.

Wheat

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the extent to which surplus bread wheat in past years has been mixed with feeding wheat in the intervention stores; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Wheat which has passed the Community's prescribed tests to establish its breadmaking quality has always been stored separately from other wheat in intervention in the United Kingdom. From the start of the 1986-87 season the regulations were changed to provide four qualities of wheat, "premium" and "common" wheat, both of which pass the breadmaking tests, "intermediate" wheat, which fails the tests but has a high protein content, and "other" wheat. Only wheat of the last quality has been offered to date.

Residential Accommodation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what residential accommodation is provided for departmental Ministers and civil servants and charged to public funds; and what has been the total cost in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department does not provide residential accommodation for Ministers. At certain laboratories and experimental centres, housing is available at the "fair" rent but key workers (whose duties require them to be on call outside normal hours) pay less. The costs of providing this accommodation since 1979 cannot be calculated without disproportionate effort.

Salmon

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied that adequate precautions are being taken to prevent the spread of the salmon disease gyrodactylus salaris into United Kingdom and Irish waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: We are aware that the parasite gyrodactylus salaris is associated with high mortalities among salmon in a number of Norwegian rivers and we have been keeping the position under review. The parasite is transmitted among live salmon in fresh water. Imports of live fish of the salmon family into Great Britain are prohibited under the Diseases of Fish Act 1937 and very strict fish health controls also operate in Northern Ireland. There is no evidence that it can be transmitted through salmon ova, but in any case imports of salmon ova are only permitted under stringent health certification requirements, involving disinfection. Our import controls therefore provide an adequate means of preventing the spread of the parasite to Great Britain.

Evidence so far available is not sufficient to enable us to conclude that mortalities would be caused by the presence of this parasite in British rivers to the same extent as appears to have happened in the conditions existing in Norwegian rivers. Nevertheless, my right hon. Friends and I have concluded that, as a precautionary measure, we should bring this parasite within the control provisions of the Diseases of Fish Act 1937.

EC (Grain Surplus)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will propose the use of EEC grain surplus to prevent rises in the cost of bread in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The wheat held in intervention in the United Kingdom is not of breadmaking quality. Millers in the United Kingdom have already made arrangements to obtain most of the grain they need for bread this season. If however, shortages of breadwheat do develop later in the season we will consider seeking the release of bread making wheat held in intervention elsewhere in the European Community.

Lambs (Safety Checks)

Mr. Curry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the results of his Department's further safety checks on lambs in the Skipton/Ilkley area.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 13 November 1987]: A total of 686 sheep from 29 flocks have now been monitored as part of the current intensive exercise in west Yorkshire. Confirmatory analysis has revealed that meat samples from three ewes taken from a flock grazing the moorland near Grassington have yielded levels of radiocaesium of 1222, 1295 and 980 becquerels/kilogram respectively. These results showed that two of the ewes were thus about the action level of 1000 bq/kg for lambs which does carry with it a very large safety margin and is not itself a safety level.

This further close monitoring of live sheep in the area will continue to determine, as seems possible, whether these higher levels are confined to this flock or a very small area.

The present special monitoring exercise in Yorkshire is being carried out in response to public concern that heavy rainfall in the area when the Chernobyl plume might have been passing overhead caused deposition of radioactive material. The present exercise is thus in the nature of a double check on the comprehensive national monitoring that we did last year which did not indicate any particularly high levels in Yorkshire but it is being done in the light of new information on rainfall which has recently been brought to our attention.

The results of the present exercise so far do not lead us to any different conclusion from that we had taken earlier that there is no risk to food supplies. The sheep for which we have the above results are breeding ewes. Lambs or other sheep likely to be going to slaughter have all been found to have levels of radioactivity well below the action level. These lambs or sheep have all been in the lower pastures. I understand that it is normal husbandry practice in this part of Yorkshire to finish lambs or sheep that may have been on the moorland on the lower pastures. This does suggest therefore that there has not been an earlier problem with radiocaesium in lambs that have gone for slaughter that has gone undetected. Together with the low results on vegetation I am thus satisfied that the general public in the area have not been exposed to undue levels of radioactivity in their diet.

The flock from which the three sheep were taken is being closely checked and arrangements are being made to ensure that any movements out of the flock are properly controlled.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Lithotripsy

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make more funds available for further investment in lithotripsy with at least one machine in each region, so as to avoid excessive waiting time for patients.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to provide central funds for the purchase of lithotripters. We have made it clear that this service should develop on a regional basis. In addition to the machine operated in conjunction with the private sector at St. Thomas' hospital in London, NHS lithotripers have recently gone, or are about to go, into operation in Manchester, Sheffield (where part of the capacity of the machine is being used to evaluate its effectiveness in treating gallstones) and St. Paul's hospital, London. This should reduce waiting time for patients. In addition, there are two private sector machines in London with which health authorities could have contractual arrangements if they thought this appropriate.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average waiting time today for patients needing extra corporeal shock wave lithotripsy; and what was the comparable waiting time two years ago.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. Friend the information he seeks. It is not available centrally.

Benefits

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in the constituency of Fife, North-East are currently in receipt of the following benefits (a) supplementary benefit, (b) unemployment benefit, (c) housing benefit, (d) child benefit, and (e) mobility allowance; and how many supplementary benefit payments were made to Fife, North-East residents in the last financial year.

Mr. Portillo: (a) The Fife, North-East constituency is covered by the Department's local offices at Dundee, East, Perth and Leven, although their boundaries are not conterminous. The table shows the number of people receiving supplementary benefit from those offices as at 28 July 1987, the latest date for which information is available:

	Number
Dundee East	12,626
Perth	8,821
Leven	5,465
Total	26,912

(Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action)

(b) Similarly, the constituency is covered by the Department of Employment's unemployment benefit offices at Leven and Glenrothes, and again the boundaries are not conterminous. The table shows the number of people receiving unemployment benefit from those offices as at 14 May 1987, the latest date for which information is available:

	Number
Leven	1,446
Glenrothes	1,474
Total	2,920

(Source: 100 per cent. count of cases where UB is in payment)

(c) The provisional number of rate rebate recipients for Fife North-East district council in the current financial year is 7,565. This is the nearest available equivalent to the information requested.

(d-e) Child benefit and mobility allowance are administered centrally and I regret that there is no information specific to Fife.

The number of supplementary benefit single payments made through the local offices of the Department covering the constituency for the 1986-87 financial year were:

Dundee, East	Perth	Leven
17,028	6,059	6,118

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why Mrs Ellis and her 15-year-old son of 21 Valentine crescent, Sheffield 5, have been refused an urgent needs payment.

Mr. Portillo: The question of Mrs. Ellis' entitlement to an urgent need payment is for the independent adjudication authority to decide. If Mrs. Ellis is dissatisfied with the decision, she has the right of appeal to the social security appeal tribunal.

Westcliffe Hospital

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what capital and revenue costs have been incurred by North Staffordshire district health authority in each of the last eight years on maintaining and improving Westcliffe hospital; and if he will also detail all improvements and modernisations to the hospital.

Mrs. Currie: Annual costing and other returns for Westcliffe hospital submitted to the Department by the North Staffordshire health authority show the following:

	Revenue Expenditure on Building and Engineering Maintenance/ Maintenance of Grounds and Gardens £	Capital Expenditure on Building and Engineering Works £
1982-83	147,508	11,798
1983-84	161,650	36,219
1984-85	84,970	—
1985-86	125,055	15,472
1986-87	103,130	11,810

For earlier years and details of all improvements and modernisations to the hospital the hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman of the North Staffordshire health authority who may be able to assist with the information she seeks.

Information Services

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list by grade the personnel currently employed in the information division within his Department;

(2) what was the cost of maintaining the information division within his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The number of staff employed in the headquarters information division at 1 October 1987 (the latest date for which figures are available) was:

St. Nicholas' Hospital, Newcastle

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 4 November, if, in the light of the assumptions about receipts from land sales supporting the capital programmes of the National Health Service in the autumn statement, he will allow in his capital allocation to the Northern regional health authority for the refusal on appeal of a superstore at St. Nicholas' hospital, Newcastle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The allocation of funds between regional health authorities is concerned with net Exchequer resources and takes no account of receipts from land sales by health authorities which they may retain. Hence, changes in such receipts, or anticipated receipts, will have no influence on these allocations.

AIDS

Mr. Chris Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give an estimate of the proportion of haemophiliacs infected with the AIDS virus that will proceed to develop full-blown AIDS;

(2) what is his latest information on the number of severe haemophiliacs who have been infected with the AIDS virus as a result of the administration of contaminated blood products.

Mr. Newton: The most recent figures available show that 1,061 people with haemophilia have been reported HIV antibody positive in the United Kingdom. In addition there are likely to be other cases and we accept the estimate made by the Haemophilia Society that there may be around 1,200 in total. It is not possible to estimate the proportion of these people who will develop full-blown AIDS, but so far 66 have been reported to have developed AIDS and 49 have died.

Abortions

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give (a) the total number of abortions performed in 1986 between the 18th and 28th weeks of pregnancy and (b) the total number of abortions performed in 1986 between the 18th and 28th weeks of pregnancy which were preceded by amniocentesis.

Mr. Newton: The total number of notifications of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 in England and Wales in 1986 at gestation 18 completed weeks and over is 8,276.

Information on amniocentesis is not required to be recorded on the abortion notification form.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many abortions were carried out in 1986 in private clinics licensed by his Department on residents and non-residents at (a) under nine weeks, (b) nine to 12 weeks, (c) 13 to 17 weeks and (d) 18 weeks and over.

Mr. Newton: The information is given in the table.

Number of notifications of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 in non-NHS premises by gestation in completed weeks residents and non-residents. England and Wales 1986

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) at what week of pregnancy each of the 26 abortions carried out after 24 weeks on resident women was conducted;

(2) of the three abortions carried out after 24 weeks on non-resident women, at what week of the pregnancy each was carried out.

Mr. Newton: The information is given in the table.

Handicapped Children (Mobility)

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many children aged between two years and five years are known to his Department to be so severely disabled as to be considered incapable of independent locomotion.

Mr. Scott: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many appeals against refusal of mobility allowance to children aged under five years were heard in the last year for which records are conveniently available.

Mr. Scott: The number of appeals against refusal of mobility allowance for children under age five which have been heard cannot be readily identified but Department records show that, during the last 12 months, 14 such appeals were made.

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the estimated net annual cost of providing mobility allowance for children aged two years to five years who are otherwise eligible but are at present excluded by reason of their age.

Mr. Scott: The cost of lowering the age limit for mobility allowance to age two is estimated to be about £5·75 million a year.

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what alternative provisions are made by his Department which meet the same needs as mobility allowance for children aged between two years and five years who are not eligible for that benefit.

Mr. Scott: Attendance allowance, although not intended to meet the same needs as mobility allowance, is available for a child between the ages of two and five who needs substantially more attention or supervision than a child of the same age and sex normally requires. Health authorities and local authority social services departments are also responsible for providing a range of services aimed at identifying, assessing and meeting particular needs of disabled children; and helping them to overcome the effects of their disabilities.

Locum Doctors

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will take steps to encourage all health authorities in England and Wales to reduce the costs incurred in employing locum doctors through agencies;

(2) if he will list the health authorities in England and Wales which are taking or considering taking steps to reduce the cost of employing locum doctors through agencies.

Mr. Newton: We are aware that discussions aimed at reducing expenditure on medical agency staff are taking place within Trent, Yorkshire, Northern, Mersey, West Midlands and the four Thames regional health authorities. Officials are planning to meet representatives of the profession and senior National Health Service management to consider the issues involved.

Income Support

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will describe the salient characteristics of that group of severely disabled people which he considers do not fit naturally into the new income support scheme; and what action he will take to protect their benefit levels.

Mr. Scott: Under the income support proposals, disabled claimants will receive a disability premium or higher pensioner premium of £13·05 for a single person or £18·60 for a couple. In addition, if the disabled person is getting attendance allowance, is living independently and no one is getting invalid care allowance for caring for them, they will be entitled to a severe disability premium of £24·75. The small number of disabled people whose income support entitlement is less than their supplementary benefit entitlement at the point of change will have their benefit level maintained. Furthermore, those in receipt of a domestic assistance addition of £10 or more will have that addition maintained in real terms unless it is more than covered by their entitlement to the severe disability premium. The very small group of severely disabled people with whom we are concerned are those new claimants who claim after April 1988 and who may need extensive help to maintain themselves in the community.

Disabled People

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many disabled people are at present receiving weekly domestic assistance additional requirements payments of (a) less than £10 per week and (b) £10 and more a week.

Mr. Scott: The supplementary benefit domestic assistance addition can be awarded on the grounds of old age, ill-health, disability or heavy family responsibilities. Available information on the number of claimants receiving the addition does not distinguish between the four groups. The available data indicate that, in totals approximately 4,000 claimants are receiving domestic assistance additions of less than £10 a week and less than 1,000 are receiving additions of £10 or more. However, because of the small sample size, this information should be treated with caution.

Health Authorities

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to monitor the distribution of regional health authorities' funds to district authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Department monitors regions' distribution of resources to district health authorities through regions' long-term strategic plans and annual short-term programmes. As one of the central issues in these plans and programmes, resource distribution may also be discussed in regions' annual accountability reviews with Ministers and the National Health Service management board.

National Assistance Act 1948

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has received any representations from the East Sussex county council seeking amendment of part III, section 21 1(a) and (b), of the National Assistance Act 1948 which places an obligation on local authorities to provide sheltered accommodation for the elderly within their administrative boundaries; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: No. Under section 21(1)(a) of the National Assistance Act 1948 local social services authorities have a general duty to make arrangements for providing residential accommodation for persons who by reason of age, infirmity or other circumstances are in need of care and attention which is not otherwise available to them. These arrangements may include the provision of residential care homes by local authorities. Under section 26 of the 1948 Act authorities may also sponsor residents in voluntary and private homes. Residents do not have to be located within the authority's borders.

RAWP Formula

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the current review of the resource allocation working party formula will be completed; and if the report will be published.

Mr. Newton: The programme of analysis and research recommended in the National Health Service management board's initial report on the review, published in December 1986, is due to be completed by around the end of the year. A report will follow.

Primary Health Care

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the Government intend to reply to the First Report from the Social Services Committee in Session 1986-87, HC 37, on primary health care.

Mr. Newton: The Government's response to the Select Committee's report will be contained in the White Paper on primary health care due to be published shortly.

Haemophiliacs (AIDS)

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many and what proportion of haemophiliacs in England and Wales are known to be infected with the human immuno-deficiency virus.

Mr. Newton: We do not hold this information in the form requested. The returns submitted to the National Haemophilia Centre Directors register at 31 December 1985 showed that there was a total of 7,808 people with haemophilia A, haemophilia B and von Willebrand's disease in the United Kingdom. Only some of those patients registered require regular treatment with blood products.

The most recent figures available show that 1,061 have been reported HIV antibody positive. In addition, there are likely to be other cases and we accept the estimate made by the Haemophilia Society that there may be around 1,200 in total.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce a compensation scheme for haemophiliacs suffering from AIDS as a result of receiving contaminated blood products.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration is being given for compensation to individuals who are HIV positive through the use of infected imported blood products.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friends to my statement to the House today.

Maternal Deaths

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown of the total numbers of maternal deaths recorded in each year since 1957, where necessary using information from the confidential inquiry into maternal mortality by (a) illegal abortions, (b) legal abortions under the Abortion Act 1967 and (c) spontaneous abortions.

Mr. Newton: The available figures are shown in the table.

Notes:

1. Figures for 1955 to 1981 are taken from the triennial Reports on Confidential Enquiries into Maternal Deaths in England and Wales 1976-1978 and 1979-1981.

2. Figures for Maternal Deaths from 1982 to 1986 are taken from OPCS analyses of cause of death and show those deaths relating to Complications of Pregnancy, Childbirth and the Puerperium. These may include deaths later than 42 days after pregnancy or delivery and deaths which after detailed examination are not found to be true maternal deaths.

3. Figures for legal abortions under the 1967 Abortion Act from 1982 to 1986 are taken from OPCS analysis of the abortion notification forms submitted to the Chief Medical Officers of Health for England and Wales. These may include deaths later than 42 days after pregnancy or abortion and deaths which after detailed examination are found not to be true maternal deaths.

[1] Includes spontaneous missed abortions.

[2] From 1970, only deaths up to 42 days after pregnancy or delivery are included in line with the international definition of maternal deaths.

[3] Does not include five anaesthetic deaths, four associated with legal and one with spontaneous abortion.

[4] Does not include one anaesthetic death.

Residential Accommodation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what residential accommodation is provided for departmental Ministers and civil servants and charged to public funds; and what has been the total cost in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Scott: There is no residential accommodation provided for Department of Health and Social Security Ministers or civil servants charged to public funds.

Child Benefit

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy that in any review of child benefit he will preserve the facility for the mother to be in direct receipt of the benefit.

Mr. Scott: There are no plans to change the mother's priority entitlement to child benefit.

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people receive child benefit; and how many of these are currently paying income tax.

Mr. Scott: Around 6·8 million families receive child benefit and around 5·5 million families with children pay income tax.

NHS Property

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now give the latest overall estimates of all National Health Service property as valued by the district valuers prior to 31 October.

Mrs. Currie: The district valuers are currently revaluing the National Health Service estate. The results of the exercise have yet to be analysed. The best estimate of the National Health Service estate, based on a previous valuation in 1985, is £12·7 billion.

Grants and Loans

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the social fund grants and loans budgets for 1988-89 to individual loan offices as a percentage of each offices's expenditure on single payments and urgent need payments for 1985-86.

Mr. Scott: Information on the allocations for 1988-89 was contained in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 4 November at columns 774-81. I will arrange for the information requested on expenditure in 1985-86 to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if the grants and loans budgets for 1988-89 for the Coventry, East and West offices of his Department are to be evenly divided for each month of the period;

(2) if he will give a monthly breakdown of grants distributed for each month of the last five years for each Coventry office of his Department.

Mr. Scott: A model profile of expected expenditure on a month by month basis will be drawn up at national level. Local office managers may adjust the national profile to reflect particular local factors. The monthly profile of expenditure on the Coventry, East and West offices will be for the managers of those offices to decide. I will make the monthly brtakdown of single payments expenditure for each month of the last five years for the Coventry offices available in the Library.

Unemployment Benefit

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what discretion adjudication officers have in deciding on the period for which a person who has been ruled to have left or refused employment without good cause should be disqualified for unemployment benefit.

Mr. Portillo: a decision of a tribunal of social security commissioners (decision R(U) 8/74) held that, in considering the period of disqualification for unemployment benefit, adjudicktion officers must considerach case on its merits and exercise

> "sensible discretion", and that that discretion "must be exercised judicially taking into account all the circumstances relevant to the question whether the claimant should be disqualified at all and excluding extraneous factors".

In a more recent commissioners decision (R(U) 4/87), shortly to be reported, a commissioner affirmed that an adjudication authority, in the case in question a social security appeal tribunal, must consciously exercise a discretion in each case in imposing disqualification and must state the facts taken into account in exercising that discretion.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in Wales were receiving supplementary benefit in excess of the standard rate in order to help meet residential home or nursing home fees at the latest available date; and if he will estimate the total amount of supplementary benefit this represents.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information requested is not collected by individual local offices and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Family Credit

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people will be entitled to both family credit and housing benefit after the Social Security Act 1986 is implemented in April 1988.

Mr. Portillo: It is estimated that about 100,000 (just over 20 per cent.) of the families receiving family credit will also receive housing benefit. Of these about 25,000 will be receiving only rent rebate or rent allowance and 57,000 a rate rebate only. Fewer than 18,000 will receive both rent rebate/allowance and rate rebate.

Emphysema

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council to report on its investigation into the cause of emphysema among coal miners; if he intends to publish it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I understand that the council has completed its investigation into bronchitis and emphysema and that its report will be submitted to my right hon. Friend by the end of the year. A decision on publication will be made at that time. It is, however, normal practice to publish council reports.

Birmingham Health Authorities

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will reproduce his answer of 4 November, Official Report, columns 785-86, regarding Birmingham health authorities using the hospital pay and prices deflator.

Mrs. Currie: No. It is inappropriate to revalue district health authorities' expenditure by reference to centrally assessed movements in National Health Service pay and prices because the composition of that expenditure can differ substantially from the national average.

Departmental Staff (Dundee)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many staff are employed in his Department's Dundee, East and Dundee, West offices on the latest available figures; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The total number of staff in post on 1 November for each year 1979 to 1987 in Dundee, East and Dundee, West offices is as follows:

Year	Dundee (East) ILO	Dundee (West) ILO
1979	168·0	135
1980	168·0	144
1981	173·0	140
1982	168·0	141
1983	185·0	144
1984	194·0	137
1985	188·0	142
1986	197·0	148
1987	199·5	155

Abbreviation: ILO-integrated local office.

Social Fund

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to the reply of 4 November, Official Report, columns 774-81, he will explain the basis on which the budget for each social security office's social fund has been calculated.

Mr. Scott: The allocations are based largely on single payment expenditure for the latter part of 1986-87, but also reflect estimates of the need for social fund grants and loans, based on the number and type of benefit recipients in each office.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are on his waiting lists and how long is the average length of time spent waiting for a routine non-urgent operation, in each of the teaching hospitals in London and in Leicester.

Mr. Newton: I regret that I cannot give the hon. and learned Member the information he seeks in precisely the form requested. The numbers of non-urgent surgical waiting-list cases and waiting time for individual hospitals are not available centrally. The latest information available centrally at district health authority level is, however, included in the booklet "Hospital In-Patient Waiting List—England at 31 March 1987", copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Family Income Supplement

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many families employed in farming currently receive family income supplement; and if he will break this figure down between families of farm workers and those who own or rent their own farms.

Mr. Scott: At April 1986, the latest date for which information is available, there were 11,000 families, employed in farming or related occupations who were in receipt of family income supplement. Of these families, 4,000 were self-employed and 7,000 were employees. I regret that the further information requested is not available. "Related occupations" include such groups as crofters, fishermen, gardeners, foresters, keepers and groundsmen.

Paediatric Care

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures for patients-staff ratios for paediatric care in National Health Service hospitals in the years 1976 and 1986.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 9 November 1987]: Manpower statistics cover staff in post working in hospitals and are collected at a particular point in time; but they do not differentiate between types of activities within the hospital.

The information presented in the tables is in terms of staff employed and patients treated; ratios have not been calculated as comparable figures for the earlier year are not available.

Single Payments Regulations

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will amend regulations 10 and 10A of the single payments regulations to enable payments to be made where the claimant has become the tenant or owner of an unfurnished home on the date of claim, as well as within the 28 days preceding that date; whether, in certain cases, payments are already made in these circumstances; and what guidance the office of the chief adjudication officer has given on this aspect of the interpretation of the 28 days rule.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 9 November 1987]: The regulations referred to allow a single payment to be made where the claimant has become the tenant or owner of unfurnished accommodation

"within the 28 days immediately preceding the date of claim".

I understand that, in response to inquiries, the office of the chief adjudication officer has advised that a claim should not be disallowed simply because the claimant made that claim on the same date that he obtained a tenancy or ownership of unfurnished accommodation. A commissioner's decision covering this point is currently awaited. I should wish to await that decision before considering whether any further action is necessary.

Invalid Care Allowance

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether all claims for invalid care allowance which resulted from the decision of the European Court to extend the benefit to married and cohabiting women and received before 31 August have now been granted and paid.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 12 November 1987]: At 6 November, the latest date for which information is available, decisions had been given on some 116,000 of the 126,000 invalid care allowance claims received from married and cohabiting women by 31 August 1987. The remaining claims will be decided as soon as possible.

Fielden Hospital

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he intends to take on behalf of the residents of the Fielden hospital for the mentally handicapped who are to be placed in unsuitable accommodation because their present hospital is to close; and if he will allocate Calderdale health authority additional money in order to avoid hardship to these residents.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 13 November 1987]: Provision of local health services is for Calderdale health authority to determine. It is accountable to Yorkshire regional health authority for service delivery. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of Calderdale health authority for the assurances she is clearly seeking.

I understand that the proposals referred to by the hon. Member involve the bringing forward of plans to close Fielden hospital and the transfer of approximately 30 patients affected to Standfield view hospital, the second mental handicap hospital in the district, where suitable accommodation will be provided. Calderdale health authority is upgrading one of the wards at Standfield view to enable the transfer to take place.

Agency Medical Locums

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he proposes to take about the practice employed by Calderdale district health authority of buying in agency medical locums costing two and a half times as much as junior doctors; what information he has about the effect of this on the district health authority budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 13 November 1987]: I understand that several regional health authorities, including Yorkshire, are considering steps to contain the cost of employing medical staff from agencies and we shall be monitoring progress.

The allocation of available resources within Calderdale district is a matter for the health authority and the hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman about this.

DEFENCE

Departmental Civilian Personnel

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by grade the personnel currently employed in duties connected with public relations in his Department.

Departmental Public Relations Service

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of maintaining a public relations service within his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The cost of maintaining the defence public relations service in 1986-87 was £7·3 million. This figure includes staff costs together with expenditure on films, publications, equipment, etc. With regard to costs for the years 1979-80 to 1985-86 I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 19 November 1986 at col. 226.

Service Personnel (Scotland)

Mr. Andrew Welsh asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total number of auxiliary personnel domiciled in Scotland.

Mr. Freeman: Details of the numbers of auxiliary forces personnel domiciled in Scotland are not available. Numbers on the strength of units based in Scotland at 1 April 1987 were:

	Number
Home Service Force	575
Royal Auxiliary Air Force	192

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total number of regular reserve personnel domiciled in Scotland.

Mr. Freeman: Full details of the number of regular reserve personnel domiciled in Scotland could not be determined except at disproportionate cost. Those details which are available are as follows:

	Number
Royal Navy Retired and Emergency Lists of Officers	[1]250
Royal Navy pensioners	[2]1,236
Royal Marines pensioners	[2]46
Royal Army Reserve of Officers	[3]240

[3] at 17 August 1987 excludes officers not allocated to a post on mobilisation

[4] at 17 August 1987

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total number of service personnel from (a) the United States navy, (b) the United States air force, (c) the Federal German armed forces and (d) the Dutch armed forces currently stationed in Scotland.

Mr. Freeman: Details of the number of United States, Federal German and Netherlands service personnel stationed in Scotland are as follows:

	Number
United States Navy	[1]2,079
United States Army	[2]11
United States Air Force	[2]43
Federal German Armed Forces	[3]—
Netherlands Armed Forces	[3]—

[1] At 30 September 1987.

[2] At 30 June 1987.

[3] No personnel permanently stationed in Scotland.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the total numbers of (1) Territorial Army Volunteer Reserve, (2) Royal Naval Reserve and (3) Royal Air Force Volunteer Reserve personnel domiciled in Scotland.

Mr. Freeman: Details of the numbers of volunteer reserve forces personnel domiciled in Scotland are not readily available as some units do not draw their numbers on a local territorial basis. Numbers on the strength of units stationed in Scotland at 1 April 1987 were as follows:

	Number
Royal Naval Reserve	1,074
Royal Marines Reserve	280
Territorial Army	9,737
Royal Air Force Voluntary Reserve	422

All RNR/RMR personnel must live within 40 miles of their unit location and consequently the above strength numbers are also the numbers domiciled in Scotland. RAFVR numbers include officers and adult warrant officers engaged in air training corps and combined cadet force training.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total number of (1) Army, (2) Royal Navy, (3) Royal Marines and (4) Royal Air Force service personnel stationed in Scotland.

Mr. Freeman: The total number of United Kingdom service personnel stationed in Scotland at 1 July 1987 was as follows:

	Number
All Services	19,627
Royal Navy	8,004
Royal Marines	1,213
Army	[1]2,676
Royal Air Force	7,734

[1] Excludes 679 personnel on Emergency Tour.

Royal Navy and Royal Marines numbers include personnel on sea service in home waters with ships whose home port is in Scotland.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of total recruiting to (1) the Army, (2) the Royal Navy (including Royal Marines) and (3) the Royal Air Force in each year since 1979 have been accounted for by recruits domiciled in Scotland or recruited through recruiting offices in Scotland.

Mr. Freeman: The total number of recruits and percentage of total United Kingdom recruitment entered through recruiting offices in Scotland was as follows:

	All services		Royal Navy/ Royal Marines		Royal Navy		Royal Marines		Army		Royal Air Force
	Number	per cent.	Number	per cent.	Number	per cent.	Number	per cent.	Number	per cent.	Number	per cent.
1979-80	5,063	10·7	727	7·8	599	7·8	128	7·7	3,170	11·4	1,166	11·2
1980-81	4,969	11·0	787	7·9	646	7·7	141	8·7	3,017	12·0	1,165	11·9
1981-82	2,167	11·0	314	7·9	266	8·0	48	7·3	1,548	12·3	305	9·8
1982-83	2,374	12·5	328	9·2	286	9·1	42	9·9	1,649	14·4	397	10·2
1983-84	4,191	12·4	408	8·6	383	8·9	25	6·0	2,932	14·3	851	10·0
1984-85	3,324	10·8	436	9·0	381	9·7	55	6·1	2,324	11·7	564	9·4
1985-86	3,327	11·6	389	8·4	317	8·7	72	7·1	2,418	13·2	520	9·0
1986-87	3,131	10·6	510	8·7	421	9·0	89	7·6	2,011	11·3	610	10·1

The numbers and rates exclude the following groups who are recruiting centrally; officer entrants to all of the services, service women entrants to the Queen Alexandra's royal naval nursing service prior to 1986-87 and Army-rejoined reservists.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the current total manpower strength of the British armed forces is made up of personnel recruited in Scotland or normally domiciled in Scotland.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Aircraft (Accidents)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, for each year since 1971, the rate of major accidents per 10,000 flying hours for Royal Air Force fast jet aircraft flying at low level.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not available. Since 1980, the "Statement on Defence Estimates" has included the major accident rate for Royal Air Force aircraft flying at all levels. Since 1 January 1971, this has been as follows:

Royal Air Force Major Accidents: Rates per 10,000 hours flown

	Rate per thousand
1971	0·66
1972	0·46
1973	0·51
1974	0·32
1975	0·45
1976	0·58
1977	0·34
1978	0·49
1979	0·52
1980	0·48
1981	0·50
1982	0·49
1983	0·46
1984	0·38
1985	0·33
1986	0·31

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the definition of serious damage used in tables 5.7 and 5.8 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1987", Vol. 2.

Mr. Freeman: An aircraft is said to be seriously damaged when it has been damaged beyond repair or cannot be repaired on site and must be removed to an established repair depot or civilian repair organisation.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the frequency and circumstances of accidents in the United Kingdom to foreign military low-flying aircraft are taken into account in his continuous assessments of the safety and control procedures in the United Kingdom military low-flying system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Yes, such accidents are taken into account.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military aircraft accident summaries were published in each year from 1980 to date.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1 January 1980, military aircraft accident summaries have been published as follows:

Year	Number Published
1980	23
1981	24
1982	23
1983	23
1984	20
1985	16
1986	16
1987 (to 13 November)	15

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for which of the military aircraft accidents listed in the annexes of the "Statement on Defence Estimates" in each year since 1980 there has been no military aircraft accident summary published; and what was the reason for non-publication in each case.

Mr. Freeman: Of the accidents to Royal Air Force aircraft listed in the "Statement on Defence Estimates" since 1980, military aircraft accident summaries have been published, or will be published, for them all with the following exceptions:

Date	Aircraft	Reason for non-publication
19 August 1980	Hawk	Aircraft damage recategorised.
17 May 1982	Tornado	Aircraft belonged to Tri-national Training School, RAF Cottesmore.
25 October 1985	Wessex	Aircraft lost during security operations in Northern Ireland
19 November 1985	Harrier	Aircraft damage recategorised

The Royal Navy began producing summaries in 1985. Since then, summaries for all accidents listed in the SDE have either been published or will be published in due course. It has not been the practice to publish summaries in the case of Army aircraft accidents.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the statement by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman) on 28 October, Official Report, column 393, that the number of aircraft training accidents in 1987 is the same as for 1986, if he will list the dates, aircraft type and locations of all accidents to British military aircraft flying at low level (a) between 1 January and 31 December 1986, (b) between 1 January and 28 October 1986 and (c) between 1 January and 28 October 1987.

Mr. Freeman: Major accidents to British military aircraft during low flying operations in 1986 and until 28 October 1987 are as follows:

Date	Aircraft Type	Service	Location
1986
7 January	Phantom	RAF	Aysgarth, Yorkshire
20 March	Lynx	Army	Einbeck, West Germany
29 April	Gazelle	Army	Topcliffe
13 May	Chinook	RAF	West Falkland
12 July	Gazelle	Army	Sollau, West Germany
15 July	Lightning	RAF	North Sea off Teeside
7 October	Gazelle	Army	Hildesheim West Germany
20 October	Sea King	RN	In sea off Portugal
5 November	Wessex	RAF	Akrotiri Bay Cyprus
27 November	Jaguar	RAF	Eskdalemuir Forest
1987
1 February	Wessex	RAF	Ben More
24 February	Sea King	RN	Falmouth Bay
27 February	Chinook	RAF	Falkland Island
30 March	Tornado	RAF	Wesel, West Germany
22 April	Buccaneer	RAF	In sea off Wick
3 June	Tornado	RAF	Manby, Lincs
17 June	Tornado Jaguar	RAF	Near Keswick
24 June	Jaguar	RAF	Nr. Builth Wells
16 July	Gazelle	Army	BATUS, Suffield, Canada
27 July	Tornado	RAF	Fadmoor, Yorkshire
26 August	Phantom	RAF	Near Aberystwyth
23 September	Sea King	RN	Culdrose
16 October	Wessex	RN	Off Lizard

Aircraft (Strobe Lights)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date high intensity strobe lights were first fitted to Royal Air Force fast jet aircraft; what proportion of the Royal Air Force's fast jet fleet is now so equipped; and what plans exist to fit high intensity strobe lights to other United Kingdom military aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: High-intensity strobe lights (HISL) began to be fitted to certain RAF aircraft types in 1983. Of these, the following proportion now have HISL:

	Per cent.
Harrier T4	73
Harrier GR3	15
Harrier GR5	100
Hawk	100
Jaguar	96
Buccaneer Mk 2b	54

Consideration is being given to fitting HISL to certain other RAF aircraft in due course. In addition, all RAF Tornado aircraft are fitted with a low-intensity strobe light system. HISLs have been fitted to all Royal Navy Harriers, and a programme is underway to fit HISLs to Army Gazelle and Lynx helicopters.

Minesweepers

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many minesweepers are (a) being commissioned and (b) in the process of being built.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are currently two MCMVs and five SRMHs on order from the shipbuilder. Of these, one MCMV (HMS Berkeley) is due to be accepted later this month and will join the fleet as an operational unit on completion of trials. HMS Atherstone was accepted from the shipbuilder in 1986 and will join the fleet soon.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy minesweepers are equipped with chaff launchers and missile detection radar.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Royal Navy mine counter-measures vessels are provided with self-defence equipment relevant to the range of threats they face in carrying out their operational tasks. It would not be in the interests of the safety of our ships to define the specific capabilities of individual ships.

Flying Guidance (Nuclear Power Stations)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidance is given to Royal Air Force pilots regarding flying in the vicinity of nuclear power stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Standing instructions prohibit all military aircraft from flying in the vicinity of nuclear installations in the United Kingdom.

Low Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any part of the tactical route for low flying by larger and less manoeuvrable military aircraft has been reinstated since its closure in 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the current maximum capacity of the United Kingdom low-flying system in terms of numbers of military low-level training sorties flown per year;

(2) if planning for the future use of the United Kingdom military low-flying system includes the setting of target or maximum figures for the total number of sorties to be flown in any given period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: There is no restriction on the total number of military low level training sorties flown in the United Kingdom each year; nor is any planned.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes are planned for the United Kingdom low-flying system in respect of (a) air traffic control procedures (b) flight safety procedures (c) aircraft routing patterns and (d) the vertical and horizontal boundaries of existing low-flying areas.

Mr. Freeman: All these aspects of the managements of low flying in the United Kingdom are kept under continuous review.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of reducing the size of the Manston/Lydd low-flying avoidance area in 1984-85.

Mr. Freeman: The Manston-Lydd low-flying avoidance area was reduced in size, in February 1985, to alleviate local air space congestion, spread activity more widely and evenly, and dilute the noise disturbance for those living in surrounding areas.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of deleting the low-flying avoidance areas over Northern Ireland, the Isle of Wight, the Isles of Scilly, Orkney and Shetland in 1986.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1979 when the new United Kingdom low-flying system was introduced, of the areas specified in the question, only the Isle of Wight has been an avoidance area. Low-flying aircraft did not however generally fly over the Isles of Orkney and Shetland or the Isles of Scilly before these areas were surveyed by the MOD (in 1986 and 1987 respectively) to identify potential flight safety hazards and more sensitive locations. Fixed-wing low-flying training is not currently carried out in Northern Ireland because of the high level of operational flying there.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations took place between his Department and officials of the local authorities concerned prior to the deletion of the low-flying avoidance areas over Northern Ireland, the Isle of Wight, the Isles of Scilly, Orkney and Shetland in 1986.

Mr. Freeman: None.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there are any plans to eliminate or reduce the size of any existing low-flying avoidance areas in the United Kingdom military low-flying system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: As part of the continuous monitoring of the UKLFS, a programme of reviews of avoidance areas is carried out and changes made when necessary, reflecting changes on the ground, and aimed at spreading low flying more evenly and enhancing flight safety, while at the same time reducing, where possible, the disturbance to those on the ground.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) on what date the normal maximum speed for military flying at less than 500 ft over the United Kingdom was increased from 420 knots to 450 knots; when this change was announced; and what consultations took place with local authorities, farming interests and environmental bodies prior to implementation of the increased speed limit;

(2) in which areas of the United Kingdom, and under what circumstances, low-flying military aircraft are permitted to fly at speeds up to 540 knots;

(3) in which areas of the United Kingdom, and under what circumstances, low-flying military aircraft are permitted to fly at speeds up to 480 knots.

Mr. Freeman: The normal maximum cruising speed in the United Kingdom low-flying system for all military aircraft is 450 knots, except for F-111s which are allowed, for aircraft handling reasons, to fly at speeds of up to 480 knots. Aircraft may however increase their speed above these levels to a maximum of 550 knots (overland) in special circumstances such as simulated attack or interception manoeuvres. Prior to the introduction of the revised United Kingdom low-flying system in 1979 the usual aircraft speeds were between 240 and 420 knots, with some aircraft being allowed to fly up to 550 knots. During the introduction of the revised system, changes in height and speed limits were implemented gradually, and the current speed restrictions came into force on 1 March 1980. There were no consultations with local authorities, farming interests and environmental bodies on this matter, nor was such consultation considered necessary.

Harrier

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his United States counterpart concerning the Harrier GRS/AV 8 B.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 10 November at column 148.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the order will be placed for the second batch of Harrier GR5s.

Mr. Sainsbury: Initial orders for long-dated materials and component manufacture, have already been placed. The balance of the order will be placed early next year.

Tucano

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the Short Tucano has received its release for service; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many Tucano aircraft are currently undergoing evaluation tests at RAE Boscombe Down.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Short's Tucano has not yet received its release for service. One aircraft has been accepted by MOD and will start its release to service trials at A and AEE Boscombe Down shortly; a second aircraft is expected today.

Mr. Rogers To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, how many Short Tucano aircraft have been delivered to the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Short Tucano aircraft are presently in Royal Air Force service training pilots.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Air-sea Rescue

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to cut the air sea rescue flight at Royal Air Force Brawdy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The provision of military helicopters for search and rescue is currently under consideration by my Department in conjunction with the Department of Transport. No fnal decisions have been made. Any significant change to the current arrangements will be announced in the House at the appropriate time.

Ejector Seat

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Royal Air Force aircraft will be fitted with the mark 12 ejector seat.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Harrier GR5.

Identification Friend or Foe System

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which NATO nations have signed the NATO memorandum of understanding on an identification friend or foe system.

Mr. Sainsbury: Ten nations (Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Italy, Spain, Turkey, the United Kingdom and the United States) have signed an MOU providing for the exchange of information, and the identification of opportunities for co-operation, on a new NATO identification system; Greece has applied to subscribe to this MOU also.

A second MOU is aimed specifically at promoting co-operation in the development and production of such a system. This has been signed by Germany, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States, and we hope that France will also sign shortly.

Lynx (Radar)

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place orders for the new all-round radar for the Royal Naval Lynx helicopter as part of the improvement programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: Subject to the availability of resources, I hope to be able to make a decision on an improved radar for the Royal Naval Lynx Mk 8 helicopter early in the new year.

Residential Accommodation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what residential accommodation is provided for departmental Ministers and civil servants and charged to public funds; and what has been the total cost in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury: This information is not readily available and can be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Live Ammunition

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of civilians and service men injured or killed by live ammunition in the Dartmoor national park in the last 30 years.

Mr. Freeman: One boy was killed and two members of the public have been injured by live ammunition on service ranges in the national park over the last 30 years. We do not hold centrally records for any service men in the same categories.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of civilian deaths and injuries resulting from the use of live ammunition in military exercises or service ranges in the last 30 years.

Mr. Freeman: This historical information is not held centrally. From 1 January 1988 such information will be collected centrally.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any live ammunition or other military ordnance has been recovered by civilians from the Okehampton range.

Mr. Freeman: The recovery of military objects from live-firing ranges is strictly against the byelaws, and signs warn the public accordingly. A recent accident at the Okehampton range was an instance where the byelaws had been contravened, but we have no means of knowing whether on other occasions military ordnance might have been salvaged in similar circumstances.

Submarines

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of submariners are volunteers.

Mr. Freeman: Currently around half the ratings entering the submarine service are volunteers, and 80 per cent. of all those serving are volunteers for further service. Virtually all officers are volunteers.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present manpower strength of the submarine service.

Mr. Freeman: The manpower strength of the submarine service at 30 September 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, was 8,341.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the W class SSN will have a vertical launch Harpoon capability.

Mr. Sainsbury: We are as yet in a very early stage of defining the staff requirement for the follow-on class SSN, and it is too early to say what capabilities the class will have.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the first four Upholder class submarines will enter Royal Navy service.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not the practice to reveal acceptance dates in advance.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of updating the sonar on Oberon class submarines.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not the practice to publicise project costs which are commercially confidential between the Ministry of Defence and individual contractors.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what recent discussions he has had with his Canadian counterpart concerning the sale of nuclear submarines;

(2) what recent discussions he has had with his United States counterpart concerning the sale of nuclear submarines to Canada.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend last met his United States counterpart earlier this month, when a wide range of issues, including the proposed Canadian procurement of nuclear-powered submarines was discussed.

Exercise Purple Warrior

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of fuel for Exercise Purple Warrior.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr.

Wilson) on 6 November, at column 934. Financial provision for fuel for exercises such as Purple Warrior is included in overall allocations and is not separately identified.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether civilians taking part in Exercise Purple Warrior are entitled to compensation in the event of injury or death;

(2) how many Warsaw pact representatives have been officially observing Exercise Purple Warrior;

(3) how many civilian ships are taking part in Exercise Purple Warrior; and what types of vessel they are;

(4) how many civilians are being used as refugees in Exercise Purple Warrior;

(5) whether the armaments on all the Royal Navy vessels taking part in Exercise Purple Warrior were fully operational at the start of the exercise;

(6) whether the computer-assisted communication equipment on all the Royal Navy vessels taking part in Exercise Purple Warrior was fully operational at the start of the exercise;

(7) whether the computer-assisted command control and warning system on board all the Royal Navy vessels taking part in Exercise Purple Warrior was operational at the start of the exercise;

(8) which type 42 destroyers are taking part in Exercise Purple Warrior;

(9) which batch III type frigates are taking part in Exercise Purple Warrior;

(10) if he will list the numbers and types of Army vehicles taking part in Exercise Purple Warrior;

(11) if he will list the Army and Royal Marine units taking part in Exercise Purple Warrior;

(12) if he will list the numbers and types of Royal Air Force aircraft taking part in Exercise Purple Warrior;

(13) if he will list the numbers and types of Royal Navy aircraft taking part in Exercise Purple Warrior;

(14) which Royal Navy and Royal Fleet Auxiliary vessels are taking part in Exercise Purple Warrior;

(15) what is the cost of chartering West German and Danish vessels for Exercise Purple Warrior;

(16) if he will make a statement on the outcome of Exercise Purple Warrior.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Exercise Purple Warrior is still in progress and it would be premature at this stage to make a statement on its outcome, although the initial indications are that it will prove to have been most successful. Nevertheless I can say now that the exercise was host for the first time on UK territory to observers under the terms of the Stockholm document. A total of 34 observers from 20 countries attended, 12 of whom were from Warsaw Pact countries. We welcomed this opportunity to demonstrate our commitment to the agreement and its role in lessening suspicion and mistrust, and hence improving security, in Europe.

The following Royal Navy and Royal Fleet Auxiliary vessels are taking part in the exercise:

HMS Ark Royal
HMS Illustrious
HMS Intrepid
HMS Nottingham
HMS Manchester
HMS Active
HMS Minerva
HMS Ariadne
HMS Juno
HMS Danae
HMS Otus
HMS Onyx
HMS Odin
HMS Leeds Castle
HMS Smiter
HMS Attacker
HMS Kellington
HMS Bronington
RFA Olwen
RFA Fort Austin
RFA Resource
RFA Olmeda
RFA Sir Tristram
RFA Sir Percivale
RFA Sir Bedivere
RFA Sir Geraint
RFA Sir Lancelot

Of these, HMS Manchester and HMS Nottingham are type 42 destroyers. No batch III type 22 frigates are yet in service with the Royal Navy. It is not our practice to comment upon the operational status of Royal Navy vessels.

Eleven civilian ships are taking part in the exercise, of which five are passenger ro-ros, four are vehicle ro-ros and two are semi-submersible ships. The West German and Danish vessels among this number were hired as part of a charter package. The cost of chartering these particular vessels is therefore not separately identified.

The following Royal Navy aircraft are taking part in the exercise:

12 Sea Harrier
29 Sea King
6 Lynx
8 Gazelle

The following RAF aircraft are taking part in the exercise:

4 Phantom
2 Nimrod
6 Harrier
6 Jaguar
6 Buccaneer
2 Canberra
Up to 15 C130 (Hercules)
4 Chinook
2 VC10
3 Puma

The majority of Royal Marine and Army units taking part in the exercise form 3 Commando brigade and 5 Airborne brigade. Other forces involved, participating mainly in a support role, include elements of the following:

Royal Horse Artillery
Corps of Royal Engineers
Royal Corps of Signals
1 Infantry Brigade
Army Air Corps
Royal Corps of Transport
Royal Army Medical Corps
Royal Army Ordnance Corps
Corps of Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers
Corps of Royal Military Police
Royal Pioneer Corps

Approximately 1,890 Army vehicles are taking part in the exercise. Vehicles involved include 8 and 4-ton lorries, Land Rovers, Scorpion reconnaissance vehicles and engineer plant.

Ninety-six civilians volunteered and took part in evacuation operations earlier in the exercise. There are no plans for any other civilians to take part during the remainder of the exercise. I am not aware that any of these civilians have suffered injury or death as a result of their participation, but any claims arising from the exercise would be dealt with by my Department on the basis of any legal liability on the part of my Department.

Sea Dart

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Sea Dart missiles have failed in test firings since 1982.

Mr. Sainsbury: For reasons of security, it is not our practice to disclose details of firing results. However, there is no cause for concern about Sea Dart missile performance during practice firings as this is meeting the naval staff requirement.

Amphibious Vessels

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish the results of his feasibility studies on amphibious vessels.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 10 November to the hon. Member for Knowsley, North (Mr. Howarth).

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy officers are trained to repair the computer-assisted communications system for amphibious transport docks and aircraft carriers.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There are several different types of equipment in our amphibious ships and aircraft carriers which could be said to fall within the terms of the hon. Gentleman's question, and the training requirements to ensure their maintenance support therefore vary. The hon. Gentleman may, however, have in mind a particular United States computer system installed in HMS Ark Royal and HMS Intrepid for trials and for which, therefore, normal maintenance support arrangements are not appropriate.

Illustrious

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when HMS Illustrious will next undergo refit; and when that refit will be complete.

Mr. Sainsbury: HMS Illustrious' next refit is scheduled to start as part of the core programme at Devonport dockyard in 1991 and to finish in 1993. The plans for refitting Royal Naval vessels are, however, subject to continuous review.

Aircraft Carriers

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which aircraft carriers are currently on operational deployment.

Mr. Ian Stewart: HMS Ark Royal and HMS Illustrious are currently taking part in Exercise Purple Warrior.

NFR 90

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) why he has not ratified the memorandum of understanding on the NFR 90 warship;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effects on the British warship electronics industry of the non-ratification of the memorandum of understanding on NFR 90;

(3) whether his Department intends to ratify the memorandum of understanding on NFR 90 at a later stage.

Mr. Sainsbury: The question of British Government participation in the project definition phase of the NFR 90 project is being considered by my right hon. Friend, whose eventual decision will take full account of the implications for British industry together with all other relevant factors, including the need to harmonise the procurement of the vessel with that of her principal anti-air warfare armament.

MOD Police

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether agreement has been reached between the Ministry of Defence police and 1964 Act police forces, on on-base and off-base contingency plans in terms of the guidelines established under the Ministry of Defence Police Act 1987.

Mr. Sainsbury: Arrangements for contingency planning are not as such affected by either the Ministry of Defence Police Act 1987 or the guidelines recently issued and to which I referred in my recent answer to the hon. Member on 29 October 1987 at columns 407-8. No new agreement is therefore required.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what regulations he has made regarding the membership and procedures of the Ministry of Defence police committee;

(2) if he will list the membership of the Ministry of Defence police committee to whom the chief constable of the Ministry of Defence police is accountable; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The MOD police committee, whose terms of reference are to determine policy for the roles, management and administration of the Ministry of Defence police, including the identification of the overall money, manpower and equipment resources necessary to achieve that policy efficiently; and to advise the Secretary of State on these and such other matters as he may from time to time require, will be regulated by a statutory instrument which my right hon. Friend will place before the House shortly. The membership of the committee is as follows:

The Second Permanent Under Secretary of State—Chairman
The Vice Chief of the Defence Staff—Vice Chairman
The Deputy Under Secretary of State (Civilian Management)
The Assistant Chief of the Naval Staff
The Assistant Chief of the General Staff
The Commandant General RAF Regiment and Director General of Security (RAF)
The Assistant Under Secretary of State R & D Establishments and Research Administration
The Assistant Under Secretary of State (Security and Common Services)
Sir Lawrence Byford—outside member nominated by Home Office
Mr. R. S. Sim—outside member nominated by Scottish Office

In addition the Chief Constable and Deputy Chief Constable of the MOD Police, the Head of the MOD Police Secretariat and the Secretary to the Committee sit in attendance.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has completed his review of the case for a special constables scheme in the Ministry of Defence police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department's review of the requirement for an MOD police special constable scheme has been completed and it has been concluded that it would not be appropriate to proceed further at present.

Tanks (West Germany)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to resolve disturbance caused to those living near the Detmold tank depot near Paderborn in West Germany by groups of tanks driving to a practice field; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: British and German tanks share the Detmold depot. We make every effort to minimise the nearest disturbances when our tanks are moved, and we have recently stopped tank movements late at night or early in the morning. We inform the local village when tank movement is to take place; the local police and stadt authorities have agreed that there is no alternative route.

Departmental Manpower

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce his Department's response to the report of the National Audit Office on the use of manpower in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The NAO is conducting an equiry into the use of manpower by MOD; but its report has not yet been published. It is the normal practice for NAO reports to be considered by the Public Accounts Committee which takes evidence from the Department concerned.

Projects (Scotland)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total amount spent on defence construction, land and works services projects in Scotland in each financial year since 1978-79.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

The information can be provided only from 1984-85. Expenditure by the Property Services Agency on MOD's behalf, on new works, modernisation and maintenance, is as follows:

Year	£ million
1984-85	109·45
1985-86	111·92
1986-87	201·73
1987-88	[1]199·12

[1] Forecast

The Ministry of Defence also incur some works expenditure direct but it is not more than about £2 million per annum. Expenditure by MOD direct on the purchase and rental of lands and buildings is as follows:

Year	£ million
1984-85	2·67
1985-86	3·07
1986-87	3·87
1987-88	—[1]

[1] No figures available.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the total amount spent on defence construction, land and works services projects in Scotland in each financial year since 1978-79 was accounted for by contract awards to companies based or registered in Scotland.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Contracts (Scotland)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total value of contract awards to Scottish-based companies for military construction work in each financial year since 1978–79.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Universities (Contract Funding)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what effect contract funding of universities will have on the quality of education for students.

Mr. Jackson: The implementation of contract-based funding arrangments is only one of the range of policies described in the White Paper "Higher Education: Meeting the Challenge" (Cm. 114) for improving cost effectiveness and quality in higher education.

Durham University

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the reduction in real terms of the grant to Durham university since 1979.

Mr. Jackson: Between the academic years 1979-80 and 1986-87, the total recurrent grant paid to Durham university on the advice of the University Grants Committee increased by 20·6 per cent. in real terms as measured by the GDP deflator.

Higher Education

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the percentage increase since 1979 in real terms, in expenditure on higher education, not including student support, and if he will make it his policy to restore expenditure to 1981 levels.

Mr. Jackson: Planned provision for public expenditure on higher education, excluding provision for student maintenance, in the United Kingdom is 3 per cent. higher in real terms in 1987-88 than the corresponding outturn in 1979-80. Estimated outturn figures for 1987-88 are not yet available. As a result of the increases in funding announced by my right hon. Friend on 3 November, recurrent grant to the universities in the financial year 1988-89 is planned to be 8 per cent. higher in cash terms than in 1987-88 and provision for the polytechnics and colleges under local authority control is planned to be 9 per cent. higher than in 1987-88.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give, expressed in constant prices with 1983 as the base, the value of the unit of resource for each student place in higher education for 1983 and each succeeding year.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is set out in the table for the years 1983-84 to 1986-87 on the basis of UGC grant plus total fee income per full-time equivalent (fte) student in universities in Great Britain and the institutional expenditure per full-time equivalent student in establishments providing higher education maintained by local education authorities in England. The figures have been repriced to 1983-84 real terms using the gross domestic product (market prices) deflator.

Financial year	Great Britain Universities £ (1983-84 prices)	Local authorities higher education England £ (1983-84 prices)
1983-84	4,845	2,985
1984-85	4,825	2,885
1985-86	4,675	2,805
1986-87	4,620	2,825

Teaching Standards and Efficiency

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will define the performance indicators which it is proposed will be used to gauge teaching standards and efficiency.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is too early to say what the outcome of the pilot work on teacher appraisal will be. This pilot work is being undertaken in six local education authorities under the direction of the National Steering Group. The intended outcome of the pilot work is a tested set of documents and procedures which all education authorities would be able to adopt.

Pupil-Teacher Ratio (Trafford)

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current pupil-to-teacher ratio for primary and secondary schools in Trafford; and what was the ratio for the four previous years.

Mr. Dunn: The pupil-teacher ratios in maintained primary and secondary schools in Trafford in January 1987 and the four previous years are:

January each year	Primary	Secondary
1983	23·0	16·5
1984	22·7	16·6
1985	22·9	16·4
1986	22·9	16·3
1987	22·4	15·5

Assisted Places Scheme

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to review the assisted places scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Government plan to expand the assisted places scheme to 35,000 places. The basic principles underlying the scheme will remain unchanged.

Technological Education

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average number of microcomputers in secondary schools; and if he is satisfied with the current standard of technological education at secondary level.

Mrs. Rumbold: The average number of microcomputers in maintained secondary schools in England is 14. The quality and breadth of technological education has improved considerably in recent years. The Government have proposed that technology should be one of the foundation subjects in the national curriculum. Subject to acceptance of these proposals, we expect to see further improvements in the standard of technological education at secondary level.

GCSE (Trafford)

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what allocation has been made to Trafford for the implementation of the general certificate of secondary education in the previous and in the current academic year.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government have provided earmarked support for the following GCSE related expenditure by the Trafford education authority. These allocations are made on a financial year basis.

	Financial year
	1986-87 £	1987-88 £
Education Support Grant for GCSE books and equipment	67,700	48,000
Specific grant support for GCSE-related in-service training	35,080	73,000
Manpower Services Commission support for scientific and technological equipment	25,100	—

In addition to earmarked support, the Government's expenditure plans for the financial year 1987-88 allow for some £90 million expenditure by local authorities overall on GCSE non-teaching costs, supported through rate support grant which is not earmarked for individual services. It is for the Trafford education authority to target the available resources as it sees fit.

GCSE

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he remains satisfied with the progress made in implementing the general certificate of secondary education; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Evidence from Her Majesty's inspectorate and elsewhere shows that the GCSE is already leading to significant improvements in teaching and learning. However, the Government do not underestimate the continuing commitment required on the part of teachers and others in the education service to realise the full benefits of the GCSE. My right hon. Friend demonstrated the Government's own continuing commitment in the Government's expenditure plans for 1988-89, which allow for some £87 million of local authority expenditure on GCSE non-teaching costs. As in 1987-88, the Government are providing as much as the local authorities say they need. It is for local authorities to ensure that the available resources are targeted on priority needs.

Student Grants

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the annual cost of student grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: In the 1985-86 academic year, the latest year for which information is available, total expenditure on mandatory awards by local education authorities in England and Wales was £700 million. This figure includes £458 million for maintenance and £242 million for fees.

Information

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advertising agents have been appointed by his Department, or by the Central Office of Information on behalf of his Department, to handle campaigns involving the communication of information on subjects for which his Department is responsible to Parliament during the year 1985-86; what was the subject of each campaign; and how much was spent on each campaign.

Mrs. Rumbold: Advertising expenditure by the Department of Education and Science through the Central Office of Information in 1985-86 was as follows:

Agency and campaign	Cost £
Dorland Advertising Ltd.
Prestel directory and magazine	204
Dorland Advertising Ltd.
Recruitment of craft and technology teachers	8,140
Dorland Advertising Ltd.
Education and science programmes for employers	3,120
Doyle Dane Bernbach Ltd.
Teacher recruitment	3,260

WALES

Hotels

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what results there are to date following the introduction of the crown hotel classification scheme in each category; how many hotels have failed to meet the specifications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: According to the Wales tourist board, the information as at 1 November 1987 is as follows:

Category	Number
Listed	121
1 Crown	40
2 Crowns	306
3 Crowns	273
4 Crowns	167
5 Crowns	28
Awaiting visit	29
	964

An additional 54 hotels have failed to meet the criteria for registration.

The Wales tourist board, in conjunction with the English tourist board, proposes consulting the industry about improvements to the scheme, including an element of qualitative assessment. A consultation document outlining a range of options for the future development of the scheme is being prepared for discussion. It is planned that decisions will be taken next spring.

DEFENCE

Regional Policy

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimates have been made by his Department of the economic impact of the location of its establishments on United Kingdom regional policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Whilst we aim to secure a more even spread of defence employment across the regions, decisions on all proposals affecting the future of defence establishments must be made on their own economic and operational merits.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of defence establishments together with the number of staff, including regular service men, employed in each English and Welsh county.

Mr. Sainsbury: Details on the number of defence establishments located in each county are not available centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost and effort. The table shows the number of staff, both civilian (full-time equivalent) and service, employed or deployed in each county at 1 July 1987.

Low Flying

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying sorties of below 250 ft have been conducted by Royal Air Force personnel in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland in each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: Low-flying sorties have only been recorded directly since 1985. Before then, sorties were calculated from records of aircraft movements. The number of movements is given below. A sortie is approximately 2·5 movements.

[1] Up to 30 September 1987.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he plans any future increase in the number of Royal Air Force low-flying sorties in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No. It is our policy to spread low flying training as widely and evenly as possible throughout the United Kingdom low-flying system.

Research Contracts

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United Kingdom universities and other institutions of higher education have now received research contracts under the United States of America strategic defence initiative programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: Seventeen.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many contracts and agreements for research his Department has made with (a) the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth, (b) the University College of North Wales, Bangor, (c) University College, Cardiff, (d) the University of Wales College of Medicine, (e) the University of Wales Institute of Science and Technology, (f) St. David's University College, Lampeter, (g) University College, Swansea and (h) the Polytechnic of Wales, and in each case which subjects the agreements involve.

Mr. Sainsbury: Currently some 33 research agreements and four contracts on a wide range of subjects are placed with Welsh universities and colleges by the Ministry of Defence. It is for the institutions concerned to confirm their individual involvement.

PRIME MINISTER

Visits

Q9. Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to the Dartmoor national park.

Q22. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Ryton in the Rugby and Kenilworth constituency.

Q60. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will pay an official visit to Southall.

Q74. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to pay an official visit to Maidstone.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Lobbying

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to ensure that all official meetings between Government Ministers and representatives of commercial lobbying organisations are recorded and published at regular intervals; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government has any proposals to equalise non-domestic rate bills in England, Wales and Scotland; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Rateable values are presently assessed by the Inland Revenue in England and Wales and by local assessors in Scotland. Despite a similar legislative framework, over the years valuation practice has diverged to some extent. A start has been made on the harmonisation of valuation practice so that business premises will be assessed on a comparable basis throughout Great Britain. It is unlikely, however, that this process will be completed in the 1990 revaluation. Only when the process of harmonisation is subsequently complete will it be appropriate to turn to the question of a uniform non-domestic rate poundage throughout Great Britain.

Engagements

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 17 November.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 17 November.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 17 November.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 17 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with the Prime Minister of Barbados.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Bureaux de change

95. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he proposes to introduce legislation to oblige bureaux de change to conform to a code of conduct and to control commission charges.

Mr. Maude: I propose to introduce regulations under the Consumer Protection Act 1987 which will require banks and bureaux de change to display their exchange rates and any commission charges clearly and prominently. My Department will be consulting interested parties about the details in due course.

Information

Mr. Sheerby: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what advertising agents have been appointed by his Department, or by the Central Office of Information on behalf of his Department, to handle campaigns involving the communication of information on subjects for which his Department is responsible to Parliament during the year 1985-86; what was the subject of each campaign; and how much was spent on each campaign.

Mr. Maude: Information is not readily available for advertising other than that placed through the Central Office of Information or centrally by my Department.

The figures readily available are:

British Telecom

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, when he next meets the Director General of OFTEL, if he will raise with him the case for British Telecom to make available to all subscribers a 24 hour a day, seven days a week, cover for faults which incapacitate any subscriber's telephone.

Mr. Maude: I understand from the director general that a premium fault repair and maintenance service of this kind is already on offer.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any plans to change the criteria for selection of members of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any plans to change the composition of the membership of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Maude: No, but vacancies for new members arise regularly and are filled by reference primarily to the particular expertise and experience which the commission currently requires.

Space Development

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what role he now envisages for United Kingdom industry in the development of space.

Mr. Maude: Although we have decided not to go into expensive new European Space Agency programmes, this does not imply any reduction in our existing effort in space or in our existing contribution to ESA.

We are about to start discussions with industry, aimed at greater private sector involvement in the funding and planning of those aspects of space work with commercial potential. If from those discussions some well-judged projects emerge which are justified, and offer value for money against all the criteria we have to apply to space projects, we will consider backing them.

Capital Radio

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he is taking to stop the interference by a Greek pirate radio station affecting Capital Radio's signal to large areas of London.

Mr. Maude: My Department's radio investigation service has already seized an unmanned radio transmitter operating on a frequency of 95·5MHz and broadcasting in the Greek language. As the station appears to have returned to the air, investigations are continuing.

Regional Aid

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will express the total payments made in each regional area as a percentage of the total payments nationally under the following provisions (a) parts I, II, III of the Industrial Development Act 1982 and parts I(2) and II of the Industry Act 1972, (b) regional development grants (old scheme), (c) regional development grants (new scheme), (d) selective financial assistance under section 7 of the Industrial Development Act 1982, (e) assistance under section 8 of the Industrial Development Act 1982, (f) the small firms loan guarantee scheme, (g) support for advanced manufacturing project planning and implementation, (h) investment support for microelectronics 1, (i) investment support for fibre optics and opto-electronics, (j) support for implementing quality assistance schemes, (k) coal fining scheme, (l) selective investment scheme, (m) innovation-linked investment scheme, (n) investment support for micro-electronics 2 and (o) assistance to local enterprise agencies.

Mr. Maude: The following table shows the percentages requested based on payments figures as shown in the relevant appendices to the annual report of the Industrial Development Act 1982 for the year ended 31 March 1987. An asterisk denotes that the item in question is no longer the responsibility of the Department of Trade and Industry.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many applications have been made for regional selective assistance in 1987 to the most recent practicable date; how many applications were made in 1986; what is the number of staff dealing with applications and what was the number in 1986; what was the average time taken to deal with an application in 1986 and 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 16 November 1987]: The information requested for regional selective assistance project grants in England is as follows:

	1986	[1]1987
Number of applications	1,659	1,337
Number of staff[2]	131	106
Average processing time on applications[3]	8·9	8·8

[1] To end-September.

[2] Approximate man-years on inquiry and appraisal work (1987 figure is an estimate).

[3] Average number of weeks between application (whenever received) and decision (offer, rejection or withdrawal) for decisions taken in the period shown.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many grants of regional selective assistance were awarded each to Shell, ICI, Hanson Industries, Lucas Industries, GKN and Esso, in 1986 and 1987 to the most recent practicable date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 16 November 1987]: I am unable to provide this information. Whilst offers of regional selective assistance are published in British Business in the quarter after the first payment is made, information on the number of such offers made to each of the companies listed and all their subsidiaries could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Moreover, for reasons of commercial confidentiality, information could be provided only about offers which have already been published in British Business. The dates of the 1986 and 1987 issues in which such data have been published are:

Steel Quotas

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the implications for manufacturing companies in the west midlands of the effect of current European Community quotas on steel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 16 November 1987]: My right hon. and learned Friend and I have received a number of representations from steel users, in the west midlands and elsewhere, concerning steel supply difficulties which arise to a large extent from the operation of the European quota system.

My Department has raised these difficulties with the European Commission, which has made some efforts within the Community-wide system to improve the position. None the less, I am aware that more needs to be done. In the forthcoming negotiations on the future European steel regime my right hon. and learned Friend will have as a prime consideration the needs of United Kingdom steel users for adequate supplies.

TRANSPORT

A453

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received the reports and surveys in respect of the improvements to the A453 (a) from the M1 to the Nottingham city boundary, and (b) from the Nottingham city boundary to the central area of the city; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Consulting engineers have recently been appointed to undertake a study of the A453 from the M1 motorway to a point near the Nottingham city boundary. We do not expect to receive their report until early 1989. The Department's regional office is considering the report by consultants on the A453 mainly within the city through Clifton. Further work on the complex traffic analysis and environmental issues is required. It is too early for any firm conclusions to be made. I will make an announcement on the way forward as soon as I can.

Information

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advertising agents have been appointed by his Department, or by the Central Office of Information on behalf of his Department, to handle campaigns involving the communication of information on subjects for which his Department is responsible to Parliament during the year 1985-86; what was the subject of each campaign; and how much was spent on each campaign.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The details are as follows. The expenditure involved in each case was through COI and the figures are provided in full cost terms including VAT where applicable.

Agency and Campaign	Expenditure
	£
Doyle Dane Bernbach Ltd Road Construction	29,400
Doyle Dane Bernbach Ltd Channel Tunnel	93,200
Doyle Dane Bernbach Ltd M1 Motorway Repairs	32,150

Davidson Pearce Ltd Road Safety	3,605,700
Davidson Pearce Ltd Heavy Goods Vehicle	1,670
Dorland Advertising Ltd Vehicle Excise Duty	251,060

London Dial-a-Ride

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what level of funding he plans for London Dial-a-Ride in 1988-89.

Mr. David Mitchell: Following this year's increase of 20 per cent., to £6 million, funding for Dial-a-Ride next year, through London Regional Transport, will be held constant in real terms while the scope for further cost savings and efficiency improvements is pursued.

Hospital Patients and Visitors (Transport)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are taken by London Regional Transport to ensure that satisfactory means of public transport are available to hospital patients and visitors following the implementation of proposed alterations to bus routes serving hospitals.

Mr. David Mitchell: London Regional Transport has a general duty to provide or secure the provision of public passenger transport services for greater London, having due regard to the transport needs for the time being of greater London, and efficiency, economy and safety of operation. The means by which it fulfils that duty in particular cases is a matter for the management of London Regional Transport.

Road Fund Licences

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on evasion rates, by region or by local authority, of road fund licences, measured by percentage of travel by unlicensed vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Best estimates of the percentage of travel by unlicensed vehicles, by region, derived from the survey undertaken in 1984, are set out in the table.

Details of confidence intervals and methodology are contained in "VED Evasion in Great Britain in 1984-85", which is available in the Library.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what means he expects to announce his new objectives for London Regional Transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: I expect to make an announcement to the House in the near future.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Under-age Drinking

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many criminal convictions were made on licensees for under-age drinking for the years since 1974; and if he will express the figures as a percentage of the total number of convictions.

Mr. John Patten: The available information held centrally, which may be incomplete, is given in the following table. Data are not available prior to 1979.

Persons found guilty of offences under section 169(1) of the Licensing Act 1964

England and Wales	Numbers

Alcohol-related Offences

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many breach of the peace convictions were related to alcohol consumption in each of the years from 1980; and if he will express the figures as a percentage of the total number of convictions for each of the years;

(2) if he will list the number of criminal convictions in which alcohol was a contributory factor by region in each of the last three years.

Mr. John Patten: The only information collected centrally on convictions in which alcohol is known to be a contributory factor relates to offences of drunkeness and offences against the intoxicating liquor laws and is given in the table. I understand that a review of the findings of research studies into the influence of alcohol and crime is to be included in a report prepared for the Home Office standing conference on crime prevention by an independent working group on "Alcohol and Young People": this is to be published on 24 November.

Drink-Driving

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many criminal convictions were made for drink/driving offences by region in each of the past three years.

Mr. John Patten: The available information is published annually, for individual police force areas, in "Offences Relating To Motor Vehicles, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables" (table 17 of the issue for 1985), copies of which are in the Library. Figures for 1986 will be published shortly.

Police Truncheons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has of the purchase and use by police officers of non-regulation size truncheons; what action he has taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no such evidence, but I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that an officer of MS15 branch (complaints investigation bureau) has been appointed to investigate allegations contained in recent press reports. Similar inquiries are being made by officers of the Sussex constabulary.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to what steps he is taking to ensure that only regulation size truncheons are used by his force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that uniformed officers produce their truncheons to a supervising officer each time they begin a shift. If any officer has occasion to use or draw his truncheon on duty, he is required to submit it for inspection to the custody officer as soon as practicable.

Licensed Premises

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received seeking a requirement for licensed premises to display their hours of opening; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since 4 August, when our proposals for the reform of the Licensing Act 1964 were published, 83 representations supporting a statutory requirement for licensed premises to display their opening hours have been received. After careful consideration, it has been decided that it would not be appropriate to adopt this proposal. The Licensing Act specifies that premises are not required to open during the permitted hours and the compulsory display of hours of opening would risk restricting a licensee's flexibility to respond to demand. Licensed premises which are subject to a restriction order, requiring them to close during the afternoon, will however be required to display a notice stating the effect of that order.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received seeking to extend pub opening hours on Sundays and bank holidays in established tourist resorts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since the Government's proposals for reform of the licensing law were published, 30 representations have been received from hon. Members, organisations and members of the public seeking to extend permitted hours on Sundays, Good Friday and Christmas day, and mentioning the benefits for tourism. We have no plans to change the licensing hours on these days. On other bank Holidays the general licensing hours for weekdays apply.

Cocaine (West Norwood Cemetery)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrests have not taken place following the discovery of £7·5 million of cocaine in West Norwood cemetery.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the police investigation has so far resulted in two arrests.

Iraqi and Iranian Nationals

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy not to deport Iraqi or Iranian nationals seeking political asylum in the United Kingdom for as long as the Gulf war continues; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No. Applications for asylum from Iraqi and Iranian nationals, as from all foreign nationals, will continue to be assessed on their individual merits.

Television Licences

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has available on evasion rates of television licences, including any information on the numbers of black and white licences purchased instead of colour, by region or by local authority areas.

Mr. Renton: It is estimated that in the United Kingdom as a whole there are about 1·4 million households with television but without a licence, and in addition about 400,000 households with colour television and a monochrome licence. Figures by region or local authority areas could not be obtained without disproportionate effort. In terms of lost revenue this represents an evasion rate of about 9 per cent.

Dogs and Cats (Research)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what controls are currently imposed on the supply of dogs and cats for research purposes;

(2) when the provisions of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 in respect of the supply of cats and dogs will be brought into force.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The controls on the source of commonly used laboratory animals, including cats and dogs, which are contained in the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 will be brought into force in January 1990, as part of a phased programme of implementation of the provisions of the Act.

It has long been the practice of Home Office inspectors to encourage laboratories to obtain supplies of animals only from reputable and legal sources and to take particular care where cats and dogs are involved. This will continue until the new controls come into force.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Research Contracts

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all research contracts or agreements which his Department currently has placed with United Kingdom universities and other institutions of higher education.

Mr. Chris Patten: Details of research contracts awarded by the Overseas Development Administration are published in the Administration's annual reports on research and development. The edition for 1986-87 is currently being prepared and is expected to be published early next year. I shall send the hon. Member a copy of the last report, for 1985-86.

EC Development Council

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Community Development Council on 9 November.

Mr. Chris Patten: I represented the United Kingdom for the first part of the Council: we were later represented by our permanent representative to the European Community. Agreement was reached on a special programme to assist poor, heavily indebted African countries that are taking action to adjust the structure of their economies. It was agreed to allocate £70 million (100 mecu) for this purpose, of which £42 million (60 mecu) is additional to present European development fund resources.

Conclusions were adopted on how best to take account of the environmental factors and on the role of women in development programmes.

The Commission introduced its proposals for guidelines on EC aid to Asia and Latin America in 1988, and for amendments to the regulation governing EC food aid. There was also a discussion of the famine in Ethiopia and the help being given by the EC and the member states; and a report by the Commission on the EC programme to combat the spread of AIDS in developing countries.

Ethiopia

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current food situation in Ethiopia.

Mr. Chris Patten: The people of Ethiopia are once again facing a famine. This follows the partial or complete failure of the rains in many parts of their country, particularly Eritrea and Tigre. The United Nations and the Ethiopian Government forcast that over 1 million tonnes of food aid will be needed in 1988, possibly substantially more. The early warning system has worked reasonably well. Unfortunately, conflict in Eritrea and Tigre has hampered the delivery of relief supplies.

Tigre in particular now faces a critical situation, with stocks of food almost exhausted and people leaving the rural areas and trekking to the towns. It is vital that no obstacles be put in the way of the distribution of relief supplies to those in urgent need. But even if free movement by road were assured, the road transport capacity is insufficient to meet the needs and will have to be supplemented by air operations.

Close donor co-ordination is essential. It is taking place in Addis Ababa and through the World Food Programme in Rome. It is supplemented by EC co-ordination in Brussels.

So far this year the United Kingdom has committed about £20 million for famine relief in Ethiopia; this includes our share of the cost of aid pledged by the European Community. Nationally, we have delivered this year 13,000 tonnes of food aid pledged in 1986. During 1987 we have pledged 37,000 tonnes through British non-governmental organisations, the World Food Programme and the International Committee of the Red Cross. This is being delivered this year and early next. We have also provided £1 million for port and transport equipment, £300,000 towards the running costs of the Save the Children Fund/OXFAM trucking fleet and £500,000 for the United Nations High Commission for Refugees' programme of assistance to returned refugees.

In the light of the urgent needs in Tigre, the office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator has asked donors for contributions to enable them to mount an airlift. I have therefore decided to allocate a further £2 million. This will be used to help meet the cost of transport aircraft chartered by UNDRO to fly food into Tigre. Any balance will be used for other urgent needs in the light of advice provided by our embassy in Addis Ababa.

An FAO crop assessment mission is at present in Ethiopia and I shall consider a further food aid pledge in the light of its conclusions.

I shall keep the House informed of further progress in the famine relief operations and the role being played by Her Majesty's Government.

Passports

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the purpose of the computerised slip inside the back cover of the new common format European passport; what information stored on the strip is envisaged as being interchangeable between member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The machine-readable element of the new British passport in the European Community common format will contain the following information which will be readable by the human eye as well as by optical character recognition equipment:

- (a) a letter identifying the document as a passport;
- (b) the number and date of expiry;
- (c) internationally agreed letters identifying the country of issue and the nationality of the holder;
- (d) the holder's name, date of birth and sex;
- (e) check digits calculated according to a published formula, which enable the machine reader to confirm that it has read the document correctly.

The machine-readable format should help to speed the movement of travellers through immigration controls where passport-reading equipment is installed.

There are already circumstances, for example when there may be doubts about the genuineness of a passport, when the factual information that has been recorded on the document may be passed to the authorities of another country, but we have no plans to use the new method of issue to facilitate the routine exchange of information between member states.

ENVIRONMENT

Hedgerows and Stone Walls

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will introduce legislation to bring the destruction of hedgerows and stone walls under planning control.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government have no plans to make removal of hedgerows and stone walls subject to development control, which would not be an appropriate way of protecting them. Instead, the retention of these features of the landscape is encouraged by making grants available from the Countryside Commission for re-planting or reinstatement, and from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for hedge planting and laying, and for the erection of traditional stone walls.

Information

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advertising agents have been appointed by his Department, or by the Central Office of Information on behalf of his Department, to handle campaigns involving the communication of information on subjects for which his Department is responsible to Parliament during the year 1985-86; what was the subject of each campaign; and how much was spent on each campaign.

Mr. Ridley: The table lists the subjects and costs of campaign for which advertising agents were appointed on behalf of my Department in the financial year 1985-86.

All figures are in full cost terms, including VAT.

Insulation Grant

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Enviroment what plans he has to improve the grants that can be claimed towards the cost of insulating a person's home; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have announced proposals for targeting grants under the homes insulation scheme on those least able to afford the work. A further announcement will be made about the introduction of the new scheme.

Wind Power

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations have been received from wind power developers who wish to generate electrical power for use on the national grid concerning their rating assessments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: We have received a number of representations expressing concern about the effect of rates on wind energy plants. My right hon. Friend hopes to make a statement shortly.

West Cumbria

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what seismic movements have occurred in the area of west Cumbria in the last two months.

Mr. Moynihan: Seismic monitoring equipment operated by the British geological survey has detected one small seismic event in western Cumbria and its offshore area in the last two months. It occurred on 9 November with a magnitude of about 2·5 Richter and was felt on the Isle of Man. During October a number of other tremors were detected by instruments, but these are believed to have been caused by man-made disturbances such as sonic booms. Data processing for the period is not yet complete and further information may become available.

Sheffield (Urban Development Status)

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations have been made to him seeking any form of special urban development status for Sheffield; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: None.

Spectrum Arena

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 10 November, whether the best consideration reasonably obtainable for the Spectrum arena is the same as the market price; if there is a reserve price; whether in his Department's recent consultations with Warrington and Runcorn development corporation concerning the Spectrum arena, any indication was given concerning the classification of the arena as a community-related asset; and if any parties are currently involved in negotiations over the sale of the arena.

Mrs. Roe: The price which can be obtained for the property on the open market is obviously the major factor in deciding whether "the best consideration" has been secured. The Department has not stipulated a reserve price, but we have advised the Development Corporation that we could not countenance a concessionary disposal. I understand that the Spectrum arena is now being marketed as part of a wider package of assets including the Birchwood district centre.

Rating Reform

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply of 9 November, Official Report, column 14, regarding households facing one-off increases under the community charge, he will give a regional breakdown by household size of the affected households.

Mr. Howard: As I explained in my reply of 26 October at column 37-38, no regional breakdown of gainers and losers by household type is available.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply on regional gainers and losers with full replacement of domestic rates by the community charge, on 26 October, Official Report, columns 37-38, what assumptions he used in that reply regarding transitional grant provisions; and what assumptions he used for figure J7 in the Green Paper Cmnd. 9714, "Paying For Local Government."

Mr. Howard: As I told the hon. Member in my reply of 2 November, my reply of 26 October assumed no transitional grant provisions. Figure J7 assumes the existence of the "safety net" arrangements described on page 26 of the Green Paper.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reach a decision on the transitional arrangements for the introduction of the poll tax.

Mr. Ridley: The Government have given careful consideration to the arrangements for introducing the community charge in England in 1990-91, in the light of the many representations that have been made. There are two elements: the introduction of the community charge and abolition of domestic rates within each area; and the phasing in of the impact of changes in grant and non-domestic rates on individual areas (safety netting).

We have decided that the vast majority of areas should introduce the full, safety netted community charge in 1990-91; domestic rates will be abolished in those areas from 31 March 1990. However, in some areas where spending is particularly high, either as a result of ILEA or the borough or both, it would be too disruptive to introduce the new system in full in one go. That was the reason for our initial phasing-in proposals. In the light of comments on these proposals we have now decided to concentrate the phasing-in on these particular areas only. This will give them more time to adjust their spending while ensuring that the benefits of the new system will flow through more quickly elsewhere.

In areas where local authorities have budgeted to spend more than £130 per head above their grant-related expenditure assessments in 1987-88, we propose that the community charge should therefore be introduced only partially in 1990-91 at £100 (assuming unchanged spending). Domestic rates there will be phased out and the full community charge phased in between 1990-91 and 1994-95. On this basis the phasing-in would only apply throughout inner London and in the London borough of Waltham Forest.

The safety net, which we have already announced, will enable the effect on domestic taxpayers of changes in the grant and non domestic rate arrangements to come through gradually. In 1990-91 the safety net will ensure that there is no change in the distribution of grant and non-domestic rates between areas, except that we now propose that contributions will be limited to a maximum of £75 per adult in any area. This will slightly reduce the extent to which areas are able to gain from the safety net. The safety net will be phased out in equal steps between 1991-92 and 1994-95.

I have today placed in the Library tables illustrating the impact of these proposals on each local authority area, on the basis of 1987-88 spending.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be in a position to provide updated data on the effects of his proposed changes to local government finance, taking into account the updated tax benefit model and other data.

Mr. Ridley: I hope to be able to provide this information before the Christmas recess, although this could be delayed if those concerned have to continue to provide statistical information in answer to the parliamentary questions at the present rate.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether occupants of sheltered accommodation will be liable for (a) standard community charge, (b) collective community charge, or (c) will be exempt from community charge by virtue of their being in residential care.

Mr. Ridley: Occupants of sheltered accommodation will almost always be liable for the personal community charge, subject to any rebate to which they may be entitled.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has of the likely incidence of (a) pressure being applied to occupants of tied farm cottages and other accommodation not to enter themselves on the electoral register in order to avoid payment of community charge, (b) 18-year-olds, and rising 18-year-olds being omitted from the electoral register in order to avoid liability for community charge, (c) owners of two homes avoiding being registered for electoral registration at their main residence, but instead registering where they think a lower community charge will apply and (d) difficulties faced by local authorities and electoral registration offices in compiling the new electoral register.

Mr. Ridley: None.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 2 November, Official Report, column 592, how the sufficiency of the resources to be made available to community charge registration officers will be decided.

Mr. Ridley: It will be for the local authority, in the first instance, to decide what level of resources is sufficient to allow the registration officer to carry out his functions.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the percentage change in community charge for a 1 per cent. increase in spending for each authority, taking into account the actual spending figures implicit in his answer of 29 June, Official Report, column 44, and not assuming each authority spends at the level of its assessed need.

Mr. Ridley: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Bar (Mr. Rooker) on 21 October at column 819.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what latest information he has for each local authority on (a) the numbers of adults that will be exempt from payment of the community charge, and (b) the numbers of students who will pay only 20 per cent. of the community charge; and how these figures will affect his community charge estimates published on 29 June.

Mr. Ridley: We estimate that, nationally, around 500,000 people may be exempt from the community charge in England, and that around 750,000 students will pay 20 per cent. of the charge. The exemplifications published on 29 June did not take account of exemptions. But nor did they take account of the product of the standard community charge, which will provide local authorities with additional income.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the National Union of Ratepayers Associations on his proposals to abolish domestic rates; and if he will indicate whether the National Union of Ratepayers Associations supports his schemes for a community charge.

Mr. Ridley: The National Union of Ratepayers Association submitted comments on the proposals contained in "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 8714). Although I do not have the permission of those who submitted comments to publish their views, I placed a summary of the responses we received in the Library on 15 December 1986.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether student nurses will benefit from the dispensation that students will be liable for only 20 per cent. of the community charge payment.

Mr. Ridley: Student nurses will not come within the definition of full-time students for these purposes.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is his intention to introduce comparable property values throughout the United Kingdom for the purposes of applying the national uniform business rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 16 November 1987]: We shall start the process of harmonising valuation practice within Great Britain with the 1990 revalution.

Severe Weather (Expenditure)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what encouragement he has given to local authorities to capitalise expenditure following the storms of 15 and 16 October.

Mr. Ridley: My Department has invited local authorities which expect to incur capital expenditure in the current financial year on making good storm damage to apply for additional capital allocations. Where items are not insured, or are not covered by the special grant aid under the Bellwin rules, authorities should consider the scope for capitalising costs. Whether any particular item of expenditure is properly chargeable to capital account is a matter for the chief financial officer, and the auditor, of the authoriy concerned. But I would draw attention to the schedule 12 to the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 which provides (inter alia) that expenditure on the renewal or replacement of buildings and structures, the repair of maintenance of dwelling houses (when financed by borrowing), and the renewal or replacement of vehicles, vessels, and immovable plant, machinery, and apparatus is prescribed expenditure for the purposes of part VIII of that Act, which is concerned with the capital expenditure of local authorities.

Water

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes that use of water services provided by water authorities will be paid for by a water community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Each water authority is free to decide how it wishes to charge for water services; provided that the charges comply with the principles set out in section 30 of the Water Act 1973. I understand that the water authorities do not at present favour community charge for water.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table, in rank order, for each authority showing (a) its income from non-domestic rates in 1987-88, and (b) its percentage inflow of commuters.

Mr. Ridley: The information requested is as follows:

Notes

Income from non-domestic rates in 1987-88 estimated using shares of gross rateable value between domestic and non-domestic hereditaments and adjusted for rebates and grants.

Net inflow of commuters relates to 1981 Census information expressed as a percentage of the resident population in 1986.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether there are any plans to exclude local authorities' expenditure from the public expenditure White Paper if his proposals to reform local government finance are enacted.

Mr. Ridley: No. As the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" made clear, local authority expenditure affects the overall burden of taxation, the level of public borrowing and the balance between public and private sector output. Restraint of both central and local government expenditure must continue so that taken together they represent a declining share of the national income.

Rates

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any figures that compare rates poundages with rate bills per square metre of floor space occupied by non-domestic ratepayers for each local authority, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I do not have any figures which make this comparison.

Rolling Revaluation

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends ultimately to introduce a system of rolling revaluation to non-domestic property; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: There are no plans to introduce a system of rolling revaluations before 1995 for the reasons set out in the consultation paper "Paying for Local Government: Non-Domestic Rates — Amendments to Rating Legislation in England and Wales" which was published on 31 July.

Business Vote

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to extend the business vote to areas, other than the corporation of the City of London, where there is a high income from non-domestic rates and a high inflow of commuters.

Mr. Ridley: No.

Private Tenants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amendments to the succession rules for existing private tenants which he proposes to make.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 16 November 1987]: The proposed amendments are as follows:

> When an existing tenant with a regulated tenancy dies, a surviving spouse who was living with the tenant at the time of his or her death would be able to succeed to a regulated tenancy.
>
> Where there is no qualifying spouse, a member of the tenant's family who had been living with the tenant for five years before his or her death would be able to succeed to a new-style assured tenancy at a market rent.
>
> A second succession would be possible at the death of the first successor for a member of the original tenant's family who had lived with the first successor for five years before his or her death.

The rights of any tenant who has already succeeded to a regulated tenancy would be unaffected.

Liverpool (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the recent visit by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Mr. Trippier) to Liverpool.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 16 November 1987]: I visited Liverpool on 9 November 1987. In the morning I met officials from Merseyside task force and also had discussions with representatives of the local business community. I then went on to tour the headquarters of the Merseyside Council for Voluntary Services, saw various projects and met the director, and other senior officials. In the afternoon I held a press conference prior to attending the launch of the Nat West Liverpool business week at the Adelphi hotel.

ENERGY

Limestone

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to what approximate tonnage of limestone will be required per annum by the flue gas desulphurisation equipment on a 2,000MW coal-fired power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A 2,000MW coal-fired power station using the limestone-gypsum flue gas desulphurisation process would use about 300,000 tonnes per year when operating at high load factors. This is approximately 0·3 per cent. of total limestone production in this country.

Tidal Barrage Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many plans for tidal barrage schemes with an energy component are presently under consideration.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department is currently funding studies into two tidal barrage proposals on the Severn and Mersey estuaries.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax (Appeals)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidance the Inland Revenue issues about the criteria governing the rights of an income tax payer to have access to an independent appeal if he is dissatisfied with Inland Revenue treatment of his income tax payments.

Mr. Lawson: Notices of assessment to tax and accompanying notes draw taxpayers' attention to their right of appeal, including a hearing before independent appeal commissioners, if they think that a tax assessment is wrong. In many cases the taxpayer may have the choice of appealing either to the general commissioners or to the special commissioners. The right of appeal to appeal commissioners is also covered in the Inland Revenue leaflet IR37 on appeals and in the taxpayer's charter issued jointly by the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise in July 1986. The charter also explains that it is open to an hon. Member to ask the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration to investigate a complaint of maladministration by the Inland Revenue.

Disposable Income

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the latest estimate of per capita disposable income for each region in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to the regional accounts for 1985, published in chapter 10 of "Regional Trends 1987", a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library. Regional accounts for 1986, together with revised estimates for 1985, will be published in the November 1987 issue of "Economic Trends" on 16 December 1987.

Board of Banking Supervision

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, further to his response to the hon. Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn), 5 November, column 853, he will indicate the background and experience of each of the members he has appointed to the Board of Banking Supervision.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to the press notices issued by the Bank of England at the time the independent members of the board were appointed on a non-statutory basis. I am placing a copy of the press releases in the Library.

£2 Note

Mr. Walters: To ask the Chancellor of Exchequer (1) what representations he has received regarding the case of a £2 note;

(2) if during his recent review of English currency, he considered introducing a £2 note; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The idea of introducing a £2 note has been mentioned in one or two of the many responses to the review of the United Kingdom coinage. The Bank of England has also received suggestions from time to time in the past that it should issue a £2 note, but there are no plans to do so.

Wines and Spirits (Duty)

Mr. George Gardiner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the periods permitted for the deferment of payments of excise duties on wines and spirits in each country in the European Community.

Mr. Lilley: A wide variety of rules and procedures governing the payment of duty apply in different EC member states. The table outlines the normal periods of excise duty deferment on wines and spirits according to the latest information available.

National Economic Development Council

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to change the criteria for selection of members of the National Economic Development Council.

Mr. Major [holding answer 16 November 1987]: No.

CIVIL SERVICE

Professionalism

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what improvements have been made in the professionalism of the Civil Service since 1979.

Mr. Luce: In recent years the Civil Service has built on its traditional professionalism and dedication new strengths and skills which are an investment for the future. There is now a greater readiness to adapt efficiently to change, to manage the public service more effectively, and to pursue further improvements in value for money for the taxpayer and the citizen. More details of these changes are included in "Reforms at Work in the Civil Service", a copy of which is in the Libraries of Parliament.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Palestinians (Self-determination)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to further the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We continue to support all efforts to achieve a just and lasting settlement of the Arab-Israel dispute based on two well-established principles: the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination; and the right of all states in the region, including Israel, to secure existence.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Training Scheme

4. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to combine the job training scheme with any other employment initiatives.

Mr. Fowler: As the House knows, I am currently reviewing adult training and I hope to make a statement shortly.

34. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of job training scheme participants have gained full-time employment since joining the scheme.

Mr. Cope: The information is not yet available. The new job training scheme has been operating in most places for less than six months. The Manpower Services Commission has commissioned a follow-up survey of leavers to look into the destination of trainees. The first results will be available in the new year.

42. Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many clients are currently on the job training scheme; and how many have left before completing the course.

Mr. Cope: At 25 September, the latest date for which figures are available some 22,111 formerly unemployed people were participating in the new job training scheme. Figures for those who have left before completing the course are not available. Courses vary in length with the needs of the individual. The Manpower Services Commission has commissioned a follow-up survey of leavers, the first results will be available in the new year.

50. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average cost of training per trainee per week in the job training scheme.

Mr. Cope: The information requested is not available. The new job training scheme provides a varity of training tailored to individual needs. Managing agents receive £13.72 per trainee week to fund training and firms which provide training placements also contribute to the costs.

69. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for how long he anticipates that the job training scheme will continue in its present form.

Mr. Cope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave today to the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle).

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of job training scheme participants have failed to find placement.

Mr. Cope: I regret that the information requested is not available. A survey of trainees is currently being undertaken and initial results are expected in early in 1988. The MSC has commisioned a follow-up survey of leavers. Results are expected early in the new year.

British Tourist Authority

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met the chairman and board of the British Tourist Authority.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment last met the chairman and board of the British Tourist Authority on 15 July. My last meeting with the chairman and the board was on 9 September.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Enployment if he will make a statement on the progress of the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Cope: Since the enterprise allowance scheme began in 1982, almost 290,000 unemployed people have been helped to start their own business. 102,500 places are available this year and 110,000 will be available next year.

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, what effect the enterprise allowance scheme has had on job creation.

Mr. Cope: The enterprise allowance scheme has had a significant effect on job creation. Since the scheme began in 1982, more than 289,000 unemployed people have created new jobs for themselves by becoming self-employed and starting now businesses. In addition, recent survey results indicate that for every 100 EAS businesses still trading three years after start-up, an additional 114 jobs have been created.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have participated in the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Cope: To the end of October, the latest date for which figures are available, 289,936 people have received the enterprise allowance since the scheme began in 1982.

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Cope: Since the enterprise allowance scheme began in 1982, almost 290,000 unemployed people have been helped to start their own business. 102,500 places are available this year and 110,000 will be available next year.

Hotel and Leisure Industries

14. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on improvements in training in the hotel and leisure industries.

Mr. Lee: We are actively encouraging a more co-ordinated approach to training across the spectrum of hotel and leisure industries. Training in the hotel industry is already being developed centrally through the Hotel and Catering training board. I recently chaired — and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State opened—a short conference which discussed relevant training across all sectors of the leisure and tourism industries.

North-West Region

15. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the present level of job vacancies registered at jobcentres in the north-west region.

Mr. Lee: The number of unfilled vacancies at job centres in the north-west region on 2 October 1987, was 28,400

Tourism

16. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will encourage the setting up of more tourism business advice services similar to the one set up by the Small Firms Service and the East Anglia tourist board.

Mr. Lee: I was very pleased to launch the East Anglian initiative last June which I understand is working well. I also applaud the further initiatives undertaken by the small firms service and the Northumbria and Cumbria tourist boards; and I would strongly urge similar collaborative efforts in other regions.

22. Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for employment whether inner city capital refurbishment schemes are being used to rejuvenate areas of tourist interest.

Mr. Lee: Yes. Both the urban programme and the urban development grant scheme have assisted projects to provide facilities and amenities in inner city areas which improve their attractiveness to tourists.

51. Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on how much of the turnover in the United Kingdom tourist industry in 1986 can be accounted for in percentage terms by (a) the accommodation, food and drink sector, (b) the transport and related services sector, (c) the retail distribution sector and (d) the recreation and entertainment sector.

Mr. Lee: The approximate percentages of the turnover in the United Kingdom tourist industry in 1987 accounted for by the four specific sectors are:

	Per cent
Accommodation, food and drink	40
Transport and related services	35
Retail distribution	15
Recreation and entertainment (includes some other miscellaneous services)	10

52. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has regarding the effectiveness of the English tourist board's gold crown hotel classification in achieving higher standards in hotels.

Mr. Lee: The English tourist board's five gold crown awards are made to hotels that have achieved five crown status under the board's crown classification scheme and in addition offer the highest standards of facilities and service. So far about six hotels have received the award and the ETB expects to make more awards in the near future. As the scheme has been in operation for less than a year. Information on its effect in raising standards is not yet available.

68. Mr. Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give a breakdown by region of 1986's job gains in the tourism sector.

Mr. Lee: The regional breakdown requested is not available for tourism-related industries in 1986. However, regional estimates for employees in employment in the hotel and catering industry, which includes canteens and messes, are available and the changes in each region from December 1985 to December 1986, in both absolute and percentage terms, are shown in the table:

	Absolute	Percentage
South East	+ 1,000	—
East Anglia	+ 1,000	+ 4
South West	+ 1,000	+ 1
West Midlands	0	—
East Midlands	+ 4,000	+ 7
Yorks and Humberside	+ 7,000	+ 7
North West	+ 8,000	+ 6
North	+ 1,000	+ 1
Wales	+ 3,000	+ 7
Scotland	− 1,000	− 1
Great Britain	+ 25,000	+ 2

72. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the working population in employment works in the tourist industry.

Mr. Lee: In June 1987, the industries most directly related to tourism accounted for approximately 6 per cent. of all employees in employment. Up-to-date estimates for the number of self-employed in tourism-related industries are not available.

88. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements he intends to make to provide for co-ordination of the work of the British Tourist Authority and the national tourist boards.

Mr. Lee: The chairmen of the Welsh, Scottish and Northern Ireland tourist boards are ex-officio members of the British Tourist Authority under the terms of the Development of Tourism Act 1969. The chairman of the British Tourist Authority also holds the post of chariman of the English tourist board. Ministers with responsibility for tourism matters also meet regularly to discuss items of common interest.

89. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary for State of Employment if he will make a statement on the impact of the tourist industry on employment in greater London.

Mr. Lee: The latest estimate of employees on tourism-related industries in greater London is 187,000 and relates to September 1984. More recent estimates of employment in just the hotel and catering industry, which includes canteens and messes, but excludes libraries, museums, art galleries, sports and other recreational facilities, show that there were 168,000 employees in employment in greater London in June 1987 compared with a figure of 157,000 in September 1984.

90. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his latest estimate for the volume of visitors to the United Kingdom in the current year and the value of their expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: In the first eight months of 1987 there were 11 million visits to the United Kingdom by overseas residents, who spent a total of £4,200 million while in this country. These figures represent an increase in visitor numbers of 14 per cent. over the corresponding period in 1986, and a 17 per cent. increase in their spending. The figures are very encouraging and give rise to the hope that 1987 will be a very good year for the United Kingdom tourism industry.

Skill Shortages

17. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether skill shortages are identified and used to determine training places.

Mr. Nicholls: Reports of skill shortages are one of the factors taken into account in assessing Government support for training provision.

Community Newspapers

18. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what instructions he has given to the Manpower Services Commission with regard to its funding of community newspapers.

Mr. Cope: A number of community newspapers are currently supported under the community programme. No separate instructions have been given to the Manpower Services Commission.

YTS

19. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people have refused a place on YTS, or left the scheme early, since 1983.

Mr. Nicholls: The Manpower Services Commission estimates that there are between 20,000 and 30,000 unemployed 16-year-olds who do not participate in YTS. The number of young people who leave the YTS programme early has averaged around 20,000 in each year since 1984 and the latest surveys show some 69 per cent. of these early leavers were in work, further education or training three months after leaving.

24. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of two-year YTS.

Mr. Nicholls: At the end of September 1987, there were some 428,000 young people receiving high quality training on YTS schemes, the highest figure ever for the programme. The latest information on those young people leaving YTS between April 1986 and May 1987 shows that 74 per cent. were going into work or further education and training.

74. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many youth training schemes there are currently within the travel trades.

Mr. Cope: There are some 2,000 young people in training on YTS in the travel industry under schemes operated by the Association of British Travel Agents and some individual tour operators. This figure is likely to understate the total number of young people training within the travel trades, but information is not held in such a way that all travel trade schemes can be readily identified.

In addition, the MSC estimates that there are some 16,000 contracted YTS places in tourism-related industries (including the hotel and catering industry).

87. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of youth training scheme trainees in Devon who obtained jobs during or at the end of this period on the scheme.

Mr. Cope: The Manpower Services Commission conducts regular follow-up surveys of all YTS leavers. The latest results cover leavers from YTS during the period April 1986 and May 1987 and show that in Devon 71 per cent. were in jobs at the time of the surveys.

Labour Statistics

20. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the numbers of 18 to 25-year-olds in employment.

Mr. Cope: The number of young people aged 18 to 24 years inclusive in employment in June 1987 is provisionally estimated to be 4,359,000.

27. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of unemployed persons in the Leicester travel-to-work area at the latest available date.

Mr. Lee: On 8 October 1987 the number of unemployed claimants in the Leicester travel-to-work areas was 21,488.

28. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the trend of unemployment levels in the Yorkshire and Humberside travel-to-work areas compared with all other travel-to-work areas in the English regions and in particular areas having assisted areas status.

Mr. Lee: The number of unemployed claimants in the Yorkshire and Humberside region has decreased by 44,500, or 14·3 per cent. over the last year. The comparable figures for the rest of England are 375,500, and 16·6 per cent. and for all areas with assisted areas in England are 145,200 and 14 per cent.

29. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are at present unemployed; and how many of these are under 21 years of age.

Mr. Lee: On 8 October 1987, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom was 2,751,384. The numbers aged under 21 years are not separately identified, however those aged under 20 numbered 374,445.

31. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the recent labour market statistics.

Mr. Lee: The latest labour market statistics show a continuing sharp fall in unemployment in all regions. The unemployment rate fell below 10 per cent. in October and the seasonally adjusted total was the lowest for five years and nearly half a million lower than in June 1986. Vacancies have continued to rise and employment was up by 372,000 in the year to September contributing to a total of more than 1·3 million extra jobs since June 1983.

39. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of women in employment.

Mr. Lee: In June 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 10,337,000 females in the employed labour force in Great Britain. This represents an increase of 931,000 since June 1983. The figures are adjusted for the effects of seasonal variation. The employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed and Her Majesty's forces.

40. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the work force was unemployed, on the basis of the last recorded figures, in the Sheffield travel-to-work area.

Mr. Lee: On 8 October 1987 number of unemployed claimants in the Sheffield travel-to-work area expressed as a percentage of employees in employment plus the unemployed was 14·6 per cent.

41. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current rate of male and female unemployment in Birmingham.

Mr. Lee: On 8 October 1987, the number of unemployed claimants in the Birmingham travel-to-work area expressed as a percentage of employees in employment plus the unemployed was 16 per cent. for males and 9·6 per cent. for females.

48. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of men over the age of 50 years who were registered as unemployed in the greater London area on 31 October.

Mr. Lee: On 8 October 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, the number of unemployed male claimants aged 50 years and over, in the greater London area was 47,486.

49. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of people currently unemployed in the Basildon constituency; and what were the figures for the same period in each of the last four years.

Mr. Lee: Following is the available information. The table shows the number of unemployed claimants in the parliamentary constituency of Basildon in October of each year since 1984. The comparison is affected by the change in the comparison of the unemployment statistics in March 1986.

	Number
October 1984	6,972
October 1985	6,492
October 1986	6,159
October 1987	4,877

53. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the present level of job vacancies registered at jobcentres in the south-west region.

Mr. Lee: On 2 October 1987 the number of unfilled vacancies at jobcentres in the south-west region was 22,081.

57. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the numbers of 16 to 18-year-olds in employment.

Mr. Lee: The information is not available in the form requested. It is estimated that in January 1987 1,095,000 people in Great Britain aged 16 to 18 at 31 August the previous year were in employment outside YTS; however, this figure also includes small numbers who were unemployed but not claiming benefit, who were neither seeking work nor claiming benefit, or who were on Government schemes outside YTS, and it excludes some people in full-time education who also had some paid employment. Jobs for young people are also available within YTS. About one in 10 YTS trainees have employed status and also benefit from the quality training YTS provides.

73. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of unfilled vacancies in each of the jobcentres covering the South Hams constituency.

Mr. Lee: The South Hams parliamentary constituency is covered by the Totnes, Dartmouth and Kingsbridge jobcentres, where there were 120, 51 and 83 unfilled vacancies respectively on 2 October 1987.

80. Mr. Andrew McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of people in employment.

Mr. Lee: In June 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 24,359,000 in the employed labour force in Great Britain. This represents an increase of 1,321,000 since June 1983. The figures are adjusted for the effects of seasonal variation. The employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed and Her Majesty's Forces.

86. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current numbers of people employed and what was the level in May 1979.

Mr. Lee: In June 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 24,359,000 in the employed labour force in Great Britain. In June 1979—figures are not available for May — there were 24,767,000. The figures are adjusted for the effects of seasonal variation. The employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed and Her Majesty's forces.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide information showing the number of (a) female part-time employees and (b) male part-time employees in the United Kingdom and if he will provide a break down of this information by age-group and region.

Mr. Lee: The regularly published employees in employment series does not separately identify part-time employees by age and region. The labour force survey provides information on a different basis, but allows such analyses. LFS estimates for the spring of 1986 are shown in the table.

Unit Labour Costs

21. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the trend in unit labour costs from 1979-80 to date in the United Kingdom and its major international competitors.

Mr. Lee: Our unit labour cost increases have fallen back sharply over the period and now match those of our major international competitors.

Community Programme

23. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how the proposed change in the community programme from employee to benefit status will effect women currently prevented from participating in the community programme.

Mr. Lee: It will not.

38. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has considered the premium to be given to unemployed people participating in the community programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment intends to make a statement to the House shortly.

Barnsley

25. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any special proposals for reducing unemployment in the Barnsley, East constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: All my Department's employment, training and enterprise measures are already available in Barnsley. Moreover, unemployment in Barnsley, East has fallen by 816 in the last year.

Child Care Facilities

26. Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether child care facilities and payments will be offered to parents under 18 years who have to take up a YTS place under the provisions in the current Employment and Social Security Bills.

Mr. Cope: No one will be forced to take up a place on YTS under the provisions of the present Employment and Social Security Bills. YTS is and will remain a voluntary scheme. Special arrangements have been made in the Social Security Bill to protect the position of parents under 18 who will remain entitled to income support.

Trade Unions (Accounts)

30. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the timetable for the implementation of his plans to require trades unions to keep their accounting records available for inspection and to give trades union members the right to inspect those records on request accompanied by an accountant.

Mr. Nicholls: The right for a trade union member and his accountant to inspect the accounting records of his union is provided by part I of the Employment Bill. It is intended that part I of the measure will be brought into force by order on a date to be specified.

Job Clubs

32. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many job clubs have been opened in 1987.

Mr. Lee: Seven hundred and seventy eight job clubs have opened between 1 January and 30 October 1987. This brings the total to 1,078.

67. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of job clubs.

Mr. Lee: Job clubs have proved a very effective means of helping long-term unemployed people to find the jobs they want. In the current financial year to the end of September 1987, 47,664 people had passed through job clubs. Of these 25,931 (54·4 per cent.) found work and a further 6,424 (13·5 per cent.) took up a place on the community programme, a training scheme or the enterprise allowance scheme.

79. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the work of the job clubs established so far.

Mr. Lee: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply today to my hon. Friend the Member for the Isle of Wight (Mr. Field).

National Federation of Self Employed and Small Businesses

33. Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met the National Federation of Self Employed.

Mr. Fowler: I have not met the National Federation of Self Employed and Small Businesses, although I shall be doing so in the new year. Ministers of my Department have however, met them from time to time.

East Midlands

35. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the present level of job vacancies registered at job centres in the east midlands.

Mr. Lee: On 2 October 1987 the number of unfilled vacancies at jobcentres in the east midlands region was 14,425.

Discrimination

36. Ms. Abbot: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that black and ethnic minority Manpower Services Commission trainees are not discriminated against either in the type of scheme they are offered or in the treatment meted out to them whilst on training schemes.

Mr. Cope: I have taken steps by issuing orders under section 13(2)(d) of the Race Relations Act 1976 to apply the relevant sections of the Act to trainees seeking access to MSC-sponsored training schemes. To help the commission ensure that its equal opportunities policy is working effectively, the participation of ethnic minority groups in its programmes is monitored closely. The commission also provides courses specifically for ethnic minorities, where they have special needs or where they are under-represented in particular skills or occupations. All contracts require training providers to comply with current race relations legislation.

Hotel Occupancy

43. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the average hotel room occupancy rate in (i) London, (ii) England, (iii) Scotland, (iv) Wales and (v) Northern Ireland for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lee: The table shows the average hotel room occupancy rates for London and England for each year since 1979.

	London per cent.	England per cent.
1979	63	52
1980	59	50
1981	58	46

	London per cent.	England per cent.
1982	62	47
1983	72	54
1984	78	57
1985	78	58
1986	71	56

Tourism issues in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are the responsibility of their respective Secretaries of State.

Local Employer Network Scheme

44. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Manpower Services Commission will extend its funding of the local employer network scheme for a further year.

Mr. Cope: The Manpower Services Commission helps to finance each local employer network for one year only. There are no plans to change that arrangement. The commission is working with the Association of British Chambers of Commerce and the Confederation of British Industry to increase the ability of the networks to finance themselves.

Suffolk

45. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about unemployment in Suffolk.

Mr. Lee: On 8 October 1987, the number of unemployed claimants in the county of Suffolk was 17,737, compared with 22,316 in October 1986.

Self-employed

46. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the increase in the numbers of self-employed since 1983.

Mr. Cope: Between June 1983 and June 1987 the numbers of self-employed in Great Britain increased by an estimated 509,000.

66. Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the increase of self-employment since 1979.

Mr. Cope: Since 1979 the estimated number of self-employed people in the United Kingdom has risen from 1·9 million to 2·7 million, an increase of 43 per cent. This increase is very encouraging as self-employment has an important role to play in the regeneration of the economy and the reduction in unemployment.

West Midlands

47. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the latest figures of unemployment in the west midlands; and what was the comparable figure 12 months ago.

Mr. Lee: On 8 October 1987, the number of unemployed claimants in the west midlands region was 285,567. The corresponding figure for October 1986 was 343,453.

Apprentices

55. Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest estimate of the number of apprentices in the United Kingdom; and what it was 10 years ago.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest available estimate of the number of persons undertaking an apprenticeship in the United Kingdom is 331,000 at spring 1986, based on information from the labour force survey. Further estimates from the labour force survey show that in Great Britain the number of apprentices fell from 367,000 at spring 1979 (the earliest date available) to 318,000 at spring 1986. With the move away from traditional apprentice training in many industries, some long-duration schemes of a type which previously could have involved apprenticeships may now no longer do so.

Budget Hotels

56. Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any proposals to seek to remedy the shortage of capacity in the budget hotel sector.

Mr. Lee: I am not aware of any general shortage of supply of low-priced and medium-priced accommodation in England, but there is a need for more good quality budget hotel capacity, particularly in strategic locations such as London and near to the main motorway network, to cater for future tourist demand. The English tourist board is encouraging private sector investment in new and improved budget hotel capacity. In appropriate cases, the board may also be able to consider section 4 financial assistance to encourage such developments.

Caravan Sites

58. Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many holiday caravan sites have been established since May 1979.

Mr. Lee: According to English tourist board statistics, there are currently some 2,859 caravan sites in England compared with 2,279 at the beginning of 1983, the earliest date for which information is available. However, these figures may not reflect total site capacity and firm conclusions cannot be drawn about the number of new sites established.

Labour Mobility

59. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what new initiatives are being considered to assist the mobility of labour.

Mr. Lee: I have plans to evaluate and develop a number of the ways in which the employment service can help people seeking jobs in other areas. In particular the service is discussing with Oracle Teletext Ltd. an agreement for jobs information to be made available nationally through the televison network.

Day Trips

60. Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many day trips were made to Britain last year; and what was the comparable figure in each of the past six years.

Mr. Lee: The number of day trips to the United Kingdom by overseas residents in 1986 is shown below together with comparable figures for the previous six years. These data exclude visitors from the Republic of Ireland, for whom day-trip figures are not available.

Day-trips to the United Kingdom 1980 to 1986 (excluding visitors from Republic of Ireland)

	Number
1980	700,000
1981	552,000
1982	434,000
1983	533,000
1984	519,000
1985	556,000
1986	674,000

Oil and Oil-related Sector

61. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give his current assessment of employment trends within the oil and oil-related sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: There are no comprehensive data available for the oil and oil-related sector, but following is a table giving the estimated number of employees in employment in extraction of mineral oil and natural gas (class 13 of the 1980 standard industrial classification) in Great Britain from 1979:

June	Employees in employment
1979	19,000
1980	22,000
1981	24,000
1982	27,000
1983	28,000
1984	31,000
1985	31,000
1986	28,000
1987	26,000

The estimates are subject to considerable potential estimation error due to the relatively small number of employees in the sector. Although oil production is expected to decline gradually from now on, offshore gas production is at record levels and is set to continue rising for several years.

Health and Safety Executive (Ministerial Visit)

62. Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the visit by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) to the Health and Safety Executive's headquarters in Bootle on 11 November.

Mr. Nicholls: I was pleased to visit HSE's Bootle headquarters on 11 November. This was a further opportunity to meet more of the organisation's staff and proved most worthwhile.

Tourism and Leisure Developments

63. Mr. Hunter To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the value of capital investment in major tourism and leisure developments in England in the six months to June.

Mr. Lee: The English tourist board estimates that during the six months ending 30 June 1987 some £1,235 million worth of capital investment in tourism and leisure projects was completed or was in progress in England. These figures are based on a survey of projects with a value of over £500,000.

Historic Buildings and Gardens

64. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the number of admissions to historic buildings and gardens in Britain last year and the amount of revenue raised by admission chages.

Mr. Lee: The British tourist authority estimates that in 1986, a total of 67·8 million visits were made to historic buildings and gardens in Britain. Admission charges for these visits are estimated to have produced revenue of £118 million.

Small Businesses

65. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new small businesses were created in 1986-87.

Mr. Cope: In 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, the number of businesses registered for VAT is estimated to have increased by 29,000. This was the net result of 193,000 registrations and 164,000 deregistrations.

76. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his Department's policy of purchasing goods and services from small businesses.

Mr. Cope: The purchasing policy of my Department places special emphasis on the role of small firms in achieving value for money. This policy is set out in guidance and training to all my Department's staff who now have greater discretion to use commercial suppliers since we have signed new customer agreements with the central procurement agencies.

More generally, as Minister responsible for small firms, I am concerned to promote their role in Government purchasing as a whole. Small firms can face particular difficulties when trying to break into these markets, but to overcome this my department is encouraging simplified procedures for Government purchasing and improved information such as the small firms service's booklet "Tendering for Government Contracts".

Maternity Leave

71. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many women for each year from 1981 have been refused the right to return to their job after maternity leave under section 12 of the Employment Act 1980.

Mr. Nicholls: No records are kept of the number of women who have been refused the right to return after maternity absence under the conditions set out in section 12 of the Employment Act 1980.

Sightseeing Tour Operators

75. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he is taking to ensure that high standards are maintained by sightseeing tour operators.

Mr. Lee: The regional tourist boards are continuing to provide training courses to meet their regions needs for blue badge tourist guides. The national tourist boards of England, Scotland and Wales are examining the need to provide enhanced training and qualifications for guides who wish to escort visitors to a wider area. I also understand that the bus and coach industry is developing new training systems to meet its own needs.

Job Creation

77. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has further plans to assist the unemployed to find employment.

Mr. Lee: We shall continue to pursue sound economic policies for steady growth and low inflation which have so far produced more than 1 million new jobs since 1983.

As part of this overall policy, we have developed a wide range of measures to help unemployed people back into employment. These are set out in our "Action for Jobs" booklet. We regularly review these measures to ensure that they provide help appropriate to the needs of unemployed people.

78. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to reduce unemployment in the inner cities.

Mr. Cope: The Department of Employment and the Manpower Services Commission provide a wide range of national programmes which aim to equip individuals with the skills and motivation to compete for available jobs and to stimulate enterprise and the growth of small businesses. The Government have guaranteed that (a) all unemployed 16 and 17-year-olds will receive an offer of a place on YTS (b) all 18 to 25-year-olds unemployed between six and 12 months will receive an offer of a place on the job training scheme, enterprise allowance scheme or in a job club; and (c) all those unemployed over six months will receive a Restart interview every six months. These guarantees provide direct help to unemployed inner city residents and serve to target resources on those areas of greatest need. The expenditure this year of over £240 million in inner city areas by the Department and the Commission, reflects the extent of this effort.

Health and Safety Inspectors

81. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to increase the number of health and safety inspections; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government's allocation of resources for 1988-89 to the Health and Safety Commission, together with some revision of current priorities, will allow the Health and Safety Executive's factory inspectorate to increase the number of inspections above the level planned for 1987-88.

Industrial Injury

82. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many working days were lost in 1985, 1986 and in 1987 to the most recent practicable date because of industrial injury.

Mr. Cope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 24 July 1987 at column 669.

Industrial Relations

83. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service to discuss the general state of industrial relations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: I have no such plans at present although Ministers of this Department meet the chairman from time to time to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Pre-strike Ballots

84. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many pre-strike ballots have been held in accordance with the Trade Union Act 1984.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department is aware of some 320 pre-strike ballots apparently designed to comply with the provisions of the Trade Union Act 1984. There have been other ballots which we do not know about.

Sex Discrimination

85. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he has taken to publicise the right of women working for small employers to claim sex discrimination rights under the Sex Discrimination Act 1986.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department issued a press notice about all the provisions of the Sex Discrimination Act 1986 on 7 November 1986 when the Act received Royal Assent. It has subsequently produced a special leaflet for small employers; this was published on 7 February 1987 when the small firms provisions came into force. This leaflet has been distributed widely to small firms organisations. The CBI, the TUC, the Advisory Committee on Women's Employment and the Women's National Commission. Copies are freely available to both employers and employees from jobcentres, unemployment benefit offices and citizens advice bureaux. Copies of the press notice and the leaflet have been placed in the Library.

Information about the extension of sex discrimination legislation to small employers has also been included in the Home Office's general guide to the Sex Discrimination Act. This, too, is freely available from jobcentres, unemployment benefit offices, and citizens advice bureaux, as well as from the Equal Opportunities Commission which has also issued its own guidance on the 1986 Act.

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the most recent information on the average earnings and earnings distribution of YTS leavers who enter employment; and if he will break down the information by gender and by racial group.

Mr. Cope: The most recent information available from the England and Wales youth cohort study and the equivalent Scottish survey is given in the tables. The figures are broken down by gender; sample sizes are too small to allow a statistically reliable breakdown by ethnic group.

[1] Respondents who reported have been on YTS in October 1984 Spring 1986 or October 1985 and having since left YTS.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the sources of official information that give details of the earnings of employees in different racial groups.

Mr. Lee: Earnings surveys carried out by the Department of Employment do not distinguish employees in different racial groups.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide information showing the numbers of male part-time workers in Great Britain in April and the proportion of these workers whose earnings fell below (a) £3·40 per hour and (b) £3·60 per hour.

Mr. Lee: In March 1987 it was estimated there were 869,000 male part-time employees in Great Britain. The latest information available on the distribution of hourly earnings of part-time employees is from the April 1987 new earnings survey. This indicates that of all part-time adult male employees in the survey sample whose gross earnings were not affected by absence, 76 per cent. earned less than £3·40 per hour and 79 per cent. earned less than £3·60 per hour. However, the new earnings survey sample does not include all part-time employees whose earnings are below the PAYE threshold.

New Earnings Survey

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his best estimate of the proportion of employees not represented in the new earnings survey; if he will estimate the proportions of young employees (a) aged under 21 years and (b) aged under 18 years excluded; and if he will provide details of any estimates of the earnings of these excluded groups.

Mr. Lee: It is estimated that less than one tenth of employees are not represented in the new earnings survey sample. The majority of these are part-time employees with gross earnings below the PAYE threshold which was £45 per week at the time the sample for the 1987 survey was drawn. Information is not available on which to make estimates of the ages or earnings of employees not covered by the survey.

Lost Days (Strikes)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many days were lost through strikes in August; and how this compares with August 1978.

Mr. Lee: It is provisionally estimated that 35,000 working days were lost through industrial disputes in August 1987: this compares with a total of 472,000 days lost in August 1978.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Employment Credit Scheme

93. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider introducing an employment credit scheme which would allow the long-term unemployed to combine their earnings from part-time work with their benefits.

Mr. Scott: I am aware of proposals that have been made for the introduction of an employment credit scheme. Officials in this Department and their colleagues in the Department of Employment are looking very carefully at the implications.

Supplementary Benefit

91. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received in the last three months on the removal of entitlement to supplementary benefit of school leavers.

Mr. Portillo: Since 1 August I have received five letters on this subject. Three were generally in favour of the proposals and the other two expressed concern about various groups that were thought to be special cases.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many elderly or disabled people received a board and lodging allowance within the supplementary benefit scheme in the Wakefield metropolitan district during 1979, 1983 and 1986; and if he will provide details in these years at constant prices of the total cost of these allowances and detail what proportion went to voluntary or private sector establishments.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information requested is not collected by individual local offices and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Unemployment Benefit

92. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what savings he expects to make by introducing the rule that a claimant of unemployment benefit must have a minimum of two years consecutive employment.

Mr. Scott: Clause 5 of the Social Security Bill does not require that a claimant for unemployment benefit must have a minimum of two years consecutive employment. It requires that a person will have to satisfy the contribution condition of having an earnings factor of 50 times the lower earnings level from contributions paid or credited in the last two tax years before the start of the benefit year instead of the last one year as now, and that in one of those years the earnings factor from contributions actually paid must be not less than 25 times the lower earnings limit. The estimated savings arising from this measure are about £7 [illegible] million in a full year (as shown in the explanatory and financial memorandum of the Bill).

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals his Department has to commission studies of the effects of Ampligen in the treatment of AIDS in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Newton: The Department does not directly commission studies of novel compounds of possible value in the treatment of AIDS. However, the Medical Research Council has established a committee to consider all promising therapies, including Ampligen, and this committee will commission and co-ordinate studies where appropriate.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the number of United Kingdom health care workers who have become HIV positive as a result of blood splashes from patients.

Mr. Newton: No reports have been received by the communicable disease surveillance centre of any United Kingdom health care worker becoming HIV positive as a result of blood splashes from patients.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to forward projections of AIDS infections in other countries.

Mr. Newton: We have had discussions with a number of countries which are looking into the question of forward projections of AIDS cases and HIV infection. They all accept that it is extremely difficult to make a prediction with any accuracy. Based on numbers of AIDS cases reported to them, and estimates of HIV infection, the World Health Organisation has made a broad projection that in the next five years between half a million and 3 million deaths from AIDS can be expected throughout the world, with perhaps 50 million to 100 million persons infected with the virus.

Abortions

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average cost to the National Health Service of an abortion performed at 18 weeks or over.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton), on 26 October, at column 178.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the bands of fees including initial consultations payable by patients in private clinics licensed by his Department in 1986 for abortions carried out at (a) under nine weeks, (b) nine to 12 weeks, (c) 13 to 17 weeks and (d) 18 weeks and over.

Mr. Newton: The Department approves the general level of fees in the case of pregnancy advice bureaux, and nursing homes with more than six beds approved for use for abortion cases or with more than 25 per cent. of their total beds so approved. This information on fees is provided to the Department in confidence. The level of fees reflects a variety of factors of which gestational age, in so far as it affects the type and complexity of the operation, may be one; other factors include length of stay in the nursing home and the type of accommodation provided.

Social Security Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give (i) the total number of social security appeal tribunals held (a) nationally and (b) in Newcastle upon Tyne in each month in the 12 months ended 31 October and (ii) the average length of time from the date of the claim which gave rise to the appeal and the date of the hearing.

Mr. Portillo: National administrative statistics of social security appeal tribunals are not disaggregated for localities smaller than a social security region, and are produced only on a quarterly basis.

The figures in the table relate to the four quarters to 31 March 1987, the latest period for which statistics are available.

Statistics are not kept on the length of time between the original claim or decision appealed against and subsequent hearing, but only on the time between the lodgement of an appeal and hearing.

The number of social security appeals heard and average time between lodgement of appeal and hearing (weeks)

	Quarter ending
	30 June 1986	30 September 1986	31 December 1986	31 March 1987
North Eastern region (including Newcastle)
Total number of social security appeals heard	4,788	5,048	5,185	6,408
Average time between lodgement and hearing (weeks)	14·2	15·7	13·7	17·1
Great Britain
Total number of social security appeals heard	31,347	30,456	33,145	37,685
Average time between lodgement and hearing (weeks)	16·1	16·1	15·4	18·2

Kidney Transplants

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will bring forward proposals to expand the kidney transplant programme.

Mrs. Currie: The limiting factor in the expansion of kidney transplantation is not a shortage of facilities, but the availability of organs. We are constantly seeking to encourage organ donation through the donor card scheme and by supporting local initiatives. We are currently considering what action we should ask health authorities to take following a report on the supply of organs for transplantation, which was prepared at our request by the medical royal colleges.

Data Network

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department is reviewing its commitment to the Government data network; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Department is continuing to work with other Government Departments and the three potential contractors to define the specification and contractual conditions for the Government data network project. Decisions about whether to proceed with the project depend on satisfactory resolution of these issues and on the prices eventually tendered by the contractors.

Haemophiliacs

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what priority is being given to people with haemophilia and HIV for treatment with new life-saving drugs.

Mr. Newton: The question of which drugs should be prescribed for a particular patient is a matter for the judgment of the individual clinician providing treatment.

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the current number of claimants registered at each individual office of his Department; and if he will express the social fund allocations to each individual local office, announced in the Official Report, 4 November, columns 774-80, as a sum per head for the claimants of each office.

Mr. Scott: I shall place the information in the Library.

Single Payments

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the totals disbursed on essential payments for single items by his Department (a) in Scotland and (b) in the United Kingdom in each year since 1978, at constant prices.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the information requested is not available for 1978. The expenditure on single payments of supplementary benefit for succeeding years is as follows:

Year (ending April)	Scotland Total cost (£ million)	Cost at 1987 prices[1] (£ million)	United Kingdom Total cost (£ million)	Cost at 1987 prices[1] (£ million)
1979-80	10	16	40	64

Hospitals (Correspondence)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what so far unanswered representations his Department has received about problems affecting hospitals in the north-west; when they were received; and when replies may be expected.

Mr. Newton: None, but I have undertaken to write further to the right hon. Member about representations from the South Manchester community health council.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pensioners now receiving housing benefits will lose rights after the change in the social security system in April 1988.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 9 November, at column 93.

Social Fund Commissioner

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has appointed the social fund commissioner.

Mr. Moore: I am pleased to announce that Mrs. Rosalind Mackworth has agreed to serve as social fund commissioner for a period of three years from 1 December 1987. Mrs. Mackworth is the senior partner in a London firm of solicitors.

Income Support

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide, in relation to the personal allowances and premiums contained within the income support scheme which is to be implemented in April 1988, a list of the detailed assumptions concerning claimants' needs which have led him to arrive at the particular amount of each allowance and premium.

Mr. Scott: In arriving at the amounts for the allowances and premiums we have taken into consideration current levels of supplementary benefit, evidence as to the relative circumstances of particular groups, available resources and the commitment to compensate claimants for the average value of the 20 per cent. rates contribution that householders will have to meet.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sewage Disposal

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representation she has received about the dumping of sewage in the Bristol channel adjacent to the beaches of north Devon.

Mr. Gummer: Representations have been received from Lynton and Lynemouth town council, Ilfracombe town council and Combe Martin parish council about the sea disposal of sewage sludge, the residue from sewage treatment, which takes place some 11 miles north of Ilfracombe. Scientific surveillance by my Department suggests that these operations are unlikely to have any significant effect on the quality of the north Devon beaches.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many sewage sludge dump sites there are along the United Kingdom coast.

Mr. Gummer: Fifteen such sites are in regular use and three reserve sites are used occasionally in rough weather.

Surplus Food and Drink

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total volume and value of surplus food and drink in the EEC and the cost of storage.

Mr. MacGregor: The table sets out the quantities and book value of commodities in structural surplus held in public intervention stores in the EC at the end of September:

	Quantity ('000 tonnes)	Value (mecu)
Cereals	12,960	2,597
Sugar	0	0
Olive oil	216	303
Wine alcohol	[1]42	4
Butter[2]	1,037	3,185
SMP[2]	739	1,216
Beef	625	1,753

[1] Million hectolibres.

[2] Situation at 31 August 1987.

Source: EC Commission.

For the commodities listed above, the 1987 EC budget provides for expenditure of 1,245 mecu (£871 million) on the costs of handling and storing stocks in public intervention, including the financing costs of holding the stocks.

Cheese

Mr. Woodcock: To ask the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much cheese production is currently being lost through the non-availability of milk supplies; and if he will review milk quotas in the light of the shortfall.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Although up to September this year some 3 per cent. more milk was used for cheese manufacture in England and Wales than a year earlier, I recognise that there were some difficulties during the seasonal trough this year in meeting the requirements of cheese producers. This is basically a marketing problem, not the result of quotas, and as such it is a matter for the industry. Nevertheless, we have discussed the question with the Milk Marketing Board for England and Wales which is fully aware of the problem and has sought to minimise it. Earlier this year the industry's joint committee agreed changes to the milk supply arrangements, and more recently the price structure has been adjusted with a view to ensure adequate supplies for cheese production.

Poultry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many battery hen factories were visited by his Department's veterinary inspectors in each of the last five years and in 1987 to date; what proportion of all such factories this represents in each year; and how many visits were made in total for each year;

(2) what efforts are made by his Department to monitor compliance with the code of recommendations for the welfare of domestic fowl and battery hens in particular; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My veterinary staff make specific welfare visits to livestock farms, including battery hen units, to check on compliance with the welfare codes. Where it is found that code provisions are not being followed, advice is given on the steps needed to improve conditions. Follow-up visits are made to check that the necessary action has been taken.

The total number of welfare visits in the period in question is as follows. I regret that information on the number of visits to battery hen establishments is not available, but these will have accounted for a significant proportion of the total.

Year	Number of welfare visits
1982	3,987
1983	5,498
1984	5,391
1985	6,064
1986	5,804
[1]1987	3,891

[1] January to September.

Pollution

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the total number of reported pollution incidents from farming for the years 1979-80 through to 1986-87.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 10 November 1987]: The number of water pollution incidents resulting from farm waste reported in England and Wales on a calendar years basis were:

	Number
1979	1,484
1980	1,671
1981	2,367
1982	2,428
1983	2,795
1984	2,828
1985	3,510
1986	3,427

Drainage

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce his revised land drainage and conservation guidance notes on procedures for water authorities, internal drainage boards, the Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commission; and if these notes will provide guidance to drainage authorities on their operations in environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 13 November 1987]: The text of the guidelines has been finalised and we plan to issue them in the form of a booklet in about two months' time. I can confirm that the guidelines will offer specific advice on environmentally sensitive areas.

Marine Pollution

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will define his responsibilities in relation to the marine pollution implications of proposed undersea depositories for nuclear waste storage.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 13 November 1987]: The deposit of substances or articles under the seabed within waters under United Kingdom jurisdiction requires a licence under part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985, either from my Department or from the Scottish, Welsh or Northern Irish Departments as appropriate. Section 8 of the Act sets out the factors which have to be taken into account by the licensing authority in determining whether to issue such licences. I am also jointly responsible, with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, for the authorisation of disposals of radioactive waste from licensed nuclear sites and UKAEA establishments in England under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960.

Radioactivity (Monitoring)

Dr David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library details of (a) the precise location and (b) the geology of each of the sites for the monitoring of radioactivity conducted in Yorkshire during the weeks beginning 2 and 9 November.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 13 November 1987]: I am pleased to inform the hon. Member that the results of monitoring in Yorkshire between 5 and 12 November are being placed in the Library of the House today.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Storm Damage

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to compensate those who suffered severe damage to farmland, business and domestic premises as a result of the harsh weather and flooding on the night of 28 October.

Mr. Viggers: The Government do not compensate private individuals for losses or damages which would normally be covered by insurance, but we have instructed Northern Ireland Departments to react as sympathetically as possible to individual problems. Where employment is at risk, the Industrial Development Board and the local enterprise development unit are prepared to consider, on an individual basis and on their merits, requests for financial assistance from their client companies. Under the supplementary benefit scheme, some £252,000 has been paid to meet exceptional and urgent needs arising from the flooding. In addition, England, Wales and Northern Ireland are to receive help from the EC for disaster relief.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to complete his assessment of flood damage in Northern Ireland due to the exceptional rainfall of 21 October and; if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 2 November 1987]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received a full initial assessment of the flood damage. Government Departments have already been in action to help those affected. Over £250,000 has been paid by DHSS to meet urgent needs; homes have been visited to see where personal help can be provided; special EC funds are to be provided; and British Coal has donated a stockpile of coal.

The initial assessment of flood damage shows that in seven areas of the Province 500 houses, 200 commercial premises, six manufacturing premises and several schools and hospitals were flooded. Some 16,000 poultry, 300 sheep and a few pigs and cattle were reported drowned while some 80 hectares of arable crops and 130 hectares of winter sown crops were flooded. In addition many roads were damaged and in particular four bridges were entirely destroyed, including the bridge at Kilmaddy on the main A4 road between Dungannon and Ballygawley, although a Bailey bridge to replace this was erected on Sunday 25 October.

The emergency services and the security forces both reacted excellently in mitigating the effects of the flooding at the time.

Local Income Tax

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what would be the estimated charge, on the basis of current expenditure (a) per household and (b) per capita for each district council in Northern Ireland if a system of local income tax were to be introduced.

Mr. Stanley: The Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" proposals do not apply to Northern Ireland. In monitoring the development of the proposals in England and Wales, before deciding whether or to what extent they should be applied in Northern Ireland, we have not considered any alternatives to the present GB proposals, such as local income tax. Thus the figures requested are not available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has evaluated the possible risks of pollution to Larne lough, from the proposal to create a rubbish tip at Magheramorne quarry, Larne; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has received an application for planning permission for a waste disposal facility at Magheramorne quarry, together with an application for consent under the Water Act (NI) 1972 for the disposal of leachate from the facility. Careful evaluation has been made of the possible effects of the leachate on the water quality of Larne lough and on ground water. Decisions will not be taken before the Department carries out its statutory planning consultation with Larne borough council and this will take place shortly.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will offer financial support to councils seeking alternative methods of waste disposal; and if he will conduct a feasibility study into recycling of domestic refuse.

Mr. Needham: There is much current research about methods of waste disposal and this is monitored on a regular basis by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. To date, this research has not indicated a method which, given the relatively small scale of waste in Northern Ireland, would be a realistic alternative to landfill. However, the Department intends to carry out a review of refuse disposal policy in Northern Ireland. Pending such a review, it would not be appropriate to offer financial support to councils seeking alternative methods of waste disposal.

Terrorism

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the persons regarded as supergrasses who have given information to the police which led to cases being prepared by the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland in the last 10 years; and if he will indicate in each case the terrorist organisation to whom such supergrasses belonged.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 6 November 1987]: The following cases have come to trial in the last 10 years in which a converted terrorist gave evidence against his former accomplices:

Black (Provisional IRA)
Bennett (Ulster Volunteer Force)
McGrady (Provisional IRA)
Grimley (Irish National Liberation Army)
Morgan (Provisional IRA)
Quigley (Provisional IRA)
Gilmour (Provisional IRA and Irish National Liberation Army)
Crockard (Ulster Volunteer Force)
Allen (Ulster Volunteer Force)
Kirkpatrick (Irish National Liberation Army)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether it is possible for him to determine the country and factory which manufactures the materials used by terrorists in Northern Ireland for home-made mixes of explosives.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 12 November 1987]: It would not be in the public interest to comment on such matters.

Salmon Farming

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which sea loughs in Northern Ireland meet the required standards for salmon farming.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 12 November 1987]: There are no standards required by the Government for salmon farming in Northern Ireland. Applications for licences for particular sites anywhere in Northern Ireland waters are considered on their merits, taking into account such matters as the characteristics of the proposed site, water quality, the protection of fisheries and public health, the preservation of amenity and conservation of flora and fauna. Standards required for economically successful salmon farming are a matter for the promoters.

Social Fund

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will announce the allocation of the social fund grants and loans budgets for 1988-89 to individual local offices in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 12 November 1987]: I expect to be able to make an announcement shortly.

Supergrass (Definition)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what definition of the term supergrass is used by his Department.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 12 November 1987]: The term "supergrass" or "converted terrorist" is generally taken to apply to those witnesses from terrorist organisations who have decided to give evidence voluntarily in court which leads to a substantial number of their former accomplices being implicated in criminal offences.

Employment Equality

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures he plans to bring forward to promote equality of employment through affirmative action; what is his definition of affirmative action; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 13 November 1987]: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland announced in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn) on 15 July 1987 at columns 490-1, we are preparing legislative and other measures to promote equality of opportunity. Affirmative action was defined in the guide to effective practice, published on 15 September by the Department of Economic Development, as > "those special measures that an employer can take to promote more representative distribution of employment in the workforce in the event of the existing representation of either the Protestant or the Roman Catholic community being less than might reasonably be expected".

The guide, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House, provides examples of the kind of measures envisaged.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Timesharing Exhibition

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Lord Privy Seal who authorised the promotion of an exhibition on timesharing in the precincts of the House; and what fee was charged for the use of a Terrace marquee for the provision of free drinks.

Mr. Wakeham: The promotion was authorised by the Serjeant at Arms in accordance with established criteria and following the procedure agreed by the Services Committee. The fee charged for the use of the Terrace marquee in connection with this exhibition for short periods at lunch-time is £50 per day.

Private Dining Rooms

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Lord Privy Seal if he will make it his policy to publish the names of hon. and right hon. Members who book private Dining Rooms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: No.

SCOTLAND

Labour Statistics

94. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total number of unemployed people by age group for each year since 1979 in (a) Edinburgh and (b) Edinburgh, South constituency.

Mr. Lang: Unemployment statistics for local authority districts and parliamentary constituencies are available only as from June 1983. The number of unemployed claimants by age group in the city of Edinburgh district and Edinburgh, South parliamentary constituency in July of each year from 1983 to 1987 was as shown in the table.

Drunkenness

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many criminal convictions were made for drunkenness for each of the years since 1964.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information available is given in the table.

Year	Persons with a charge proved of drunkenness
1969	10,764
1970	10,729
1971	11,014
1972	11,867
1973	13,739
1974	14,911
1975	15,213
1976	14,306

1979	13,628
1980	13,796
1981	11,329
1982	9,730
1983	8,080
1984	6,618
1985	5,099
1986	3,660

The term "drunkenness" is taken to mean offences of being drunk and incapable, drunk and disorderly, drunk in or attempting to enter a designated sports ground and similar offences.

Information for the years prior to 1969 is not readily available.

Alcohol Expenditure

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what information he has as to the total amount spent on alcohol for each of the years from 1972;

(2) what estimates are available to him as to the average total amount spent on alcohol per person in each of the years from 1972.

Mr. Lang: The table gives estimates, prepared by the Central Statistical Office, which are consistent with the United Kingdom figures for consumers' expenditure on alcoholic drink published in "United Kingdom National Accounts, 1986 edition" (the CSO Blue Book). These estimates are not comparable with those derived from the family expenditure survey.

Consumers' expenditure on alcoholic drink

1983	1,263	245
1984	1,469	285
1985	1,674	326

Information for 1986 will be available shortly.

Blood Products

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when Scotland became self-sufficient in blood products.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Scotland has been virtually self-sufficient in blood products since the end of 1983. From time to time imported blood products are prescribed on clinical grounds.

Forestry

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the proportion of broadleaves of the total planting in Scotland by (a) the Forestry Commission and (b) private sector companies in each year since 1979 and also the current proportion.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information, in the form of percentages of total planting, is set out in the following table:

Year to 31 March	Forestry Commission	Private Sector[1]
1979	0·6	3·2
1980	0·6	2·7
1981	0·6	1·7
1982	0·4	1·3
1983	0·6	1·4
1984	0·5	1·5
1985	0·8	1·6
1986	1·5	2·3
1987	5·2	3·8

[1] The figures in the third column of the table cover the private forestry sector as a whole. It is not possible to provide separate figures for companies.

It is too early to estimate percentages for the current year to 31 March 1988.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the value of (a) planting grants and (b) the nature and value of tax concessions made to the private forestry sector in Caithness and Sutherland in each year from 1979; and if he will also reprice the figures for inflation;

(2) if he will give the value of (a) planting grants and (b) the nature and value of tax concessions made to the private forestry sector in Scotland in each year from 1979; and if he will also reprice the figures for inflation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information on planting grants is set out in the following tables:

Year to 31 March	Planting grants paid (£ thousands)	Planting grants paid (£ thousands revalued to 1987 equivalents)
	Caithness and Sutherland
1980	14	27
1981	34	48
1982	124	160
1983	137	165
1984	470	537
1985	338	369
1986	691	712
1987	808	808
	Scotland
1980	1,481	2,441
1981	1,393	1,953
1982	2,475	3,193
1983	2,669	3,207
1984	3,607	4,126
1985	3,727	4,068
1986	4,476	4,614
1987	4,592	4,592

The value of tax concessions would have depended on the tax status at the time of a large number of individual investors and cannot be assessed with any accuracy.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the recreational and amenity benefits of the incentives provided to private sector forestry in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Most planting by the private sector in Scotland is carried out under the Forestry Commission's forestry grant scheme. All applicants under this scheme must accept its stated objectives, which include the securing of environmental benefits and the provision of such opportunities for recreation, including provision for public access, as may be appropriate. Similar objectives apply to the commission's broadleaved woodland grant scheme.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the sums spent on (a) forest walks and (b) footpaths in each of the three conservancies, north Scotland, mid Scotland and south Scotland, in each year from 1979; and if he will also reprice the figures for inflation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information is available only from 1981-82 onwards, and that in respect of expenditure on visitor facilities generally, of which spending on forest walks and footpaths is a substantial element. The information is set out in the following table:

Year to 31 March	Conservancy (£ thousands)				Conservancy (£ thousands revalued to 1987 equivalents)
	North	[1]East	South	West	North	[1]East	South	West

1984	42	16	16	30	47	18	19	34
1985	49	15	14	35	54	16	16	38

[1] The former East Scotland conservancy was assimilated into the Mid Scotland and North Scotland conservancies in 1985.

Year to 31 March	Conservancy (£ thousands) North	Mid	South	Conservancy (£ thousands revalued to 1987 equivalents) North	Mid	South
1986	45	77	65	51	79	67
1987	52	52	52	52	52	52

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will calculate the impact on the Exchequer of switching planting from the public to the private forestry sector in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not possible to make such a calculation, since information about tax reliefs granted to private individuals in respect of their investments in forestry in Scotland is not available.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amount of forest recreation and amenity subsidy made to the Forestry Commission in Scotland and in the United Kingdom in each year from 1979; and if he will also reprice the figures for inflation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Forestry Commission's statutory responsibilities do not extend to Northern Ireland. The information is otherwise set out in the following table:

Year to 31 March	Scotland (£ thousands)	Great Britain (£ thousands)	Scotland (£ thousands revalued to 1987 equivalents)	Great Britain (£ thousands revalued to 1987 equivalents)
1980	1,070	3,533	1,755	5,794
1981	1,036	3,385	1,440	4,705
1982	1,016	3,492	1,311	4,505
1983	1,143	3,792	1,372	4,550
1984	1,278	4,336	1,457	4,943
1985	1,374	4,586	1,498	4,999
1986	1,877	5,813	1,933	5,987
1987	1,905	6,636	1,905	6,636

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the division among the three conservancies, north Scotland, mid Scotland and south Scotland, of the forest recreation and amenity subsidy made to the Forestry Commission in Scotland in each year from 1979; and if he will also reprice the figures for inflation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

Year to 31 March	Conservancy (£ thousands) North	East[1]	South	West	Conservancy (£ thousands revalued to 1987 equivalents) North	East[1]	South	West
1980	263	214	312	281	431	351	512	461
1981	305	259	275	197	424	360	382	274

1985	332	388	300	354	362	423	327	386

[1] The former East Scotland conservancy was assimilated into the Mid Scotland and North Scotland conservancies in 1985.

Year to 31 March	Conservancy (£ thousands) North	Mid	South	Conservancy (£ thousands revalued to 1987 equivalents) North	Mid	South
1986	542	784	551	558	808	567
1987	588	656	661	558	656	661

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the cost of producing the magazine Forest Life and the numbers printed.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The cost was £1·09 per copy and 15,000 copies were printed.

Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to produce his response to the representations he has received following his consultative document on the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We are examining over 2,000 individual comments which have been received in response to the consultative document, in the light of which my right hon. and learned Friend will next year consider what, if any, changes in the existing licensing law of Scotland might usefully be proposed.

Private Rented Accommodation

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will provide the total number of persons in the private rented sector, excluding housing associations, by region and for Scotland as a whole, in the years from 1981 to 1986 inclusive;

(2) if he will provide the total number of dwellings in the private rented sector, excluding housing associations, by region and for Scotland as a whole, in the years from 1981 to 1986 inclusive;

(3) if he will provide the total number of households in the private rented sector, excluding housing associations, by region and for Scotland as a whole, in the years from 1981 to 1986 inclusive.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested on the number of persons and households in the private rented sector is not available; and the number of dwellings in the private sector is available only for Scotland as a whole. Estimates for 1981 to 1986 inclusive were published in table 9.3 of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1976-1986", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Nurse/Patient Ratios

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the nurse-to-patient ratio for each year since 1979 in Lothian health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not available centrally, but the following table shows the ratio of the number of whole-time equivalent nurses (including qualified, unqualified and learner nurses) to average occupied beds in each year to 31 March.

	Ratio
1979	1·2:1
1980	1·3:1
1981	1·3:1
1982	1·4:1
1983	1·4:1
1984	1·4:1
1985	1·4:1
1986	1·4:1
1987	1·4:1

Nirex

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about public meetings organised by Nirex to be held in Scotland; and what information he has about meetings to be held between Nirex and (a) Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, (b) regional councils and (c) district councils.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I understand that Nirex is arranging a seminar in Edinburgh on 14 December for Scottish local authorities. I have asked the chairman of Nirex to write to the hon. Member with the full information requested.

Hotels

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what results there are to date following the introduction of the crown hotel classification scheme in each category; how many hotels have failed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Tourist Board's scheme offers not only classification but grading of premises. The most recent results for hotels are as follows:

	Listed	1 Crown	2 Crown	3 Crown	4 Crown	5 Crown	Total
Classification only	11	4	16	16	5	—	52
Grading
Approved	14	9	85	60	11	—	179
Commended	5	3	68	190	140	12	418
Highly commended	—	—	1	10	9	13	33
Total	30	16	170	276	165	25	682

The scheme, which is voluntary, also covers guest houses and bed and breakfast and self-catering accommodation. A figure on the rate of failure among hotels is not available.

The scheme has been very well received and is proving to be highly successful. It should prove to be a most useful marketing tool and will also serve as a means of encouraging the provision of good quality accommodation.

NHS Staff

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many full-time doctors, nurses and ancillary staff have been employed by the National Health Service in Scotland for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 October 1987]: The information is as follows for full-time doctors, qualified nurses and ancillary staff (mainly porters and domestic staff) employed by the NHS in Scotland at 30 September in each year. Doctors holding maximum part-time appointments in hospitals are included. General medical practitioners are excluded.

	Doctors	Nurses	Ancillary staff
1979	4,677	20,391	17,390
1980	4,690	20,952	17,054
1981	4,699	22,274	16,998
1982	4,811	23,450	16,754
1983	4,878	24,584	16,210
1984	5,116	25,333	15,369
1985	5,090	25,843	14,551
1986	5,021	26,330	13,780

Spiers Wharf

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make funds available to assist the development of the Spiers wharf warehouses at Port Dundos.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 October 1987]: Applications have been made by a prospective developer to my right hon. and learned Friend for a historic buildings grant, and to the Scottish Development Agency. These applications are presently being considered.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairman of the Scottish Development Agency; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 October 1987]: My right hon. and learned Friend meets the chairman and chief executive of the agency frequently on occasions of mutual interest. The last formal meeting to discuss matters concerning the agency was held on 20 February 1987, when the issues discussed included the review of the agency, its role in the Scottish economy and its budgeting and planning cycles.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much he expects the Scottish Development Agency to spend in the current year on management and computer consultancy.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 29 October 1987]: The agency anticipates that spending on these activities will be as follows:

	1987-88 £ million
Management consultancy	0·86
Computer consultancy	1·22

Factories and Industrial Sites

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many factories and industrial sites are standing empty or unused in each district and islands area in Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 November]: The available information is set out in the table.

Column (1) Factories record

Column (2) Register of industrial sites

Notes:

Column (1):

(1) Data relate to industrial premises owned by SDA, new town development corporations and local authorities; data on factories owned by the Highlands and Islands Development Board are not yet included in the record for this year.

(2) District figures are aggregated from local employment office areas.

(3) It has been necessary to group some districts, and this is noted in the table as follows:

(a) included with Stirling,
(b) included with Kirkcaldy,
(c) included with Nithsdale,
(d) included with Gordon,
(e) included with Glasgow,
(f) includes data from other Districts.

(4) [1] Data for at least part of area included for 1985 because 1986 not available.

(5)·[2] Districts where data are incomplete because of lack of information from one of the relevant authorities or Agencies.

(6) n/a no data available for district.

(7) Unoccupied factories will include some already leased, reserved or unavailable for some other reason.

Column 2:

(1) Both publicly and privately owned sites are included.

(2) Not all the sites for industrial development will be available immediately and some sites already contain factories.

Rating Reform

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the cost of compiling the new community charge register in Scotland for 1987-88 and of the annual costs of updating that register in subsequent years.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 November 1987]: The community charges register will be compiled in 1988-89. My right hon. and learned Friend has estimated that expenditure of up to £9 million will be incurred in that year on the establishment of the register and preparation of new billing and collection systems, and that the additional cost of administering the new system in a full year thereafter will be in the range of £17 million to £22 million.

Mental Welfare Commission

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will authorise an emergency cash allocation in the light of the recent statement made on the effect of staff shortages on patient care by the Mental Welfare Commission for Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 November 1987]: No. The Government have increased resources to the health service in Scotland generally by 26 per cent. since 1979 and services for the mentally ill and the mentally handicapped have benefited substantially in real terms.

Staffing levels have also significantly improved since 1979: qualified staff up by 23 per cent. in mental illness and by 24 per cent. in mental handicap hospitals, unqualified staff by 8 per cent. and 10 per cent. respectively. The quality of staffing in terms of the ratio between qualified and unqualified staff has also improved with consequential benefits in the standard of care.

Since 1979 a number of new hospital units have been constructed and in most hospitals wards have been upgraded. In total 2,082 new mental health beds have been provided at a cost of £63·3 million. Substantial improvements have also been made to the main mental handicap hospitals, Lennox Castle and the Royal Scottish national hospital.

We will continue to urge health boards to give greater priority to services for the mentally ill and the mentally handicapped and it is encouraging that many boards now have firm plans to this end.

Electricity

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the generating capacity of (a) the South of Scotland electricity board and (b) the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board on the latest available figures; how this compares with the level of domestic consumption in these areas; and what are the corresponding figures for each of the last eight years.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 November 1987]: The information, provided by the Scottish electricity boards, is set out in the table. However, it should be noted that meaningful comparisons cannot readily be drawn between generating capacity and annual consumption by domestic electricity users. Although the capacity figures are given separately for each board, their generating plant is operated on a merit order basis under the joint generating agreement.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much the price of electricity for domestic consumers has increased for each of the last eight years in the areas covered by (a) the South of Scotland electricity board and (b) the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board: and what has been the increase in the retail price index for each of those years.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 November 1987]: The information requested is set out in the table:

SCOTLAND

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is (a) the proportion of working time allocated to his departmental equal opportunities officer for equal opportunities duties, (b) the other duties carried out by the departmental equal opportunities officer, (c) the proportion, and the amount, of the departmental budget which is allocated to equal opportunities work, (d) the number of occasions when the departmental equal opportunities officer meets equal opportunities officers from other Government Departments each year, (e) the guidelines issued to his departmental training officers and equal opportunities officers to promote the use of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act, and (f) the action taken to facilitate jobshare, part-time working and parental leave.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 30 October 1987]:

(a) No fixed proportion of the equal opportunities officer's working time is allocated to equal opportunities duties. Many of the detailed duties are delegated to support staff. The total effort amounts to more than one full-time post.

(b) The head of the Department's personnel management division is equal opportunities officer; she is supported by a branch which has equal opportunities as one of its major duties.

(c) It is not possible to quantify accurately the cost of staff and other resources devoted to this issue because it fluctuates considerably over time.

(d) The equal opportunities officer or her deputy meets others responsible for equal opportunities on average once a year.

(e) None, but my Department is discussing with its trade union side the special training needs of women.

(f) Part-time working began some years ago and my Department is currently consulting its trade union side on arrangements for this and for job sharing.

A series of equal opportunities leaflets being produced for issue to staff will cover the leave arrangements which provide for parental leave in some circumstances.

WALES

Information

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advertising agents have been appointed by his Department, or by the Central Office of Information on behalf of his Department, to handle campaigns involving the communication of information on subjects for which his Department is responsible to Parliament during the year 1985-86; what was the subject of each campaign; and how much was spent on each campaign.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The spending in 1985-86 by advertising agencies on campaigns is as follows:

Agency	Campaign	Expenditure
The Yellowhammer Company Ltd.	Misuse of Drugs	£60,000
Davidson Pearce Ltd.	Road Safety	£11,000

The figures are in full cost terms, including VAT where applicable.

Pupil Statistics

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide a breakdown of pupils in (a) nursery schools and (b) nursery classes in primary schools expressed in terms of full-time equivalents by local authority in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information in respect of January 1987 is as follows:

	Full-time equivalent pupil numbers in: Maintained nursery schools	Nursery classes in maintained primary schools

HOME DEPARTMENT

Pakistani Students (Visas)

97. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was (a) the number of applications made by Pakistan nationals for a visa to study in the United Kingdom in each year from 1983 to 1986 and (b) the number of applications granted in each of these years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The information available centrally is given in the following table.

Applications in Pakistan for a visa to enter the United Kingdom as a student

Number of persons

	Newly received[1]	Applications Granted[2,3]	Refused initially[3]
1983	200	140	20
1984	220	170	20
1985	210	210	10
[4]1986	290	270	20

[1] Including applications subsequently withdrawn or lapsed.

[2] Granted initially or on appeal.

[3] The application may have been received in a previous year.

[4] Visas were mandatory for Pakistani students from 15 October 1986.

Police Cells

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average cost of keeping a person on remand in police cells.

Mr. John Patten: The average cost per night of keeping a person on remand in police cells, based on the latest accounts submitted by police forces, is £163.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who is responsible for payment of the costs involved in keeping a person on remand in police cells.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Office meets the full costs of keeping persons on remand in police cells. The costs are borne on the "Prisons, England and Wales, Vote" (class XI, vote 2).

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) men and (b) women who were being held in police cells in the United Kingdom on 31 October.

Mr. John Patten: On 31 October, 899 male and 11 female prisoners were held in police cells in England and Wales.

Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons in the United Kingdom which receive only prisoners who are on rule 43.

Mr. John Patten: No prisons in England and Wales receive only prisoners who are on rule 43.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) men and (b) women who were being kept on rule 43 in prisons in the United Kingdom on 31 October.

Mr. John Patten: On 30 September 1987, the most recent date for which information is available, 1,595 male sentenced and unsentenced prisoners were segregated under rule 43 in prisons in England and Wales. Figures are not kept centrally for female prisoners.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of the report of the chief constable of Bedfordshire on the effect of Luton Town football club's ban on visiting supporters on reducing crime in Luton, he will recommend the adoption of such a scheme to other chief constables; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The membership card scheme introduced by Luton Town FC has been notably successful and we recommend that the football authorities, clubs and the police study the scheme to find out what lessons may be learned for wider application. The precise nature of a membership scheme to be adopted is a matter for the individual club, in close consultation with the local police and with the benefit of guidelines and advice from the Football League. The advice given by the police would be a matter for the appropriate chief officer in the light of his professional assessment of a wide variety of local circumstances. A scheme which involves a total ban on visiting supporters may not be as well suited to other clubs as it is to Luton Town. The Government will continue to seek wider adoption of membership schemes through the working group chaired by the Minister with responsibility for sport.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much of the Metropolitan police force's budget has been spent on crime prevention projects for each year since 1979; and how much it is proposed to spend in the next financial year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that expenditure on publicity initiatives on crime prevention, neighbourhood watch and business watch schemes during the period is as follows:

1981-82	106,000
1982-83	206,000
1983-84	369,000
1984-85	295,000
1985-86	327,000
1986-87	423,000
1987-88[1]	515,000

[1] Estimated

Information for 1979-80 and 1980-81 is not available and the level of expenditure for 1988-89 has not yet been decided.

In addition, it is expected that over £70,000 will be spent in 1987-88 on equipment for neighbourhood watch and business watch schemes, property marking, videos and films, on the mobile advice unit and on administrative support for some crime prevention panels. The equivalent figures for earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Police Precepts

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the percentage change, in real terms, in the police precept levied on each London borough between 1985-86 and 1986-87 and 1987-88; what factors account for this change; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It would not be meaningful to calculate increases in the precept in real terms, because of the annual change to the product of the penny rate. The ratepayers' contribution to Metropolitan police expenditure in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 was £227 million, £258 million and £284 million respectively. This represents a real terms increase of 10·3 per cent. between 1985-86 and 1986-87 and 5·6 per cent. between 1986-87 and 1987-88.

These increases were primarily to meet the cost of additional manpower, increases in policy pay, allowances and pensions and additional equipment.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost of maintaining the Metropolitan police force in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and what was the precept levied on each London borough for those years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Metropolitan police net revenue expenditure was £771 million in 1985-86 and £834 million in 1986-87. The estimate for 1987-88 is £929 million.

The precepts levied in each of these years was 12·62p 14·21p and 15·4p respectively.

Information

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advertising agents have been appointed by his Department, or by the Central Office of Information on behalf of his Department, to handle campaigns involving the communication of information on subjects for which his Department is responsible to Parliament during the year 1985-86; what was the subject of each campaign; and how much was spent on each campaign.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: The advertising agencies, campaign subjects, and amounts spent by the Home Office during the financial year 1985-86 were as follows:

Agency	Campaign Subject	Expenditure £
Davidson Pearce	Magistrates Court Service	4,000
Boase Massimi Pollitt Partnership	Crime Prevention	1,688,000
Collett Dickenson Peare & Partners	TV Licence Evasion	1,573,000
Boase Massimi Pollitt Partnership	Police Recruitment	149,000
Davidson Pearce	Electoral Register	156,000
Davidson Pearce	Koestler Awards	1,500
Boase Massimi Pollitt Partnership	Fire Prevention	447,000
Charles Barker	Probation Officer Recruitment	28,000

Criminal Injuries Board

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time between an application for compensation to the Criminal Injuries Board and the time of granting it.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not available on the average length of time taken to deal with applications to the board. As stated in the board's latest annual report (Cm. 42, paragraph 5) copies of which are in the Library, 70 per cent. of cases resolved in the financial year 1985-86 were dealt with within a year of application.

Knives

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the reported number of offences in each of the last three years in which a knife has been used in the Greater London area.

Mr. John Patten: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Janner) on 21 October, at column 776.

Drunken Driving

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to set a mandatory sentence including (a) a term of imprisonment and (b) a ban from driving for life in cases where death has resulted from drunken driving; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Parliament has long taken the view that mandatory sentences would restrict the court's ability to take into account the individual circumstances of each case. The courts already have the power to imprison drink-drivers and to disqualify them for substantial periods. The penalties for road traffic offences are currently under consideration by the Road Traffic Law Review, and we shall study its recommendations carefully.

Firearms

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions for illegal possession of firearms have been obtained in each year since 1979; and how many of these cases involved illegal possession of (a) automatic and (b) semi-automatic weapons.

Mr. John Patten: The information held centrally, which may be incomplete and which relates to cases where unlawful possession of firearms was the principal offence, is given in the following table. It is not possible to identify separately offences involving the unlawful possession of semi-automatic weapons.

Persons found guilty of unlawful possession of firearms

England and Wales Number of persons

Year	Total	of which, persons found guilty of unlawful possession of a fully automatic weapon
1979	2,774	39
1980	2,532	48
1981	2,617	62
1982	2,104	62
1983	1,883	56
1984	1,559	77
1985	1,390	50
1986	1,251	62

Schools (Assaults)

Mr. Henderson To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the numbers of prosecutions taking place each year since 1978 for assaults on teachers and pupils in schools.

Mr. John Patten: It is not possible, from the results of court proceedings held centrally, to distinguish the occupation of victims of assault.

Citizenship

Mr. Livingstone To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the lack of printed forms R and W1 which are necessary for registration of British citizenship by certain Commonwealth citizens and citizens of the Republic of Ireland; and whether photocopied forms will be acceptable.

Mr. Renton: We are satisfied that supplies of these forms are sufficient to meet reasonable demands for them. However, applications on photocopied forms will be acceptable.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Management

Mr. Woodcock To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he is satisfied with the level of management development activity in British industry.

Mr. Butcher: We regard management development as a priority area. There is evidence that the United Kingdom is falling behind its competitors in this area. We welcome the CBI's management development initiative in setting up the Council for Management Education and Development, whereby industry will address itself to promoting higher standards of professionalism at all levels across the economy.

Consumer Protection

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to introduce new legislation to protect consumers.

Mr. Maude: The Government intend shortly to introduce regulations to implement the EC directive on doorstep selling; and regulations under the Consumer Protection Act 1987 on price displays at bureaux de change and in connection with the resale of electricity and gas by landlords. A number of safety regulations will be made, mainly to implement EC directives.

The Government are currently analysing the response to public consultation on proposals by the Law Commissions for amending the law on the sale and supply of goods.

My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State has recently announced the Government's intention to amend the Consumer Credit Act, when there is a suitable opportunity, to simplify and clarify its requirements. We also propose to make certain changes to the advertisements regulations under the Act, which will provide improved consumer protection, particularly in the area of secured lending.

Petrol

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has recently received concerning competition in the United Kingdom petrol market.

Mr. Maude: A small number of representations have recently been received from hon. Members and independent petrol retailers about the United Kingdom petrol market.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) whether he is satisfied with the level of competition in the United Kingdom petrol market;

(2) whether he will refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the question of competition in the petrol supply industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Under the competition legislation it falls to the Director General of Fair Trading to keep competition in the United Kingdom market under review. The director general is continuing to monitor certain aspects of the competitive situation in the petrol supply market, but I understand that at present he sees no justification in developments in the petrol market for taking action under the legislation for which he is responsible.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the total number of petrol retail sites currently operating; and how this figure compares with the numbers for the previous 10 years.

Mr. Maude: The number of petrol retail sites operating over the period 1976-86 is as follows:

	Number
1976	30,383
1977	29,751
1978	28,295
1979	26,480
1980	25,527
1981	24,760
1982	24,108
1983	23,097
1984	22,032
1985	21,140
1986	20,641

Source: Office of Fair Trading.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the total volume of retail petrol sales in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Maude: The figures, which are available in the Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics, are as follows:

Sales of motor spirit to the retail sector

Thousand tonnes

Grade	Year
	1977	1978	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what share of the United Kingdom retail petrol market is currently held by the three largest retailers; and how this figure compares with the share in each of the previous 10 years.

Mr. Maude: The percentage share of the retail petrol market held by the three largest retailers is as follows:

	Per cent.
1976	53·1
1977	54·1
1978	53·4
1979	56·2
1980	55·2

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has concerning the percentage of retail petrol sites in each of the last five years for which figures are available which are (a) independent, (b) tenants and licensees and (c) managed sites.

Mr. Maude: The percentage of retail petrol sites which are independent is as follows:

	per cent.
1982	68·6
1983	68·3
1984	68·6
1985	68·6
1986	68·7

Source: Office of Fair Trading.

I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible with the comparable percentage figures for tenants and licensees, and managed sites.

Timber

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met representatives of Timber Growers United Kingdom to discuss the future of the timber industry.

Mr. Atkins: I have not had the pleasure of meeting representatives of Timber Growers United Kingdom yet.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement regarding Her Majesty's Government's representation at the International Tropical Timber Organisation conference in Yokohama, Japan, from 9 to 20 November; whether Her Majesty's Government gave a commitment to continued funding to the organisation; whether Her Majesty's Government have committed themselves to the conservation and environmental recommendations of the International Tropical Timber Organisation conference report; and whether Her Majesty's Government have given a specific commitment to contribute to the project funds of the organisation.

Mr. Atkins: The United Kingdom has ratified the international tropical timber agreement, and thereby accepts all the objectives arising from the United Nations conference on tropical timber which are set out in the agreement, including those relating to the sustainable utilisation and conservation of tropical forests, as well as the financial obligations due under the terms of the agreement. A representative of the Department of Trade and Industry is attending the current ITTO council session.

The United Kingdom will consider providing voluntary funding for particular projects put forward by ITTO on a case-by-case basis, and we hope that as the ITTO defines its role, its project work will be closely co-ordinated with other developments in the field, such as the FAO's tropical forest action plan, in which the United Kingdom is playing an active part.

Lloyd's

Mr. Knowles: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what further progress has been made by Lloyd's in the implementation of the recommendations of the committee of inquiry into regulatory matters at Lloyd's.

Mr. Maude: The chairman of the Council of Lloyd's has recently submitted a memorandum recording the progress made to date. I have placed this memorandum in the Library. It shows that the Council of Lloyd's has now taken steps to implement 30 of the 70 recommendations in the committee's report, which was published in January this year. The memorandum also demonstrates that Lloyd's is heavily engaged in a programme of consultation on the remaining recommendations. As was the case when a report was last made to the House on this matter by the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 8 April 1987, at column 273, implementation of the substantial part of the committee of inquiry's recommendations should be completed by the middle of 1989.

I look to Lloyd's to maintain the momentum generated so far, and I shall continue to follow Lloyd's progress closely and to keep the House informed.

SCOTLAND

Still Births

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the incidence of still births in each health board area in each month of 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

[1] Provisional figures

Fish Farms

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation to control the number and size of sea and fresh water fish farms in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Fish farms in inland waters and the land-based elements of marine fish farms are already subject to control under the Town and Country Planning Acts. The Government have no plans at present to legislate to extend planning controls to offshore fish farm developments.

Glasgow Royal Infirmary

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will visit phase 2 of the Glasgow royal infirmary in the near future.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to visit Glasgow royal infirmary. Any proposals to build a phase 2 of the redevelopment of the infirmary are for the Greater Glasgow health board in the first instance.

Glasgow Royal Maternity Hospital

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the replacement for the Glasgow royal maternity hospital will be sited within phase 2 of the Glasgow royal infirmary.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The question of a replacement for the Glasgow royal maternity hospital is currently the subject of an option appraisal being conducted by the Greater Glasgow health board. A decision about the site of that replacement building will be dependent on the outcome of the appraisal.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the procedures to be applied to proposals for preliminary investigations of a nuclear waste disposal facility have been amended in any way over the last two years; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There have been no changes to the planning procedures which would apply to such proposals.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about a seminar to be held in Edinburgh by Nirex in the near future; on what date that seminar will be held; and whether he intends to be present.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave her to a similar question yesterday. The Secretary of State would not expect to be present at a seminar.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what will be the nature of the public inquiry to which any proposal for nuclear waste disposal facilities in Scotland will be subject.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Any inquiry held would be an inquiry under the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Acts. Its scope would be a matter for the Secretary of State to determine if and when a specific proposal was made.

Housing

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of households in Scotland, with one pensioner living in them, has (a) no bath and (b) no inside lavatory.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The percentage of households in Scotland with one or more residents of pensionable age at the time of the 1981 census with (a) no bath was 3·4 per cent and (b) no inside WC was 1·3 per cent.

Health Services

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the extra funds for hospitals and community services in Scotland announced in the Autumn Statement will be allocated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend will announce shortly his plans for financial allocations for all Scottish Office services, including health, for the years 1988-89 to 1990-91.

Prisons (Reform)

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce reform into Scottish prisons following the recent outbreaks of violence at Scottish prisons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 October 1987]: Implications of recent incidents in Scottish prisons are at present being assessed by my right hon. and learned Friend.

Hospital Beds

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of bed losses in the National Health Service hospitals in the Tayside area for each of the past eight years; and of these how many were acute beds.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 October 1987]: The average number of available staffed beds in NHS hospitals in Tayside health board are shown in the table for each of the past eight years together with the bed losses. Also relevant is the average percentage occupancy of these beds, details of which are also included in the table.

Year ending 30 September

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Lords of Appeal in Ordinary

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General what has been the stipend paid to a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary in each of the past five years.

The Attorney-General: The salary of a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary and the dates on which it became payable has been as follows:

	£
1 April 1982	48,250
1 August 1983	51,750
1 January 1984	55,000
1 April 1984	56,650
1 November 1984	58,500
1 July 1985	63,750
1 March 1986	69,000
1 July 1986	71,400
1 April 1987	74,435
1 October 1987	74,750

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General what qualifications are required for appointment to the post of Lord of Appeal in Ordinary.

The Attorney-General: The qualifications required for appointment to the post of Lord of Appeal in Ordinary are set out in section 6 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1876 which provides:

> "A person shall not be qualified to be appointed by Her Majesty a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary unless he has been at or before the time of his appointment the holder for a period of not less than two years of some one or more offices in this Act described as high judicial offices, or has been at or before such time as aforesaid, for not less than 15 years, a practising barrister in England or Ireland, or a practising advocate in Scotland".

High judicial office is defined in section 25 of the Act as any of the following offices:

> "The office of Lord Chancellor of Great Britain . . . or of Judge of one of Her Majesty's superior courts of Great Britain and Ireland".

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Buildings

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether information about the gross floor area of school buildings, capacity, areas of temporary accommodation and costs of improvement for individual local education authorities can be obtained from the data used to compile his Department's recently published survey of school buildings.

Mr. Dunn: No. The survey was designed to provide information only on a national basis. For representative coverage of the schools within each local education authority, a much larger sample would have been required, at greatly enhanced cost.

Schools (Assaults)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what statistics are kept on the numbers of assaults taking place in schools in England and Wales as a whole and in Newcastle upon Tyne per year; and if he will give the number of assaults on (a) teachers and (b) pupils per year since 1978, in both geographical areas.

Mrs. Rumbold: No information is collected centrally on the number of assaults on teachers or pupils in schools in England and Wales.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give details of any guidelines or circulars from his Department with regard to the handling of assaults on teachers or pupils in schools and the involvement of the police.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department has issued no such guidelines or circulars.

EMPLOYMENT

Tourism

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on information available to young people concerning the opportunities for employment in tourism.

Mr. Lee: There is a wide range of frequently updated video and written material available for young people illustrating the many employment opportunities in tourism. Providers of relevant careers guidance material include the Manpower Services Commission's careers and occupational information centre, the English tourist board, the hotel and catering training board, trade organisations and individual employers in the industry, education foundations and professional associations, the trade press, commercial publishers, as well as my Department and the Department of Education and Science. The replies to a recent questionnaire my Department sent to all local authority principal careers officers showed how useful the existing material on careers in tourism is found to be.

Trade Unions (Accounting)

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received on the proposed changes in accounting requirements for trade unions.

Mr. Nicholls: Individual responses to the Green Paper "Trade Unions and their Members" are treated in confidence by my Department. Of 48 comments on the proposal to give trade union members and their professional advisers a statutory right of access to their union's detailed accounts, 32 were in favour.

Employment Schemes

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to merge the community programme and the job training scheme.

Mr. Cope: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made in the House by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment today.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what specific changes he proposes to make in the administration of the enterprise allowance scheme and the small firms loan guarantee scheme to achieve his stated objective of giving more help through these schemes to people in the inner cities.

Mr. Cope: I am currently considering how the various measures to assist small businesses and encourage enterprise provided by this Department and the Manpower Services Commission can be operated to better effect in inner city areas.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EC Legislation

Mr. Lord: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what European Community measures on agriculture and fisheries were adopted during the recess before completion of parliamentary scrutiny; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: A number of Community measures were adopted during the recess. At the request of the Select Committee on European Legislation, I wish to explain the circumstances relating to four measures.

The first measure concerns the agreement with the United States on Community exports of pasta products. On 7 August the Council by written procedure endorsed the draft agreement reached by the Commission and the United States Government on a long-standing dispute over the Community's export regime for pasta products, pending a definitive solution in the GATT round negotiations. The settlement averted the escalation of the dispute into what seemed likely to be an unnecessarily damaging round of measures and counter-measures affecting EC/United States trade in agricultural products. The settlement involves a reduction in the level of export refunds paid on EC exports of pasta products to the United States, and agreement that in future half the total of EC pasta products exports to the United States should be made under the inward processing relief arrangement rather than with the benefit of export refunds. The Government supported the agreement (despite parliamentary scrutiny not having been completed) because it averted the threat of a damaging trade dispute at the outset of negotiations in the Uruguay GATT round and did not prejudice the Community's position on paying export refunds on processed products in general. The United Kingdom has valuable exports of processed food and drink: United Kingdom exports totalled £3 billion in 1986. Early endorsement of the agreement reached between the Commission and the United States Government was thus in the United Kingdom interest.

The second measure concerns the interim steps on the future financing of the common agricultural policy. On 19-20 October, the Agriculture Council adopted proposal 7690/87 introducing special rules relating to the financing of the common agricultural policy. This was an interim measure to deal with the expectation, which has now been borne out, that Community funds would last until about the end of October. The measure has the effect of delaying payment by two months, which is sufficient to ensure that there would be no overrun of the Budget provision in 1987. I therefore agreed to its adoption on this necessary time scale and in advance of scrutiny.

The third measure concerns an increase in the total allowable catch (TAC) for cod in ICES area VII (except VIIa), including cod in the English Channel. Following advice from the Commission's Scientific and Technical Committee on Fisheries that the 1987 TAC for this stock could safely be increased, the Fisheries Council on 29 September agreed a Commission proposal that the TAC should be increased from 16,000 to 19,000 tonnes. This cod stock is of importance to British fishermen and the fishery has been subject to restrictions for most of the year. I therefore judged it in the United Kingdom interest to see this proposal adopted without awaiting parliamentary scrutiny. Formal adoption took place at a Council meeting on 5 October.

The fourth measure concerns an interim autonomous scheme of control in respect of Community vessels fishing in the regulatory area of the North-West Atlantic Fisheries Organisation (NAFO), which was also agreed at the Fisheries Council on 29 September. The introduction of an autonomous control scheme was necessary following the Community's withdrawal from the existing joint international enforcement scheme with effect from 26 June 1987 and in the absence of agreement so far on its renegotiation. Although there is at present little direct United Kingdom interest in the fisheries in these waters, I judged it to be in the United Kingdom interest for the Community to be seen to be meeting its control obligations with the minimum of delay and for the proposal to be adopted without awaiting parliamentary scrutiny. Formal adoption took place at a Council meeting on 19 October.

TRANSPORT

Transport Act 1985

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to amend section 36 of the Transport Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. David Mitchell: We have no such plans. Where London Regional Transport proposes to provide, or secure the provision of, a new London bus service or vary an existing one it is required by the Transport Act 1985 to consult the police, the local authorities affected, the London Regional Passengers' Committee, and any other person it thinks fit. I am satisfied that the consultation arrangements adopted in practice work satisfactorily.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received any representations from (1) any community health councils or;

(2) any body representing such councils concerning the amendment of the consultation obligations contained in section 36 of the Transport Act 1985;

(3) whether he had received any representations from (a) any districts health authorities or (b) any body representing such authorities concerning the amendments to the consultation obligation contained in section 36 of the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received no such representations directly. Two of my hon. Friends have passed to me representations from Bexley health authority that there should be a statutory requirement for London Regional Transport to consult district health authorities and community health councils regarding proposals to alter local bus services.

Cyclist Awareness Campaign

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to introduce a cyclist awareness campaign along the lines of the present think bike campaign for motor cyclists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: As part of its road safety publicity programme the Department is distributing to local authority road safety officers a range of publicity material aimed both at making motorists more aware of cyclists and at encouraging cyclists to use lights and conspicuity aids to make themselves more visible.

Manchester International Airport

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is considering any applications for expanding air services into Manchester International airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Since the beginning of 1986, 28 new scheduled services have been introduced to and from Manchester. There are no formal applications currently outstanding from foreign airlines or their Governments. In the case of United Kingdom airlines, it is for the Civil Aviation Authority to consider applications for licences in the first instance.

M1 (Repairs)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the M1 motorway between London and junction 25 to be devoid of all carriageway closures and repair work for a continuous period of at least a month.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I do not.

Full carriageway closures are usually associated with major renewal works carried out under contraflow. These take place mostly between March and November. There is often then a break until the following year's programme.

Many minor works and repairs are still essential throughout the year if the motorway is to be kept in good condition. Most will require at least single lane closures to protect road users and working people.

Driving Tests

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish his proposals for driving licence tests.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The review of the driver testing and training organisation that was announced on 5 March this year has been looking at ways of improving the provision of tests.

Demand for driving tests has risen by 10 per cent. over the past four years and is running at 2 million annually. The average waiting time for a test rose to 17 weeks in 1985-86. Recruitment and efficiency measures have brought this down to 14 weeks. We want to see this cut significantly.

One problem is that half those taking tests have insufficient skills to pass. They add to the queues when they book further tests.

The review has now been completed. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport will make an announcement shortly.

Tyres

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government as regards the European Economic Community directive on minimum tread depth for motor car tyres.

Mr. Iain Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he proposes to take in discussion with fellow EEC Transport Ministers on the EEC directive No. COMS(87)407 to bring harmonisation of tyre tread depth to 1·6mm on certain categories of motor vehicles and of their trailers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Our views are set out in the explanatory memorandum on the Commission's proposals (8714/87) sent to the Scrutiny Committee on 6 November. No discussion has yet taken place in the Council of Ministers. We shall be opposing the proposals on the grounds that the costs would be substantial — £70 million per year in Britain alone — and the benefits to road safety would not be significant.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to make mandatory the installation and regular maintenance of gas and smoke detector systems in below-deck holds in cross-Channel ferries used for the transport of live farm animals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Merchant Shipping (Fire Protection) Regulations 1984 require the provision of a fire detection system in all cargo spaces which are not reasonably accessible to the efficient patrol system required by the statutory regulations.

There is a requirement on the owner to ensure that any such equipment is maintained in good order at all times.

Gas detection systems are not required by international or United Kingdom regulations and there are no plans to introduce requirements for such systems.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what checks, and with what frequency, are carried out on behalf of his Department of systems of ventilation, smoke and gas detection in below-decks holds in cross-Channel ferries regularly used for the transport of live farm animals.

Mr. David Mitchell: Ventilation systems and fire detection systems, where fitted, are items of inspection both at initial and annual renewal surveys, and are part of the statutory requirements leading to the issue of a passenger certificate. They may also be checked at other general inspection visits as opportunities occur.

Fire detection and alarm systems are required in all cargo spaces which are not reasonably accessible to the efficient patrol system required by the statutory regulations.

Car Lifting Gear (Accidents)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many deaths and injuries have occurred to motorists using car lifting gear for repairs and maintenance in the last three years.

Mr. Maude: I have been asked to reply.

The home accident surveillance system collects details of non-fatal accidents in and around the home from the accident and emergency departments of 20 hospitals in England and Wales. The three most recent years for which data are available from HASS are 1984, 1985 and 1986; and in these years HASS reported respectively 88, 55 and 84 home accidents involving jacks, hoists and ramps which were being used for vehicle maintenance. While these figures are too small to make reliable estimates of national figures, they probably correspond to national totals of 1,700, 1,200 and 1,600 such accidents in England and Wales for the three successive years.

The most recent years for which data are available on fatal home accidents are 1982, 1983 and 1984. In these three years there were respectively 10, 13 and six fatal home accidents involving jacks, hoists and ramps which were being used for vehicle maintenance.

It should be noted that the definition of "home" used above includes the garage, driveway, garden and yard, but excludes the public highway. Victims who were in paid employment at somebody else's home at the time of the accidents are also excluded.

ENVIRONMENT

Pollution

95. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what issues he will raise at the international North sea pollution conference to be held in London on 24 and 25 November.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 30 October to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) at column 448.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what volume of chemical waste has been dumped off the British coast in each year since 1970;

(2) what volume of waste material has been dumped off the British coast in each year since 1970.

Mr. Gummer [holding answers 9 November 1987]: I have been asked to reply.

Statutory controls over the deposit of waste at sea were introduced in 1974. Information on the amounts of waste deposited off the British coast up to 1984 can be found in the annual reports of the Oslo commission, copies of which are in the Library of the House. The equivalent figures for 1985 and 1986 are given below:

	Tonnes
	1985	1986
Dredgings	12,255,942	13,266,959
Sewage sludge	7,409,851	8,199,640
Solid industrial	1,657,618	1,872,704
Liquid industrial	305,623	282,991

These figures exclude deposits in internal waters behind baselines, which are outside the Oslo convention area, and deposits off the coast of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what volume of waste material has been dumped off the Yorkshire coast in each year since 1970;

(2) what volume of chemical waste material has been dumped off the Yorkshire coast in each year since 1970.

Mr. Gummer (holding answers 9 November 1987]: I have been asked to reply.

Statutory controls over the deposit of waste at sea were introduced in 1974. The amount of waste deposited off the Yorkshire coast each year since then was as follows:

	Tonnes
1975	95,550
1976	95,670
1977	90,950

	Tonnes
1978	90,825
1979	94,475
1980	115,630
1981	117,440
1982	91,950
1983	76,050
1984	92,875
1985	77,100
1986	67,364

This material comprises dredged spoils from the ports of Scarborough and Whitby. No chemical waste was deposited off the Yorkshire coast in this period.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 12 November, how his Department is to keep under review the evidence concerning the possible risk to health arising from bathing in sewage-contaminated water; and if his Department plans to produce a report as a matter of urgency.

Mr. Moynihan: I am keeping under review both the existing evidence from this country and abroad and the possible need for further epidemiological research. I have no plans at present to publish a report.

Mr. Allan Roberts To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conclusions are available concerning the percentage reduction in emissions to the atmosphere of hydrocarbons which would be required in order to produce a 1 per cent. reduction in ambient concentrations of troposhpheric ozone, given current emission levels of nitrogen oxides, hydrocarbons and sulphur dioxide; what relationship exists between hydrocarbon emissions and ozone concentrations at higher percentage reductions in hydrocarbons; and if he will outline the source of this information.

Mr. Moynihan: The answer to this question depends on many factors, notably the species of hydrocarbon, the concentrations of other gases and the meterorological conditions. The recent report of the Department's photochemical oxidants review group (a copy of which is in the Library) concluded that the quantitative relationship between the concentrations of ozone and its precursors is not as yet well understood. Large reductions of hydrocarbon emissions in the United States of America have failed to bring about the scale of ozone reductions which were predicted.

Harwell laboratory has, however, recently undertaken studies for the Department using one of the most sophisticated computer models yet developed. They show that an across-the-board reduction in hydrocarbons of about 3 per cent. would be required to reduce by 1 per cent. peak hourly ozone concentrations downwind of London in a summertime episode. Reductions of about 75 per cent. would be needed to reduce peak ozone by 50 per cent. Further details may be found in two recent Harwell laboratory reports (R12408, R12859; HMSO) copies of which I have placed in the Library.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to promote a broader approach towards controlling release of the most dangerous substances into the aquatic environment.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government have been giving careful consideration to the proposals made in the 15th report of the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities (Session 1984/85), and in particular to the Committee's view that EC members states should work towards a unified approach to controlling discharges of dangerous substances, which would involve both meeting prescribed quality standards in the receiving waters and minimising discharges from individual sources. A similar view was expressed in the recent report on the pollution of rivers and estuaries by the House of Commons Select Committee on the Environment. Ministers from participating countries also agreed to work towards developing such an approach at the 1984 ministerial conference on the North sea at Bremen.

The Government agrees that EC member states should seek to develop a unified approach to the control of the most dangerous substances, whose long-term effects on the environment are uncertain. We propose to do so in the United Kingdom. The Government consider that the main elements of the unified approach in this country should be:

—to identify a limited range of the most dangerous substances, on the basis of strict scientific criteria, to be termed the "Red List".

—to set environmental quality standards, wherever scientifically possible, for all "Red List" substances:

—to set emission standards based on the best available technology not entailing excessive cost for industrial processes discharging significant quantities of these substances;

—to take further measures where necessary to control inputs of "Red List" substances from diffuse sources;

The new policy on point source emissions will directly affect the small number of industrial plants which discharge in their waste water heavy metals or organic chemicals of a particularly dangerous character. The initial focus will be on new and refurbished plants; this will allow any increases in industrial costs to be phased in over a number of years and planned for. The policy is not expected to impose significant additional costs on water authorities, or other sewage undertakings.

In relation to those "Red Lists" substances which enter the aquatic environment from indirect and diffuse sources, the Government recognise the need for effective controls over the supply, storage and use of these substances.

The new approach will require legislation, including amendments to part II of the Control of Pollution Act 1974.

We shall be publishing detailed proposals and consulting industry and others on these in due course. The Government will also be outlining this more precautionary approach to Environment Ministers attending the second international conference on the North sea in London on 24 and 25 November.

Forth and Clyde Canal

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to make the stretch of the Forth and Clyde canal from Port Dundas to Kirkintilloch navigable.

Mr. Moynihan: The Forth and Clyde canal is the responsibility of the British Waterways Board. We are currently considering the board's proposals to restore the canal to navigation through central Glasgow in conjunction with other agencies. The scheme involves a total public investment of £2·6 million and a capital contribution from the board of £350,000. We expect to let the board have a final decision very shortly.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why the independent accountants who were commissioned to review the Ordnance Survey trading accounts did not investigate any specific Ordnance Survey commercial products to prove or disprove unfair trading.

Mr. Moynihan: The study was commissioned to review the format and design of the Ordnance Survey trading accounts and did not attempt to conduct an audit of the accounts, which is the responsibility of the National Audit Office.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the costings for the Temple Press/Ordnance Survey "Motoring Atlas of Great Britain" included the cost of drawing the maps which were used in the atlas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Ordnance Survey follow the guidelines for OS commercial activities published in July 1984, and all appropriate costs are taken into account.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the publisher Newnes Books was required to pay any category A royalty for the "ABC London Street Atlas" which it published jointly with the Ordnance Survey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: In line with other co-publication projects, the appropriate copyright royalty for maps in the product are charged in full as a cost against the revenue which OS and the co-publisher derive from sales. This cost is taken into account when assessing the viability of any co-publication proposal prior to proceeding.

The "ABC London Street Atlas" published in 1984 was compiled from a variety of base mapping at small and large scales to a new specification. Accordingly, in line with copyright practice at that time, category B rates were applied when assessing the product for royalty. This is the rate usually charged to such products and that which applies to the majority of competitors' publications in this field which are based on OS map material.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the cost of advertising Ordnance Survey commercial publication, in particular when the commercial publications is advertised together with Ordnance Survey public funded publications, is paid from public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Ordnance Survey's advertising campaigns are almost all related to its range of small scales and related products which have a broad market appeal that warrant national promotion. The cost of these campaigns is allocated to the relevant product series including core products whether advertised individually or alongside commercial ones, and recovered in accordance with agreed financial targets.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what payment is made to the Exchequer by those publishing houses who are allowed to use the name Ordnance Survey and to use the Ordnance Survey logo on products which they publish jointly with the Ordnance Survey.

Mr. Moynihan: The goodwill associated with the Ordnance Survey name and logo is recognised in any negotiation with a publishing house on a joint venture proposal. When considering partnership Ordnance Survey is looking not only at the financial soundness of the project but also at unquantified benefits in editorial design, marketing and selling skills that the proposed partner will bring to the venture.

Rural Sewerage Schemes

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what annual sums his department has disbursed as grant to rural sewerage schemes from 1978 to the present time (a) in current prices and (b) in 1979 prices.

Mr. Moynihan: The information is as follows:

The figures (for England) in respect of schemes approved since October 1978[1] are:

Year	Grant paid on sewerage schemes	[2]Value at current prices	[2]Value at 1978-79 prices
1978-79	54,062	109,651	54,062
1979-80	258,184	448,050	220,904
1980-81	726,220	1,063,007	524,101
1981-82	1,961,853	2,615,352	1,289,463
1982-83	2,524,695	3,139,681	1,547,975
1983-84	1,597,468	1,899,253	936,400
1984-85	2,596,059	2,956,318	1,457,571
1985-86	1,829,301	1,964,508	968,573
1986-87	1,840,496	1,918,717	945,996
1987-88[3]	334,092	334,092	164,719

[1] Grant on schemes approved since October 1978 has been paid as a lump sum. On schemes approved before then it has been paid in the form of half-yearly instalments. The amount disbursed annually in this form over the last 10 years has remained steady at £6-7 million in cash terms. Capitalisation of these grants will be completed in 1987-88.

[2] Revalued using the Treasury GDP deflator index (November 1987).

[3] To 30 September 1987.

Nirex

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report any information his Department has on financial contracts that exist between Nirex and the company Consolidated Environmental Technologies.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand that UK Nirex Ltd. has no contractual arrangements with the company Consolidated Environmental Technologies.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about a seminar to be held in Edinburgh by Nirex in the near future; on what date that seminar will be held; and whether he intends to be present.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand that UK Nirex Ltd. has invited all Scottish local authorities to a seminar in Edinburgh on 14 December. The seminar is intended to consider Nirex's discussion document "The Way Forward", which was launched on 12 November. The Secretary of State has no plans to attend.

Derelict Land

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many acres of vacant, dormant, derelict or underutilised land are in public ownership or in the ownership of nationalised industry, statutory undertaking, or non-governmental organisations in the city of Plymouth.

Mr. Trippier: The register of unused and underused land owned by public bodies, compiled under part X of the Local Government Act 1980 for the area of the city of Plymouth, contains details of the following areas:

Owner	Area (acres)
Plymouth City Council	408
Ministry of Defence	44
Devon County Council	36
British Railways Board	5
Central Electricity Generating Board	3
Manpower Services Commission	2
South West Water Authority	1

The derelict land survey carried out in 1982 disclosed no derelict land in public ownership in this area.

Storm Damage

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account he took of the experience gained following the 1982 gales in the Sheffield area in formulating his proposals for dealing with the aftermath of the storm of 16 October.

Mr. Chope: The arrangements announced by the Government in my right hon. Friend's statement on 21 October at columns 731-2 were drawn up after consultation with the local authority associations, and took into account wide experience both in central and local government.

Local Authority Publicity

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has made any further progress with the code of recommended practice on local authority publicity, to be issued under section 4 of the Local Government Act 1987.

Mr. Howard: In the light of the consultation carried out by my Department earlier this year, we have made some changes to the draft code of recommended practice which reflect comments made by the local authority associations and other interested parties. The draft also now incorporates the minor changes that would be necessary if Parliament approves clause 26(2) of the Local Government Bill. Copies of the revised draft code have been placed in the Library of the House and the Vote Office.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will update annex D of Cmnd. 9714, to show the impact of the proposed changes in non-domestic taxation using 1987-88 figures.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 17 November 1987]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 29 June at column 44 for an assessment of the impact of a national non-domestic rate set at the 1987/88 average poundage. I have no reason at present to change the assessment of the impact of the revaluation contained in annex D of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714).

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, (1) pursuant to his reply of 12 November, where and how the 42,000 tonnes of hazardous waste of the 52,000 tonnes imported during 1986 was treated;

(2) pursuant to the answer of 12 November, where the incineration of 8,000 tonnes of hazardous waste of the 53,000 tonnes imported during 1986 has taken place;

(3) pursuant to the reply of 12 November, where the 3,000 tonnes of hazardous waste was land-filled.

Mr. Moynihan: The details requested by the hon. Member could not be provided without disproportionate cost, since to obtain them it would be necessary to examine all individual consignment notes held by waste disposal authorities. Most special wastes which are treated undergo chemical fixation by patented processes.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Benefits

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many disabled households in the Wakefield metropolitan district were in receipt of at least one of the following benefits during 1979, 1983 and 1986 (a) attendance allowance, (b) mobility allowance, (c) severe disablement allowance, (d) invalidity pension and (e) invalid care allowance.

Mr. Scott: I regret that information is not available in the precise form requested. No information is available concerning the numbers of claimants who are themselves, or who have within their household someone who is, disabled. Nor are details available of the numbers of attendance allowance, mobility allowance or invalid care allowance beneficiaries in the Wakefield metropolitan district.

The Wakefield metropolitan district is served by the Department's local office at Wakefield but its boundaries are not conterminous. The table shows the numbers of sickness-invalidity benefit and severe disablement allowance claimants at the Wakefield local office on the dates listed:

	27 November 1979	6 December 1983	10 December 1986
Sickness-invalidity benefit[1]	n/a	3,347[2]	2,861
Severe disablement allowance	[3]—	[3]—	857

n/a—No longer held.

Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action.

[1] Separate records are not kept of sickness-invalidity benefit claimants.

[3] Severe disablement allowance replaced non-contributory invalidity pension from 29 November 1984.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many disabled households were in receipt of supplementary benefit in the Wakefield metropolitan district during the years 1979, 1983 and 1986;

(2) how many disabled households are currently in receipt of supplementary benefit within the Wakefield metropolitan district;

(3) how many disabled households within the Wakefield metropolitan district are currently in receipt of supplementary benefit;

(4) how many elderly householders in receipt of supplementary benefit in the Wakefield metropolitan district during 1979, 1983 and 1986 were owner-occupiers;

(5) how many elderly households were in receipt of supplementary benefit within the Wakefield metropolitan district for the years 1979, 1983 and 1986;

(6) how many elderly householders in receipt of supplementary benefit in the Wakefield metropolitan district during 1979, 1983 and 1986 were aged 80 years or over;

(7) how many children were living in families receiving supplementary benefit within the Wakefield metropolitan district for 1979, 1983 and 1986;

(8) how many households were in receipt of supplementary benefit within the Wakefield metropolitan district for the years 1979, 1983 and 1986;

(9) how many householders aged 80 or over were in receipt of supplementary benefit in the Wakefield metropolitan district for the years 1979, 1983 and 1986;

(10) how many elderly householders in receipt of supplementary benefit in the Wakefield metropolitan district during 1979, 1983 and 1986 were owner-occupiers.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that information is not available in precisely the form requested. No information is available concerning the number of claimants who are themselves, or who have within their household someone who is, over 80 or disabled or an owner-occupier. Nor are details available concerning the number of children living in families receiving supplementary benefit.

The Wakefield metropolitan district is served by Wakefield local office but the boundaries are not conterminous.

The table sets out the live load of cases in Wakefield local office for the dates requested, broken down into those required to register for work; those under pension age not required to register for work; and those over pension age.

The count of cases in action includes some cases where benefit has ceased to be paid but other action is still proceeding. The data include non-householders.

Wakefield ILO	27 November 1979	6 December 1983	10 December 1986	5 May 1987
Those required to register for work	1,017	3,596	4,103	4,003
Those not required to register for work	2,585	2,546	3,458	3,481
Those over pension age	3,955	4,008	3,786	3,988
Total	7,557	10,150	11,347	11,472

Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of claimants in receipt of supplementary benefit who were (a) required to register as being available for work, (b) not so required and (c) pensioners as at both 10 February and 27 July at each individual office.

Mr. Portillo: This information will take some time to collect and collate. I am arranging for the information to be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each individual office the number of single payments made in 1986-87 to claimants in receipt of supplementary benefit who were (a) required to register as being available for employment, (b) not so required to register and (c) pensioners and if he will further indicate in each of (a), (b) and (c) above (i) the amount claimed, (ii) the amount awarded, (iii) the number of successful claims, (iv) the number of unsuccessful claims, (v) the number of partially successful claims and (vi) the number of claimants receiving single payments.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that information on the amount of single payments claimed is not available. However, the remainder of the information requested will be placed in the Library shortly.

Private Residential Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many elderly persons were admitted to private residential-homes with his Department's financial support in local authority areas other than that of their ordinary residence during the years ended 31 March 1984, 31 March 1985, 31 March 1986 and 31 March 1987.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available.

Health Education Authority

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which members of the Health Education Authority were nominated by trade unions.

Mrs. Currie: There are no Trades Union Congress-nominated members on the authority. All members are nominated by the Secretary of State apart from one, who is nominated by the Secretary of State for Education and Science, and are chosen not to be representative of any particular group but for their personal contribution to the work of the authority.

Renal Patients

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many renal patients there are in the West Midlands regional health authority, and in the North Staffordshire district health authority; and, in each case, how many of these currently qualify for supplementary benefit and are in receipt of a heating, diet and bathing allowance, how many are in receipt of mobility allowance and how many in receipt of an attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: As at 31 December 1986, there were 1,209 patients in the west midlands region receiving some form of renal therapy. Information on the number in the North Staffordshire district is not held centrally, and the hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of North Staffordshire health authority for this information. The remainder of the information requested is available. However, those renal patients who dialyse at home or in self-care hospital units are deemed to satisfy the medical conditions for entitlement to attendance allowance at the lower rate.

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire of 21 October, Official Report, column 802, he will indicate when the discussions now urgently proceeding between British Telecom and the Government Departments concerned on the future of the telephone exchange system for the deaf will be concluded; and on what date he anticipates making a further announcement.

Mr. Scott: The latest position was set out in my reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) and the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 9 November at columns 95-96. I shall make an announcement as soon as a decision has been reached.

Maternity Services

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give details of the annual cost of operating the maternity unit at North Walsham hospital, and if he will give a breakdown of how this figure is calculated;

(2) what was the cost of (a) a delivery at North Walsham maternity unit compared with the cost of a delivery at the Norfolk and Norwich maternity unit and (b) cost of transporting a patient from North Walsham to Norwich.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not held centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to approach the acting chairman of Norwich district health authority.

Colposcopy

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out for each of the inner London district health authorities how many people are waiting for colposcopy treatment; how this compares with the national average; and what are his plans for improving the service.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that information on the number of cases awaiting colposcopies is not collected centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairmen of the Thames regional health authorities. Health authorities are expected to ensure that they have adequate facilities for the prompt investigation and treatment of women whose gynaecological condition requires it.

Haemophiliacs

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure confidentiality for people with haemophilia and HIV when claiming benefits from his Department.

Mr. Scott: All personal information supplied in connection with social security claims is treated as confidential. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind, I shall be happy to look into it.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what impact the social fund will have on people with haemophilia and HIV, particularly with reference to extra heating and laundry facilities.

Mr. Scott: People with haemophilia and HIV will be among those receiving income support who are regarded as a priority group for community care grants from the social fund and will also be able to apply for interest-free loans. Guidance on the circumstances in which discretionary grants and loans will be made is found in the social fund manual, a copy of which is in the Library.

Fraud Prevention

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish any available statistics correlating the arrival of fraud prevention officers in an office of his Department and the subsequent change in numbers of claimants for that office.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that statistics in the form requested are not maintained.

Advertising Agents

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what advertising agents have been appointed by his Department, or by the Central Office of Information on behalf of his Department, to handle campaigns involving the communication of information on subjects for which his Department is responsible to Parliament during the year 1985-86; what was the subject of each campaign; and how much was spent on each campaign.

Mr. Portillo: The table details the spending on health and social security campaigns and the advertising agents involved.

Departmental Information

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent decision he has taken in respect of sending information, including press releases, to voluntary and other organisations.

Mr. Portillo: The Department's information division reviewed its distribution of the large number of press releases, many of which go to recipients who are concerned with local or other matters not specifically involved with the National Health Service or social security. Accordingly, press release distribution is generally limited to journalists. However, an exception is made for headquarters of voluntary and other charitable organisations which continue to receive press releases. Private individuals and others may obtain details of press releases issued from the daily index subscription service of the Central Office of Information.

Sheltered Accommodation

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has received any representations from Devon county council seeking to amend part III, section 21, (1)(a) and (1)(b) of the National Assistance Act 1948 which places an obligation on local authorities to provide sheltered accommodation for the elderly within their administrative boundaries; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: No. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 16 November.

Medical Education

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to bring about closer working between health and education interests in the field of medical education.

Mr. Newton: The Croham report on the review of the University Grants Committee, (Cmnd. 81), published earlier this year, recommended that the Department of Education and Science and the Health Departments should take steps to improve joint working in the field of medical education. A programme of action in response to the report included the issue of joint guidance to both health authorities and universities in March. The permanent secretaries of the Departments of Health and Social Security (DHSS) and Education and Science (DES) and the chief medical officers of DHSS and the Scottish Home and Health Department held a meeting on medical education on 12 November with, among others, the chairman of the University Grants Committee, the president of the General Medical Council, the chairman of the Committee of Vice Chancellors and Principals and a chairman representing regional health authorities. The meeting agreed that a steering group should be established under the chairmanship of Mr. Michael Partridge, second permanent secretary of the DHSS, to bring together the national agencies with an interest in medical education and to consider how the current arrangements for undergraduate medical education can be improved to ensure that the policies and programmes of the bodies concerned are properly co-ordinated and directed. The group will report as necessary on the issues considered to the relevant national agencies.

Vaccine Damage

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the first payment of £10,000 was made under the vaccine damage proposals; what is the current level of payment and if he will give the value in real terms of the current payment compared with its original value.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 16 November 1987]: At September 1987, the value in real terms of the first £10,000 vaccine damage payment, made in December 1978, was £19,785. The current level of payment, for successful claims made on or after 18 June 1985, is £20,000.

DEFENCE

Arms Control

96. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Her Majesty's Government will stop deployments of cruise missiles at RAF Molesworth (a) when an intermediate nuclear forces agreement is signed or (b) when it is ratified.

Mr. Ian Stewart: This is a matter which is currently under consideration within NATO.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations has he received supporting the inclusion of the British deterrent in future strategic arms talks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received a number of representations from hon. Members and members of the public supporting the inclusion of the British independent deterrent in arms control negotiations. The conditions which must be met before we could consider associating our deterrent with the arms control process were re-affirmed in the reply by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 3 November 1987, at column 625.

Subsistence Claims

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons he has failed to discipline staff in his Department who have been found to have falsified travel and subsistence claims.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is departmental policy to discipline staff who are found guilty by criminal conviction or internal procedure of falsifying travel and subsistence claims. However, if the information available is judged to be insufficient to sustain criminal charges, in some cases it is likely that disciplinary action will not be pursued.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why his Department's police have not prosecuted staff in his Department who have been found to have falsified travel and subsistence claims.

Mr. Sainsbury: Because in England and Wales the decision whether or not to prosecute in such cases is the responsibility of the Crown Prosecution Service.

Plutonium

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many kilograms of plutonium have gone missing from military nuclear facilities in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what accounting procedures are in operation to ensure that all plutonium held for military purposes is at all times fully accounted for; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Defence plutonium is subjected to the most stringent security and accountancy control, but in common with the long-standing practice of successive Governments with regard to the defence nuclear programme I am not able to disclose further details.

Low-flying Aircraft

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force low-flying aircraft have flown over the Rugby and Kenilworth constituency during the current year; and how many representations he has received from members of the public.

Mr. Freeman: The distribution of low-flying military aircraft within the United Kingdom low-flying system is recorded by low-flying administrative areas, which do not correspond with regional or constituency boundaries. It is therefore not possible to say how many low-flying aircraft have flown over the Rugby and Kenilworth constituency during the current year. Since 1 January 1987 no representations to my Department have been received from this constituency.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report the results of exercises held by the Royal Air Force since 1980 to measure the perceived noise on the ground generated by overflying low-level military jet aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: There has been no exercise since 1980 specifically to measure noise from low-flying military aircraft. However an exercise know as Bedlam was monitored and the results were published in 1983 in a report called "External noise of MOD military aircraft". A copy of this will be placed in the Library shortly.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why pilots are permitted to set their radar altimeters to 90 ft when flying in areas where the minimum permitted height is 100 ft above ground level.

Mr. Freeman: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the equipment known as the low-height warner, which operates in conjunction with the radar altimeter on some military aircraft. The purpose of this equipment is to give warning that an aircraft is lower than it is intended to be, and that urgent corrective action should be taken. It is primarily a safety device and the various heights at which it can be set are determined by safety considerations.

Devonport Dockyard

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many acres of vacant, dormant, derelict or underutilised land there are in Devonport dockyard.

Mr. Sainsbury: Apart from those areas needed for use by the Ministry of Defence (which are specified in the term contract for management of the dockyard) the majority of the sites, buildings and facilities in Devonport naval base are licensed to Devonport Management Limited. It is for it to decide the extent to which it needs to use these assets in order to fulfil its commitments to the Ministry of Defence. Land requirements are kept under review.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received confirming the storage of chemical weapons in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received a number of representations from hon. Members and members of the public on this subject. The United Kingdom gave up its chemical weapons capability in the late 1950s. We have received no requests to store other countries' chemical weapons here. If any such request were ever to be received, it would be a matter for decision by the Government of the day in the light of all the circumstances prevailing at the time.

Lance Missiles

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to replace existing Lance missiles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) on 24 March 1987, at colunm 162.

Tornado Aircraft

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has commissioned any research into the development of air-launched nuclear weapons for the Tornado aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is normal practice to keep under review the need to replace all the United Kingdom's in-service weapons systems. The free-fall nuclear bomb, which has provided our sub-strategic capability for some years now, is no exeption. Some technical studies in this area have been and are being carried out. However, no decisions on a replacement have yet been taken.

Foxhunter Radar

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when a new contract for the Tornado F3's Foxhunter radar will be complete.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is hoped to place a revised contract shortly after the conclusion of current negotiations.

NORTHERN IRELAND

School Days (Duration)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information his Department has as to the average length of the school day in Northern Ireland in (a) maintained schools and (b) independent schools in 1957, 1967, 1977 and 1987.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Lay Assessors

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he first mentioned the possibility of lay assessors; who would choose such assessors; what their duties would be; what qualifications they would need; where they would carry out their duties; to whom they would report; and to whom they would be responsible.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 12 November 1987]: The possibility of appointing lay assessors to sit with the judge in Diplock courts was considered by the right honourable Sir George Baker in his "Review of the Operation of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978" (Command 9222). He concluded that their appointment would not be an improvement on the present mode of trial.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what recommendations on cross-border security co-operation were presented to the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference on 17 June 1986;

(2) if he will publish the reports on further studies carried out by three separate joint working parties established by the two police forces, as mentioned in the joint statement of 6 October 1986;

(3) what proposals the Irish side put forward relating to the advantages of a Bill of Rights and what difficulties the British side saw with these proposals, as stated in the joint statement of 6 October 1986; what comments they made on the consultative paper on equality of opportunity at the meeting on 6 October 1986; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will publish in the Official Report the progress reports of the groups of officials set up under article 8 of the Anglo-Irish Agreement which are mentioned in the joint statement of 9 May 1986; and what advantages and disadvantages of a Bill of Rights in Northern Ireland have been set out by the officials as mentioned in paragraph 5 of the joint statement;

(5) what views and proposals were put forward by Mr. Peter Barry designed to give substantial expression to the aim of ensuring public confidence in the administration of justice, as mentioned in the joint statement of 31 December 1985, and if he will make a statement;

(6) what possible areas of harmonisation of areas of the criminal law were discussed at the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference on 13 February 1986; and if he will make a statement;

(7) if he will make a statement on the work of the sub-group of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference; what views and proposals have been put forward by the Irish side; and what has been the response of his Department.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 13 November 1987]: As I explained to the hon. Gentleman on 29 June it has not been our practice to make public details of discussions in the Intergovernmental Conference, nor of papers passed through the secretariat, beyond the summaries contained in the joint statements issued after each meeting, copies of which are placed in the Library. Such confidentiality is usual in discussions between Governments. But I remain ready, as I said in my earlier reply, to discuss with the hon. Gentleman, or with any other representatives of the constitutional political parties in Northern Ireland, the Government's policies on any subject, including those discussed or to be discussed at meetings of the conference.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Bank of England (Equity Capital)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the companies in which the Bank of England purchased equity capital since 1970; and if he will list the sums expended on each of such purchases.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 16 November 1987]: Prior to the recent share purchase arrangements in relation to partly paid shares in British Petroleum Company plc, the only occasion when the issue department of the Bank of England has purchased equity capital since 1970 was in January 1975 when the issue department bought 77,817,507 British Petroleum ordinary stock units from the Burmah Oil Company Ltd. for a consideration of some £179 million as part of financial support arrangements for Burmah.

Purchases of equity capital by the banking department of the Bank of England over the same period are a matter for the Bank of England. Principal holdings of equity share capital and investments in subsidiary companies are, however, set out in the bank's annual reports and accounts which have been laid before the House.

Bank of England (Underwriting)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions since 1975 the Bank of England has underwritten the issue of equity by public companies; and if he will list the companies involved.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 16 November 1987]: The Bank of England confirms that since 1975 the bank has underwritten the issue of equity by public companies on one occasion only. This was in 1984 when the Bank of England agreed to purchase any of the 415 million shares in British Telecommunications plc provisionally allocated for offerings in the United States, Canada and Japan that were not sold. The bank's 1985 report noted that in the event the overseas offerings were fully taken up and the bank was not required to purchase shares.

CIVIL SERVICE

Employment Bill

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what representations he has received on the personnel management implications for the Civil Service of the Employment Bill.

Mr. Luce: None.

THE ARTS

Business Sponsorship

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister for the Arts what estimates he has of the total amounts of private business sponsorship of the arts in each of the English regions and Wales and Scotland during the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Luce: Total United Kingdom sponsorship in 1986-87 was about £25 million. A regional breakdown is not available.

Wales (Expenditure)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister for the Arts what effect he expects recently announced increases in arts funding to have on expenditure on the arts in Wales.

Mr. Luce: The three-year settlement that I announced on 5 November demonstrates the Government's continuing commitment to the arts. I am also encouraging arts bodies throughout Great Britain to strengthen their financial base and increase their income from all sources. I am sure that the consequences in Wales as elsewhere will be beneficial.

British Library

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the capital cost of the new British Library at St. Pancras; and what proportion of the total spending by his Department the new British Library has represented in each year, including 1987-88, since its inception.

Mr. Luce: The estimated cost of that stage of the new British library building at St. Pancras which has been approved and is currently being constructed is £242·5 million at second quarter 1987 prices. Expenditure on this project has been from the votes of the Property Services Agency.

As a proportion of the total central Government arts budget, expenditure on this project is as follows:

	Per cent.
1982-83	1·7
1983-84	2·2
1984-85	2·3
1985-86	2·4
1986-87	3·3
1987-88[1]	6·9

[1] Estimate.

Note: Earlier years: less than 1 per cent.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will list the grants made by him to the existing British Library at Bloomsbury in each year from 1979-80 to 1987-88; and if he will break the figures down into their revenue and capital components.

Mr. Luce: Grant-in-aid for the British Library from 1979-80 to 1987-88 is as follows:

1979-80	32,052
1980-81	35,397
1981-82	38,463
1982-83	42,950
1983-84	44,843
1984-85	46,850
1985-86	48,254
1986-87	49,800
1987-88	51,000

Grant-in-aid covers all the British Library's functions and activities at Bloomsbury and elsewhere, excluding expenditure on the new building at St. Pancras. Details of the breakdown of expenditure are published in the British Library's annual reports, copies of which are available in the Library.

Objects in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many works of art accepted in lieu of taxation have been allocated to Welsh galleries or museums; and if he will give details.

Mr. Luce: Since the passing of the National Heritage Act 1980, when responsibility for the acceptance of works of art in lieu of tax passed from Her Majesty's Treasury to the Office of Arts and Libraries and the Department of the Environment, the following items have been accepted and allocated to Welsh galleries and museums.

1982-83—"Flint Castle" by J. M. W. Turner—National Museum of Wales.

1987-88—"Deux Pierreuses" by Henri Toulouse Lautrec—National Museum of Wales.

Both of these offers were unconditional as to their allocation.

Thomas Webb Museum

Dr. Blackburn: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will take steps to prevent the sale to the United States of 23 items of glass currently exhibited in the Thomas Webb museum, Stourbridge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 12 November 1987]: Privately-owned property such as this glass may be sold to an overseas buyer; I have no powers to restrict such a sale. However, under our export licensing regulations, each item would require a licence from the Department of Trade and Industry if it were over £16,000 in value, and over 50 years of age. Otherwise, those valued individually at less than £16,000 may be exported under an open general export licence which requires a declaration to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise at the port.

ENERGY

Fuel Prices

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish in the Official Report the price increases for coal, gas and electricity industries for each of the years since 1974 compared with the changes in the retail price index.

Mr. Parkinson: The table shows movements in the average price of each fuel for the domestic and industrial sectors in each year. The figures are derived from indices of actual fuel prices which are published in Energy Trends and the Annual Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics. They accordingly reflect, where appropriate, factors such as the time taken for tariff changes to feed through into bills; regional differences in the structure of tariffs and the weighting of their components; and the number of consumers on each tariff and their pattern of consumption. They show the percentage movement in the average price of each fuel, compared with the preceding year, from 1974 to the latest available date; and the average movement in the retail prices index, excluding fuels.

Year on year percentage changes in average prices of coal, gas-and electricity consumed; 1974 to 1987

Wind Power

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received from wind power developers who wish to generate electricity for use on the national grid concerning private purchase tariff arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have received no specific representations from wind power developers concerning private purchase tariff arrangements. However, I am fully aware of the views of private generators in general on tariffs for the purchase of electricity.

International Atomic Energy Agency Convention

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he intends to provide for requests for aid under the International Atomic Energy Agency conventions on assistance in the case of a nuclear accident or radiological emergency.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Yes. This IAEA convention, which was agreed following the Chernobyl accident, provides for bilateral or multilateral co-operation, in the case of a nuclear accident or a radiological emergency, to minimise any consequences and to protect life, property and the environment from the effects of radioactive releases. The signing of the convention was announced to the House on 20 January 1987, at column 478.

Following the recent incident in Goiania in Brazil involving a medical radiation source, my Department has received through the IAEA a request from the Brazilian Government for a gift of radiation monitoring equipment. I propose to meet this request. Parliamentary approval for this new service will be sought in a Supplementary Supply Estimate for the Department of Energy's class VI, vote 2. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure for the required equipment, which will not exceed £10,000, will be met by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Commission

15. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the President of the European Commission; and what subjects were discussed.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: My most recent meeting with the president of the European Commission was at the Foreign Affairs Council in Luxembourg on 19 and 20 October, when we discussed a number of issues concerning the future development of the Community, notably the negotiations on future financing.

Iran-Iraq War

16. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on the United Nations attempt to achieve a ceasefire between Iraq and Iran.

54. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on progress on the United Nations initiative toward a ceasefire in the Gulf.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Secretary General has presented a detailed plan of implementation of Security Council resolution 598 to Iran and Iraq, and is continuing to seek an immediate ceasefire as a first step towards a negotiated settlement of the conflict. We are also trying to move ahead with parallel work on enforcement measures, as agreed by the Foreign Ministers of the permanent members on 25 September.

African National Congress

18. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what formal relations the Government have with the African National Congress; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: None; the African National Congress is not a government.

47. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British policy towards the African National Congress.

78. Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British policy towards the African National Congress.

Mrs. Chalker: We have called on the South African Government to take the steps necessary to create a climate in which genuine national dialogue can begin in South Africa. In keeping with this, we have urged them to unban the African National Congress and other political parties and to release Mr. Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners. At the same time, we have made clear to the ANC our view that its espousal of violence does not advance the cause of fundamental change in South Africa.

89. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government with regard to future meetings with the African National Congress and the United Democratic Front.

Mrs. Chalker: We maintain a wide range of contacts with representatives of all communities in South Africa.

Single European Market

19. Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to seek to achieve a single European market by 1992.

Mrs. Chalker: We shall continue to work for rapid progress in dismantling barriers to trade within Europe, including opening up public purchasing, approximation of standards, further liberalisation of air transport and of capital movements and the creation of an open market in financial services.

83. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have for the creation of a wider market in Europe outside the European Community.

Mrs. Chalker: The European Community and members of the European Free Trade Association are discussing a wide range of issues with a view to removing trade barriers and strengthening co-operation. We fully support this process and hope it will continue as progress is made towards the completion of the Community's single market.

Egypt

20. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Egypt.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: My visit to Egypt from 29 October to 1 November strengthened the already close relations between our two countries. I discussed a wide range of regional and bilateral issues with President Mubarak and his Ministers and signed a £10 million programme aid agreement.

Arms Control

21. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on future developments in arms control following the intermediate nuclear forces agreement.

Mr. Mellor: We welcome the intermediate nuclear forces agreement now in prospect, but it has yet to be finalised. In particular, the crucial question of verification remains outstanding. Following an INF agreement, NATO's priorities are for 50 per cent. cuts in the strategic arms of the United States and Soviet Union, a worldwide ban on chemical weapons and the elimination of conventional disparities between NATO and the Warsaw pact in Europe.

44. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to propose any further initiative to encourage negotiations for the agreement of a comphrehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. Mellor: I have nothing to add to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 3 November, at column 625.

60. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on progress at the talks in Vienna to agree the framework for negotiations on conventional stability in Europe.

Mr. Mellor: Informal contacts have been taking place in Vienna since February aimed at agreeing a mandate for negotiations on conventional stability covering the Atlantic to the Urals. Reasonable progress has been made. It is hoped that agreement can be reached to allow negotiations proper to begin in the spring or summer of 1988.

South Africa

22. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will review the effectiveness of sanctions made against South Africa; and whether any further measures are being considered.

Mrs. Chalker: As I told my hon. Friend on 21 January, the restrictive measures we have adopted are designed to bring home to the South African Government the urgent need for fundamental, peaceful change. Regrettably there is no sign at present that they are prepared to take steps needed to bring about such change. No new measures are under consideration.

33. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for a British Government representative to observe the trial in South Africa of Mr. Moses Mayekios and others.

Mrs. Chalker: Her Majesty's embassy at Pretoria has already been present at the trial of Mr. Mayekios and his co-defendants. We shall continue to follow closely the progress of the trial.

43. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the South African ambassador to the Court of St. James; and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: The South African ambassador paid a courtesy call on my right hon. and learned Friend on 3 July, shortly after his appointment to the Court of St. James.

46. Mr. John Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the effect that the sanctions imposed by the United Kingdom have had upon the employment of black people in South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: Precise information is not available. However, the limited restrictive measures introduced against South Africa were designed to send a signal to the South African Government of our strong opposition to apartheid, but without destroying large numbers of black jobs in the process.

49. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will consider reviewing British policy towards South Africa in the light of the United Democratic Front's decision to suspend relations with Her Majesty's Government in response to current British policy.

Mrs. Chalker: No.

57. Miss Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will review British policy towards South Africa in the light of the United Democratic Front's decision to suspend relations with the British Government in response to current British policy.

Mrs. Chalker: No.

86. Mr. George Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he or one of his Ministers last met Chief Buthelezi and President Mangope.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend met Chief Buthelezi in South Africa on 28 July 1986, during the course of his European Community Presidency mission. Neither my right hon. and learned Friend nor any other Foreign and Commonwealth Office Minister has met Mr. Mangope.

Sri Lanka

23. Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the conflict in Sri Lanka.

Mr. Eggar: We believe that implementation of the agreement signed on 29 July by India and Sri Lanka offers the only route to a lasting settlement of the conflict. The Tamil militants have not accepted Sri Lankan and Indian offers of amnesty in return for surrender of weapons and support for the agreement.

Angola

24. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's relations with the People's Republic of Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: We maintain normal diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of Angola.

69. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's relations with the People's Republic of Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: We maintain normal diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of Angola.

40. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on South Africa's recent acts of aggression against the People's Republic of Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: We condemn all cross-border incursions in the region, from whatever quarter. The South African Government are well aware of our views on this.

UNESCO

25. Miss Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about Government policy towards UNESCO.

73. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received asking him to reconsider the United Kingdom's decision to withdraw from UNESCO.

Mr. Eggar: We have received no formal representations.

Nicaragua

26. Mr. MacDonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the United States administration about the implications of continued funding of the Contras for the Arias peace initiative.

87. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the American State Department about the implications of continued funding of the contras for the Arias peace initiative and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have regular discussions with the United States Administration, who are well aware of our support for the Guatemala peace agreement.

USA/USSR (Summit)

27. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implication for Her Majesty's Government's policy of the United States-Soviet summit.

Mr. Mellor: It would be premature to make such a statement pending the outcome of the summit.

Mutual Balanced Force Reduction Negotiations

28. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement about the mutual balanced force reduction negotiations.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs) on 21 October at column 766.

United States of America

29. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about United Kingdom relations with the United States of America.

Mr. Eggar: Relations between the United Kingdom and the United States of America continue to be warm, close and constructive.

Afghanistan

30. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation he has made to the Soviet Government about its policy towards Afghanistan.

Mr. Eggar: We believe that the Soviet Union should withdraw its army of occupation from Afghanistan and let the Afghan people determine their own future. My right hon. and learned Friend raised the issue of Afghanistan most recently when he spoke to the Soviet ambassador on 1 September. My noble Friend the Minister of State set out our position in a statement to the United Nations General Assembly on 10 November, when the UNGA voted 123-19-11 in favour of a resolution calling for the immediate withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan.

Middle East

31. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his visit to the middle east on 31 October.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend visited Egypt from 29 October to 1 November and Jordan from 1 to 3 November. He held useful and friendly talks in both countries on international and bilateral issues. Our relations with both Egypt and Jordan are excellent.

65. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Government policy towards resolution of the middle east conflict.

Mr. Mellor: An international conference remains the most practical way forward to a negotiated settlement of the Arab/Israel dispute. We shall continue to work with others concerned for agreement on modalities for a conference.

88. Mr. Denis Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the prospects of a resolution of the Arab/Israel dispute following his recent visit to the region.

Mr. Mellor: Egypt and Jordan share our view that an international conference remains the most practical way forward. We shall continue to work with others concerned for agreement on modalities for a conference.

Western European Union

32. Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards participation in the Western European Union.

Mr. Mellor: We participate fully in all aspects of Western European Union work. Foreign and Defence Ministers regularly attend the biannual ministerial councils and a British Minister usually addresses WEU assembly sessions.

51. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the future of the Western European Union.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Sir G. Finsberg) on 2 November at column 548.

Namibia

34. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of what action he will be taking to assist the United Nations Secretary-General in his efforts to secure the implementation of Security Council resolution 601 (1981) calling for a ceasefire in Namibia as a prerequisite for the implementation of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: The Secretary General has our full support. We are in regular consultation with the United Nations secretariat, and shall consider any requests for assistance in the light of the circumstances at the time.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the meeting between the President of the South West Africa People's Organisation of Namibia, Mr. Sam Nujoma, and the Minister of State, the right hon. Member for Wallasey (Mrs. Chalker).

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on 2 November at column 547.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation he has received about the meeting between the President of the South West Africa People's Organisation of Namibia, Mr. Sam Nujoma, and the Minister of State, the right hon. Member for Wallasey (Mrs. Chalker).

Mrs. Chalker: None.

Chile

35. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have made representations to the Chilean authorities on behalf of the 15 political detainees who have been either sentenced to death or recommended for the death penalty by military courts.

Mr. Eggar: Four of these detainees, sentenced to death for various murders and other terrorist activities, have their sentences under appeal. The remaining 11 have yet to be sentenced. With our European partners, we continue to monitor these cases closely, but consider it would not be helpful to intervene at this stage in the judicial process.

63. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Chilean authorities about the disappearance during September of five opposition activists.

Mr. Eggar: No specific representations on this case have yet been made. The facts remain unclear. But we have repeatedly expressed to the Chilean Government our belief that an orderly and peaceful transition to democracy in Chile is the best guarantee of respect for human rights in that country.

82. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the content of his recent meeting with the Chilean Minister of the Exterior, Señor Ricardo Garcia, during the latter's visit to London on 23 October.

Mr. Eggar: At meetings which I and my right hon. and learned Friend held on 23 October with Señor Garcia, we expressed our strong concern over continuing violations of human rights in Chile, and discussed the transition to democracy in Chile, developments in the economy and regional matters.

93. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Chilean authorities over the alleged torture following detention on 3 September, of Señor Luis Tricot, a returned Chilean refugee who was, for a time, resident in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: We have made representations on behalf of the government of the Republic of Ireland where Señor Tricot had refugee status before he returned to Chile.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding proposals by Her Majesty's Government to encourage the Government of Chile to comply with the United Nations convention against torture.

Mr. Eggar: We have on repeated occasions expressed our concern over human rights violations in Chile, most recently at the meetings on 23 October 1987 which I and my right hon. and learned Friend had with the Chilean Foreign Minister. We welcome Chile's signature of the United Nations convention against torture and the Inter-American convention on the prevention of torture, and look forward to Chile's ratification of these instruments and to their full application there.

Italy

36. Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet Signor Cossiga, President of the Italian Republic, to discuss Anglo-Italian relations.

38. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the visit of Signor Cossiga, the President of Italy to London.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has no immediate plans to meet President Cossiga, following the cancellation of the President's state visit.

Africa

37. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there are any plans for a ministerial visit to Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: I shall be visiting Mozambique and Malawi between 28 November and 3 December.

Gulf (Ceasefire)

54. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on progress on the United Nations initiative toward a ceasefire in the Gulf.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Secretary General has presented a detailed plan of implementation of Security Council resolution 598 to Iran and Iraq, and is continuing to seek an immediate ceasefire as a first step towards a negotiated settlement of the conflict. We are also trying to move ahead with parallel work on enforcement measures, as agreed by the Foreign Ministers of the Permanent Members on 25 September.

Human Rights

39. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about violations of human rights in Afghanistan.

Mr. Eggar: Widespread violations of human rights in Afghanistan have been documented in the interim report by Dr. Ermacora, special rapporteur of the United Nations Commission on human rights, presented recently to the General Assembly.

53. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's response to the Soviet proposal to hold a conference on human rights in Moscow within the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe process.

Mr. Mellor: We believe that the ambitious proposal on the human dimension tabled by the Western countries offers the best means of maintaining the CSCE dialogue on human rights and contacts after Vienna. We are carefully monitoring Soviet willingness to negotiate seriously on humanitarian issues in Vienna and their human rights record. We doubt whether in current circumstances it would be appropriate to hold a humanitarian conference in Moscow.

41. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Chilean authorities since August over the continuing abuses of human rights in that country.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's ambassador repeatedly expresses our concern over human rights abuses in Chile.

Both at the General Assembly in New York on 25 September, and again in London on 23 October when my right hon. and learned Friend saw the Chilean Foreign Minister, he took the opportunity to re-emphasise our concerns, which I also discussed in detail with Senor Garcia.

70. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on human rights in Afghanistan.

Mr. Eggar: Widespread violations of human rights in Afghanistan have been documented in the interim report by Dr. Ermacora, special rapporteur of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, presented recently to the General Assembly.

IRA (Arms Supplies)

42. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will hold urgent talks with the Irish Government on the evidence that Irish nationals are obtaining arms for the Irish Republican Army from Libya, disclosed by the recent capture of the coaster Eksund off France, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We are naturally in close touch with the Irish and French authorities through normal channels. This incident demonstrates the importance of international co-operation against terrorism.

Canada

45. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to seek to visit Canada.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no immediate plans to visit Canada.

German Democratic Republic

48. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to seek to visit the German Democratic Republic.

Mrs. Chalker: The Foreign Minister of the German Democratic Republic, Herr Oskar Fischer, visited the United Kingdom in November 1986, reciprocating my right hon. and learned Friend's visit to East Berlin and the German Democratic Republic in April 1985. He hopes to take up Herr Fischer's invitation to make a second visit to the German Democratic Republic in due course.

Afghan Guerrillas

50. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any evidence of collaboration between the Government of Iran and Afghan guerrillas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Iran has consistently supported elements of the Afghan resistance, and given refuge to over 1 million Afghan refugees.

Inter-Parliamentary Union

52. Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support his Department affords to the British group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union.

Mr. Eggar: We fully support the activities of the British group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union. For example, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office provides written and oral background briefing in connection with inward and outward visits; and our posts overseas provide whatever support may be required by IPU delegations. An FCO official attends the IPU spring and autumn conferences as an adviser to the British group.

We value the contribution of the IPU to the improvement of international and bilateral relations.

EC Budget

55. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the Foreign Affairs Council's most recent consideration of the European Community budget deficit.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) on 21 October at columns 705-8.

Spain

56. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when next he intends to visit Spain.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend intends to visit Spain on 27-28 November for further discussions with the Spanish Foreign Minister in accordance with the pattern established under the Brussels agreement of 1984.

British Council

58. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the work and future funding of the British Council.

Mr. Eggar: As our response to the Foreign Affairs Committee's recent report makes clear, we attach importance to our continuing work in the field of cultural diplomacy. The British Council plays a particular role in this, as do, notably, the BBC external services. We also recognise and welcome the very great contribution of the private sector. We shall continue to allocate funds to work in the cultural field in the light of our overall foreign policy priorities and public expenditure objectives. Details of planned funding for the British Council for the period from 1988-89 to 1990-91 will be published in the public expenditure White Paper early next year.

80. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the British Council to reopen in Malta; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The British Council has no immediate plans to re-open in Malta.

East-West Relations

59. Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on the future of East-West relations.

Mr. Mellor: We welcome the prospect of the United States-Soviet summit beginning on 7 December. We hope that it will bring not only agreement on intermediate nuclear forces but further progress on measures of arms control, human rights and regional conflicts. We will continue to work for better East-West relations from our position as a stalwart European member of the North Atlantic Alliance.

Council of Ministers

62. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about matters to be discussed at the next Council of Ministers' meeting.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) on 30 October at column 479. Since this statement, the proposal on permitted radioactivity levels in foodstuffs has been added to the agenda.

Refuseniks

66. Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will seek a further opportunity of raising with the Soviet Foreign Minister the plight of those long-term refuseniks, such as Professor Alexander Lerner, who are still waiting for exit visas.

Mr. Mellor: We continue to press the Soviet authorities to allow all refuseniks to leave. We have welcomed the recent resolution of some longstanding cases, including those of Vladimir Slepak and Ida Nudel, and hope that others like Professor Lerner will be similarly successful in obtaining exit visas soon. My right hon. and learned Friend will, of course, have such cases much in mind when he next meets Mr. Shevardnadze.

China (Prime Minister's Visit)

67. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will invite Prime Minister Zhao Ziyan of China to visit Britain.

Mr. Eggar: Premier Zhao last visited Britain in 1985. We have no plans at present to invite him to make a further visit.

Cyprus

68. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last made an official visit to Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has not visited the Republic of Cyprus. The last visit by a British Minister was in 1983, before the Turkish Cypriot declaration of independence.

South Africa (Detentions)

71. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further representations have been made to the Government of the Republic of South Africa concerning the detention of children and young people in South Africa; and what response has been received from the Botha Government.

Mrs. Chalker: We have made frequent representations to the South African Government, who can be in no doubt as to our opposition to detentions without charge and our particular concern about children and young people in detention. The number of both children and adults now held in detention has declined in recent months.

Mr. Douglas Forsyth

72. Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, pursuant to his reply of 21 October, Official Report, column 770, relating to the failure of Her Majesty's Government's efforts through diplomatic means to restore Mr. Douglas Forsyth property in Cairo, Her Majesty's Government will now assume responsibility for regaining vacant possession of Mr. Forsyth's property, taken over by the Egyptian Government in 1956; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No. Following desequestration of the villa in 1960, Mr. Forsyth's late father accepted compensation from the Foreign Compensation Commission for the depreciation in the value of his property attributable to its being returned to him with a sitting tenant. Other British citizens in a similar position subsequently sold their properties without vacant possession. This option remains open to Mr. Forsyth should he fail in his current action before the Egyptian courts.

BBC External Services

74. Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to be able to announce a decision concerning the application of the BBC external services to commence a service of satellite television broadcasting.

Mr. Eggar: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister stated in her reply of 3 November to my hon. Friend, examination of the complex issues raised by the BBC proposal is not yet completed. It is, however, being given considerable attention and priority.

South Africa (Sanctions)

75. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received calling for additional sanctions by Her Majesty' Government against South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: We receive representations on South African issues from a wide spectrum of opinion, including advocates and opponents of economic sanctions.

South Africa (Death Sentences)

76. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of representations received about South Africans under sentence of death in South Africa; and what responses he is making.

Mrs. Chalker: We have received various representations about South Africans under sentence of death. We are ready to consider making appeals for clemency in cases where the crime is clearly political and there are extenuating circumstances, or where there are strong humanitarian grounds for doing so.

Settlers (Interviews)

77. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the interviews of potential settlers to the United Kingdom are conducted in the same manner regardless of their country of origin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Entry clearance officers carry out interviews of all categories of applicants without regard to the applicant's race, colour or religion.

Postal Communications

79. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on progress made at the Conference for Security and Co-operation in Europe review conference in Vienna in respect of proposals tabled by the United Kingdom delegation aimed at ensuring freedom of transit of postal communications.

Mr. Mellor: We, together with a number of Western countries, tabled a proposal promoting respect for the privacy and integrity of postal and telephonic communications at the Vienna CSCE meeting on 18 February. There appears to be broad agreement that a provision on these general lines is desirable and we are optimistic that it will feature in any final document agreed in Vienna.

In putting forward the proposal, our CSCE delegation has repeatedly drawn attention to the need for closer observation of the spirit of the convention of the Universal Postal Union and the international telecommunication conventions in the Soviet Union and other Eastern countries.

China (Ministerial Visit)

81. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when next he intends to visit the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend last visited the People's Republic of China during the state visit in October last year. He has no plans at present for a further visit.

Gulf War

84. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement about the Government's role in attempting to bring about a ceasefire between Iraq and Iran.

91. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent initiatives Her Majesty's Government has taken towards a resolution of the Iran-Iraq war.

Mr. Mellor: We played a leading role in the adoption of Security Council resolution 598 which provides a solid foundation for a lasting peace between Iran and Iraq. As permanent members of the Security Council we continue to support wholeheartedly the secretary general's efforts to obtain implementation of the resolution, including an immediate ceasefire. We are also seeking to make progress on parallel work on enforcement measures, as agreed by the Foreign Ministers of the Five on 25 September.

90. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest situation in the Gulf.

Mr. Mellor: The situation in the Gulf remains very tense. The Iraqis continue to attack Iranian shuttle tankers and oil installations, and the Iranians to retaliate against third-country shipping. We constantly urge the utmost restraint on all parties. We believe that the only effective way to reduce the tension is through the immediate and total implementation of Security Council resolution 598 by Iran and Iraq.

Gulf (Ministerial Visit)

85. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, when he next intends to visit the Gulf.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to visit the Gulf. However, I will be leaving tomorrow to visit Oman and the United Arab Emirates.

Soviet Union (Divided Families)

92. Dr. Blackburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will raise again with the Soviet Foreign Minister the question of the reunification of divided families and of particular cases of hardship, including that of the Kholmiansky family.

Mr. Mellor: We regularly make representations to the Soviet authorities on behalf of divided Soviet families and continue to raise cases like that of the Kholmianskys at every suitable opportunity. My right hon. and learned Friend will have such issues much in mind when he next meets Mr. Shevardnadze.

Arms Sales

94. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further action he proposes to take to discourage those sales of armaments which are likely to be directed to either Iran or Iraq.

Mr. Mellor: Our policy on defence sales to Iran and Iraq is already one of the strictest of any country, and there are no plans at the present time to introduce further measures. Exports of defence-related equipment are subject to stringent export licensing procedures to ensure they do not contravene the special ministerial guidelines announced in the House on 25 October 1985. We would take a very serious view of any activities in breach of those guidelines.

Consular Services

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the cost to the Exchequer of all consular services supplied by the United Kingdom to Bermuda.

Mr. Eggar: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has incurred no consular expenses in recent years on behalf of the Government of Bermuda.

Locally Engaged Staff

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what is the difference in annual pay between locally engaged staff of the same grade, in Her Majesty's embassy in the United States of America and the high commission in Guyana; and how the salaries are arrived at;

(2) what is the difference in annual pay between locally engaged staff of the same grade, in Her Majesty's United States of America embassy and the high commission in India; and how the salaries are arrived at;

(3) what is the difference in annual pay between locally engaged staff of the same grade, in Her Majesty's embassy in the United States of America and in Ethiopia; how the salaries are arrived at;

(4) what is the difference in annual pay between locally engaged staff of the same grade employed by Her Majesty's embassies in the United States of America and Somalia; how the salaries are arrived at;

(5) what is the difference in annual salary between locally engaged staff of the same grade employed by Her Majesty's embassy in the United States of America and the high commission in Australia; and how the salaries are arrived at;

(6) what is the difference in annual salary between locally engaged staff of the same grade employed by Her Majesty's embassies in the United States of America and Sweden; and how the salaries are arrived at;

(7) what is the difference in annual salary between locally engaged staff of the same grade employed by Her Majesty's embassies in the United States of America and Brazil; and how the salaries are arrived at.

Mr. Eggar: We operate a standard policy for setting salaries and conditions of service for locally-engaged staff at all British diplomatic missions overseas. Their terms of employment are set on the basis of comparison with jobs of similar responsibility among a range of selected local employers. Suitable employers for this purpose are chosen from the host Government, other diplomatic missions (including American embassies), international and local companies. Salaries and conditions are reviewed annually in London, or more often if they are subject to high inflation.

By basing salaries and conditions of service on local practice we ensure that we pay the market rate for the job. It would not be realistic to pay locally-engaged staff standard rates throughout the world because these would inevitably bear no relation to the cost of living in the country concerned or to the market rate for the job.

Not all of Her Majesty's embassies and high commissions listed in the hon. Member's questions employ staff in the same range of grades. The table shows, therefore, the range of grades represented in each mission, their rates of pay, and the equivalent rates for the same range of grades paid at Her Majesty's British embassy in Washington.

		Local Salary		Equivalent salary at British embassy Washington
Country	Range of grades	Maximum	Minimum	Maximum	Minimum
Guyana	III-Vc	1,892	527	13,739	5,277
India	I-Vc	4,465	726	26,222	5,277
Ethiopia	I-Vb	7,522	808	26,222	6,086
Somalia	II-Vc	2,789	284	16,789	5,277
Australia	I-Vb	12,935	7,808	26,222	6,086
Sweden	I(S)-Vc	16,379	6,257	30,780	5,277
Brazil	I-Vc	9,896	1,228	26,222	5,277

All salaries are shown gross before tax, and are exclusive of any allowances (e.g. family, rent etc.). They are expressed in sterling converted at the latest available exchange rate, but they are paid locally in local currency.

Torture

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government intend signing the European convention for the prevention of torture and inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment on 27 November at the opening of the convention for signature by member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the right hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan (Mr. Millan) on 28 October at column 270.

Terrorist Organisations

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether officials of his Department have ever met representatives of terrorist organisations.

Mr. Mellor: Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials meet a wide range of people during their daily work. Full details of those contacts must remain confidential. However, our policy is well known and has been made clear repeatedly. No cause can justify resorting to terrorism.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those organisations which are treated by his Department as being terrorist organisations.

Mr. Mellor: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Interests

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chairman of the Select Committee on Members' Interests, the hon. Member for Wealden, how many hon. and right hon. Members have failed to return registration forms for the Register of Members' Interests; and if he will publish a list of those Members.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

I understand that the total number of Members who have taken their seats but have not yet registered is now four. I understand from the Chairman of the Select Committee on Members' Interests that he has written to the Members concerned, reminding them of their obligation to register, and it is hoped it will shortly be possible for a complete Register to be laid before the House.

Press Gallery

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Lord Privy Seal (1) if he will list the press office staff of each Government Department who have a pass for the parliamentary Press Gallery;

(2) if he will list all those persons, other than civil servants, who have a pass to the parliamentary Press Gallery, indicating the name of their employing organisation in each case.

Mr. Wakeham: I regret that it is not possible to provide this information, since it is not the practice, on security grounds, to make public the names of individual Palace of Westminster photo-identity passholders.

Written Answers to Questions

HOME DEPARTMENT

Dangerous Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to prohibit the sale of weapons of war and other lethal or dangerous implements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The sale of firearms generally is governed by the provisions of the Firearms Act 1968, and imitation firearms by the Firearms Act 1982. Firearms legislation is currently under review and we will make an announcement about further controls shortly. We also propose in the Criminal Justice Bill to take powers to prohibit the sale of specified weapons (other than firearms) for which there is no legitimate use and to make it an offence to be in possession of a bladed or sharply pointed article in public without good reason.

Fireworks

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the numbers of known injuries or damage to property caused by the illegal use of fireworks over the last 12 months.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not available centrally on injuries or damage to property caused by the illegal use of fireworks. The only available information is that collected annually by the Department of Trade and Industry from hospitals in Great Britain on all injuries caused by fireworks during a four-week period in October and November. Eight hundred and forty-six such injuries were reported in the relevant period in 1986. Corresponding information for 1987 is not yet available.

Replica Firearms

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he will take to stop the selling of replica firearms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under the Firearms Act 1982, imitation firearms capable of ready conversion to fire live ammunition are already subject to the same stringent controls imposed on actual firearms by the Firearms Act 1968. We do not think that it would be sensible to restrict or try to control the sale or possession of toy or imitation guns which are not capable of being converted to fire live ammunition. There are already many such imitations or toys in circulation, and realistic imitations can easily be constructed by those intent on a criminal act.

Animal Welfare

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to increase the penalties available to the courts in cases of organised dog fighting and badger baiting, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government entirely share the public abhorrence of the barbaric practices of dog fighting and badger baiting. The maximum penalties for such activities, provided under the Protection of Animals Act 1911, were recently doubled, to a fine not exceeding level 6 on the standard scale (£2,000) or six months' imprisonment, or both. In the case of badgers, additional protection against cruelty is provided by the Badgers Act 1975, as amended by the Wildlife and Countryside (Amendment) Act 1985. We believe that the maximum penalties available under these Acts are substantial and appropriate to the gravity of the offences. We shall however be giving support to the proposals by my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne) to increase substantially the maximum penalties for attendance at animal fights or baiting.

Prevention of Terrorism Act 1974

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to the answer of 12 November, he will provide the information requested in relation to exclusion orders involving persons living in the west midlands for the period from the coming into force of the Prevention of Terrorism Act in 1974 until the end of 1975.

Mr. Hurd: Two people known to have been living in the west midlands were made the subject of exclusion orders under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1974 between November 1974 and the end of 1975.

Dog Excrement

Mr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has of the weight of dog excrement deposited on the streets of Britain each year; and if he will increase the penalties on dog owners who allow their pets to foul pavements.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have made no such estimate. Under existing legislation the maximum penalty which local authorities may prescribe in their byelaws for offences of this nature is a fine at level 2 on the standard scale (currently £100), and we have no plans to increase the level.

Nottinghamshire Police

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has yet decided upon the Nottinghamshire constabulary's appeal for additional police officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend will in due course decide on the application by the Nottinghamshire police authority for 63 additional police posts, in the light of the advice received from Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary. He will at the same time be considering the applications outstanding from other police authorities for increases in establishments. Since May 1979, a total of 114 additional police posts has been approved for the Nottinghamshire constabulary, and the existing establishment is 2,259.

Citizenship

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's estimate of the number of residents in the United Kingdom who are eligible to apply for registration as British citizens on or before 31 December, the proportion of these who are mentally ill and the number of mentally ill people eligible to apply who are wholly dependent on benefits or assistance.

Mr. Renton: It is not possible to give any such estimates as the necessary statistical data is not available.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) arrests, (b) prosecutions and (c) convictions there have been under the Sexual Offences Act 1985 in each identifiable area of England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: The Act came into force in September 1985. 21 prosecutions were recorded in England and Wales in 1985.

The information held centrally for 1986, which may be incomplete, is given in the table. There is no power of arrest under this Act.

[1] No prosecutions were recorded in the other 26 police force areas.

Neighbourhood Watch Schemes

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes there are in north Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that there are currently 1,135 neighbourhood watch schemes in the north Wales police area covering approximately 22,500 households, almost double the number a year ago. We are encouraged by the involvement of the community in crime prevention indicated by the increase in the number of schemes during the last 12 months.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take in the light of the recommendations in the report by Dr. Trevor Bennett relating to difficulties with neighbourhood watch schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The research carried out by the Cambridge Institute of Criminology provided some useful lessons on the design and implementation of schemes which have been studied by the Metropolitan police and the Home Office. The Metropolitan police is revising its policy guidelines on the operation of neighbourhood watch in the Metropolitan police district. The Home Office is producing a good practice guidance note for the police and members of the public taking account of Dr. Bennett's research and of the experience of other police forces and communities throughout England and Wales.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes operate according to his Department's guidelines and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Neighbourhood watch is essentially a locally based voluntary activity and it is for individual local communities and the police to develop schemes tailored to meet particular local needs and requirements. The guidelines on implementation issued by the Home Office in 1984 simply set out the basic broad concept of neighbourhood watch in order to assist this process. Information on how individual schemes operate is not held centrally.

Industrial Espionage

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been for industrial espionage and related offences in the years, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not available. It is not possible to identify separately offences involving industrial espionage.

Firearms

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the circular letter he sent to all chief officers of police, dated 8 September and signed J. H. Chilcot; and if he will make a statement on his reasons for sending the instructions contained in the letter.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A copy of the letter has been placed in the Library. Its purpose was to ask each chief officer to review his criteria under the law as it stands in respect of applications to acquire, or to continue to possess full bore self-loading rifles and carbines; and to ensure that each application was carefully scrutinised so that the chief officer could be satisfied that a good reason, commensurate with the weapon, existed for its possession and that such possession did not constitute a danger to the public safety or to the peace, as required under the Firearms Act 1968.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research has been undertaken by his Department to identify the particular areas of concern in his proposals to amend the Firearms Act 1968; and when that research was conducted.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In studying firearms controls we have drawn on experience of the operation of the existing legislation and considered the views of the police, shooting interests and a number of other bodies. We have also taken fully into account concerns expressed in Parliament and by members of the public.

DEFENCE

Aircraft Losses

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 600, if he is now in a position to supply the information previously asked for relating to aircraft losses.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1 January 1979, 156 British service personnel have lost their lives in military aircraft accidents during routine operations. In these accidents, 242 aircraft suffered irreparable damage. The costs of these aircraft, at the time of their purchase, is estimated to have been some £580 million.

NAVSTAR Guidance Satellite

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what charge is to be paid by Her Majesty's Government for the use of the NAVSTAR guidance satellite; what are the implications of this for the independence of Trident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: We do not anticipate that any charges will be imposed for the use of NAVSTAR. As Trident will not be dependent in any way on this system, there are no implications for the independence of the United Kingdom Trident force.

Chemical and Biological Research

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the contracts for chemical and biological research which his Department has placed directly or indirectly with United Kingdom universities and polytechnics; what is their total value; and if he will indicate which of these were initiated by the chemical defence establishment at Porton.

Mr. Sainsbury: The MOD currently has 77 contracts or agreements for research into chemical or biological defence with United Kingdom universities and polytechnics. The total value of these agreements and contracts is £7·8 million and all were originated by the chemical defence establishment, Porton Down. It is not our policy to give details of these contracts and agreements.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Stock Exchange, Tokyo

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to what criteria will be used in determining which four British institutions take up the Japanese offer of four seats on the Tokyo stock exchange.

Mr. Maude: The Tokyo stock exchange announced on 19 October the criteria for vetting candidates for the 22 new seats. These include the applicant's scale of business, its financial standing, its past business performance, the length of time it has engaged in securities business in Japan and its operational capability as a potential member of the exchange. A special admission fee of 500 million yen is payable, plus some additional costs. Determination of new members is subject to the approval of the exchange's ad hoc committee on membership structure and the board of governors of the exchange. The number and names of successful British candidates will not be known until next month.

Expenditure

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide estimates of his allocations for (a) regional, (b) inner city aid and (c) nationalised industries finance for 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Atkins: Information on the allocation of the total amounts provided for regional assistance and inner city aid for the three years 1988-89 to 1990-91 will be included in the public expenditure White Paper to be published in January.

The 1988-89 external financing limits for the nationalised industries sponsored by the Department were published recently in the Autumn Statement and show a total negative external financing requirement of £125 million. The Autumn Statement also gives the aggregated plans for all nationalised industries in 1989-90 and 1990-91, but I am unable at this stage to publish separate details for those nationalised industries sponsored by my Department. These will also be included in the public expenditure White Paper next January.

World Recession (Contingency Plans)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if his Department is making contingency plans to help British industry in the event of a world recession.

Mr. Atkins: My Department's policies are designed to help industry strengthen its competitiveness and ability to adapt to changes in the market, so that it can respond effectively to whatever contingencies arise.

Lonrho

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will refer the failure of the directors of Lonrho plc to comply with paragraph 43 of schedule 4 to the Companies Act 1985 in respect of the company's 1985-86 accounts to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Mr. Maude: I have given careful consideration to the issues raised in connection with Lonrho's accounts for 1985-86 and have concluded that no further action is called for.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the average sum spent per employee on education training by British manufacturing industry; and what information he has about the equivalent sums in France, West Germany and Italy.

Mr. Cope: It is estimated that roughly £160 per employee per year was spent on training by British manufacturing industry in 1984. Direct comparison of this figure with spending by companies overseas is not possible. Better estimates of costs and volumes of training in Britain are expected to be available in 1988 as part of the study of funding of vocational education and training currently being undertaken by the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps Her Majesty's Government propose to take, in particular using tax incentives, to impress training expenditure in British manufacturing industry.

Mr. Cope: Employers have the chief responsibility for meeting their own skill needs. The Government have already given a lead by their own investment in training unemployed people and school leavers.

Special tax arrangements to encourage employers to provide training for their staff already exist. To make these more widely known the Manpower Services Commission plans to publish a booklet in December entitled "Tax, Training and Education: A Guide for Employers, Education and Training Providers".

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Capital Development Loans

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what environmental considerations are taken into account when capital development loans are agreed either directly or through multilateral agencies.

Mr. Chris Patten: The environmental factors needing consideration vary depending on the nature of the project being supported and its proposed location. In our bilateral programmes project managers are required to operate in accordance with written guidance and a checklist, which I shall send to the hon. Member. The guidance is currently being reviewed.

Multilateral agencies are responsible for appraising their own proposed investments. Her Majesty's Government have made it clear to the management of those to which we belong that we expect them to take full account of environmental factors, and to have operational guidelines for their staff and consultants. We will continue to monitor their practices in this regard.

Grande Carajas Project

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what attitude Her Majesty's Government's representatives on the World Bank took on the question of the loan to Brazil for the Grande Carajas project.

Mr. Chris Patten: It is not the policy of Her Majesty's Government to disclose the line taken by our executive director in discussions in the World Bank's board.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

University Veterinary Schools

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply of 2 July, Official Report, column 140, whether, in the light of progress made by the veterinary departments of the Universities of Glasgow and Edinburgh in their plans for closer co-operation, the University Grants Committee's review will now be confined to the four English universities with veterinary schools.

Mr. Jackson: I understand the University Grants Committee will shortly be deciding the coverage of the review of veterinary education in the light of the proposals recently submitted by the Universities of Glasgow and Edinburgh.

Education Act 1980 (Appeals)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list, by local authority, the number of appeals under the Education Act 1980, for each year since 1983, together with the school population for each authority listed.

Mr. Dunn: Information is not available in the form requested.

The appeal arrangements set out in the Education Act 1980 applied for the first time to school admissions for September 1982. From informal inquiries made of local education authorities in England at the time, I understand that in 1983 about 10,000 parental appeals were heard against a decision not to offer a place at the school of their choice. Similar inquiries in 1985 suggested a figure of 9,000 appeals.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the distribution of the special additional allocations of £9·4 million for education capital expenditure in 1987-88 which he announced on 3 November.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Local education authorities have today been informed of their supplementary allocations of prescribed capital expenditure for 1987-88. These are as follows:

PRIME MINISTER

Corfe Mullen

Q19. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Corfe Mullen in the constituency of Dorset, North.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Greenock and Port Glasgow (Enterprise Zone)

Q32. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will take steps in the near future to facilitate the creation of an enterprise zone in Greenock and Port Glasgow.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 5 November, at column 805.

Education Bill

Q40. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her reply to a supplementary question asked by the right hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) on 29 October, Official Report, column 449, Her Majesty's Government propose to include provisions for Northern Ireland in the Education Bill and in any other forthcoming United Kingdom legislation.

The Prime Minister: The forthcoming Education Bill will not generally extend to Northern Ireland, though legislation enacted for Great Britain, normally sets the pattern for Northern Ireland. Such comparable legislation, like most other legislation for Northern Ireland, would be enacted by Order in Council.

Pulloxhill

Q60. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Pulloxhill in the county of Bedfordshire.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Wales

Q74. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Wales.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Leith

Q82. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Leith.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Inner-city Areas

Q87. Mr. Heffer: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her programme for visits to all inner-city areas.

The Prime Minister: In September I undertook a number of such visits, including to Glasgow, Teesside and the west midlands. I visited factories, housing projects, enterprise zones, and urban development corporations, and met many local people and their representatives.

Warwickshire

Q102. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Warwickshire.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Sir Phillip Woodfield

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will amend the terms of reference of the staff counsellor for the security and intelligence services, Sir Phillip Woodfield, so as to allow him to act retrospectively and counsel past employees of the service.

The Prime Minister: The staff counsellor is not precluded from counselling former members of the security and intelligence services, where appropriate.

Richmond Yard

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister how many Ministers have rooms in the Richmond yard development; and what is the total office space allocated to them.

The Prime Minister: The six Ministers at the Department of Health and Social Security are to move to Richmond House and will occupy rooms in the restored Georgian building. The total office space to be occupied by Ministers is 3,127 sq ft.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the numbers of civil servants in each grade, together with the average space allocated to them, in the Department of Health and Social Security, Welsh Office, Cabinet Office and Inland Revenue, respectively, in the Richmond yard development.

The Prime Minister: Department of Health and Social Security staff are moving in two phases. The first group, which is due to move by the end of 1987, will total about 174, and the details are as follows. The exact number who will take up occupancy by the end of the second phase, due in March 1988, is not yet decided.

Grade	Number	Total space for grade (sq ft)	Average (sq ft)
Grades 1-3 and equivalents	11	4,785	435
Grade 4	1	400	400
Grade 5	4	950	237
Grade 6	—	—	—
Grade 7	9	1,450	161
Senior Executive Officer	9	1,157	128
Higher Executive Officer	14	1,728	123
Executive Officer	21	2,626	125
Administrative Officer	37	3,435	93
Administrative Assistant	13	1,348	103
Senior Personal Secretary/ Personal Secretary/Typist	25	1,930	77
Non clerical	30	3,897	130
	174	23,706

The Cabinet Office has been allocated 4,500 sq ft, the Welsh Office 3,000 sq ft, and the Inland Revenue 2,000 sq ft. Details of their occupancy are not yet available.

European Council

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the proposals she intends to submit to the December meeting of the European Council on budgetary control and the common agricultural policy.

The Prime Minister: At the European Council I shall continue to make clear the need for agreement on effective and binding control over Community spending, in particular agricultural spending, through the strenghtening of budgetary discipline and the introduction of stabilisers on agricultural commodities.

State Visit (Cancellation)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what was the cost of the preparations for the cancelled state visit of the President of Italy; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: President Cossiga, to his very great regret, was obliged to cancel his visit because of domestic political circumstances.

The cost to British Government funds of the preparations was about £112,000.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 19 November.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 19 November.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 19 November.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 19 November.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 19 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. I later visited the scene of last night's terrible fire at King's Cross, where I met representatives of the emergency services. I also visited some of the injured at University College hospital, as well as members of the hospital staff. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

ENERGY

Coal Industry (Investment)

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what amount of capital investment and capital repayment charges are being paid currently by British Coal in respect of collieries which closed (a) since 1960, (b) since 1985 and (c) at any time.

Mr. Michael Spicer: £415 million and £450 million of the British Coal Corporation's debt was written off in the capital reconstructions under the Coal Industry Acts of 1965 and 1973 respectively. In more recent years, the book value of closed collieries has been written off at the time of closure by means of a terminal depreciation charge. Government deficit grant has been made available to cover these charges, interest on borrowing, and other costs where they have not been met from the corporation's revenues. It follows that the corporation has been carrying no continuing financial burdens in respect of such collieries.

CEGB

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Parkinson: I meet Lord Marshall regularly. A wide range of topics relating to the industry are discussed.

Alternative Sources of Electricity

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of his Department's research and development expenditure was devoted to alternative sources of electricity generation during the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department's expenditure on non-nuclear research development and demonstration in 1986-87 was £45·4 million of which £7·6 million supported projects concerning alternative energy sources capable of electricity generation.

Information

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what advertising agents have been appointed by his Department, or by the Central Office of Information on behalf of his Department, to handle campaigns involving the communication of information on subjects for which his Department is responsible to Parliament during the year 1985-86; what was the subject of each campaign; and how much was spent on each campaign.

Mr. Parkinson: Advertising agencies appointed during 1985-86 to handle advertising for my Department by agency, campaign and expenditure are shown in the table. The totals may include some promotional expenditure besides advertising such as seminars, exhibitions and leaflets. The figures provided are in full cost terms including VAT where applicable. Expenditure in 1985-86 was higher than usual because of my Department's promotion of Energy Efficiency Year 1986.

Advertising Agency and Campaign	Amount spent with Agency £
Saatchi & Saatchi Compton—Energy Efficiency	4,267,000
Golly Slater & Partners—Cardiff Energy Action	109,900
Charles Barker—Offshore Supplies Office	96,000
Doyle Dane Bernbach—Energy Saver Shows	12,255

CEGB (Capital Expenditure)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the total capital expenditure by the Central Electricity Generating Board in each financial year since 1975-76 in constant prices (using implied GDP deflator at factor costs) taking 1986-87 as the base.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The capital expenditure figures requested by the hon. Member at 1986-87 prices using implied GDP deflator at factor cost are as follows:

	£ million
1975-76	1,217
1976-77	1,248
1977-78	1,045
1978-79	967
1979-80	985
1980-81	954
1981-82	1,070
1982-83	1,086
1983-84	1,098
1984-85	953
1985-86	764
1986-87	616

Oil Exploration Licences

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy for what purpose he has granted an exploration licence to Seismograph Services (England) Ltd. on behalf of the licence holder Fina Explorations Ltd. in respect of the parishes of Whitmore, Swynnerton, Keele, Astbury cum Morton, Alsager and the boroughs of Newcastle, Congleton and Stoke City; and what precise consultation he has had with the county councils on this matter.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The parishes and boroughs listed by the hon. Member are covered by petroleum exploration licence EXL 067, operated by Fina Petroleum. The choice of seismic contractor is a commercial matter for the licensee. Prior to carrying out any seismic surveys under the licence the licensee is required to consult with the relevant mineral planning authorities, who are the Staffordshire and Cheshire county councils.

Continental Shelf (Orders)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will explain the basis upon which his Department calculates the figures for the United Kingdom share of orders placed on the United Kingdom continental shelf.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The figures for the United Kingdom share of orders placed on the United Kingdom continental shelf are based on data collated from returns supplied by each operator under a voluntary arrangement agreed with the United Kingdom Offshore Operators Association.

The United Kingdom share represents the value of the contracts and main sub-contracts placed with United Kingdom-based companies which through employment, manufacturing or sub-contracting make a substantial contribution to the United Kingdom economy.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his written answer of 5 November to his hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest, Official Report, column 794, he will state what further meetings of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council are planned; and what dates and agenda have been fixed.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No meeting of the Council is planned at the moment. The co-ordinating committee is due to meet shortly, although the date and agenda have not yet been fixed.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will initiate at the next meeting of the Council of European Foreign Ministers a task force of experts to investigate recent evidence that weapons grade nuclear materials from facilities under safeguards in the European Community have been illicitly sold on the black market in the Sudan; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has about alleged illegal attempts by the Governments of (i) Israel, (ii) Libya, (iii) Iran, (iv) Iraq, (v) India, (vi) Argentina, (vii) South Africa, and (viii) Pakistan to obtain unsafeguarded plutonium and enriched uranium on the black market, particularly in Khartoum, which have been diverted from facilities in the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have no evidence to support allegations that weapons grade nuclear material has been on sale in the Sudan or indeed elsewhere. We also have full confidence in the stringent security precautions and accounting systems that exist at United Kingdom and other Community nuclear installations.

South Africa

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British nationals have been (a) arrested, (b) tried and (c) imprisoned in South Africa for each year since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Waste Disposal

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he is willing to hold a public inquiry regarding the proposal to dump domestic waste at Magheramorne quarry, Larne.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland will consult Larne borough council shortly on the planning application for the proposed waste disposal facility at Magheramorne quarry. The Department does not consider that, at this late stage in the processing of this application, a public inquiry would be warranted. Matters relating to leachate, etc., may be dealt with under any water act consent, and the operation of the waste disposal site and measures to prevent public health nuisance would be controlled by licence issued by Larne borough council.

Divis Flats

Mr. James Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place a copy of the "Divis Biannual Review", presented to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive board in April, in the Library.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chairman of the Housing Executive who has advised me that no biannual or other review of the decision to replace the Divis complex has been carried out. The document presented to the Housing Executive board in April 1987 was an internal planning report.

WALES

Listed Buildings

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many listed buildings in Wales have been downgraded by Cadw in the years 1984, 1985 and 1986, respectively.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend downgraded one listed building in 1984, seven in 1985 and four in 1986.

Craig y Nôs Castle

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will authorise an independent inspection and valuation of the painting of Dame Adelina Patti in Craig y Nôs castle, to establish whether the painting was painted by either Friedrich Karl Steinhardt or Jakob Steinhardt.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A valuation of the portrait has been made by Messrs. Phillips, Fine Art Auctioneers, who have reported that the painting is by Friedrich Karl Steinhardt.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were self-employed in Wales in 1981; how many are self-employed at the latest recorded date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is estimated that there were 115,000 self-employed people in Wales at June 1981; the figure for June 1987 is provisionally estimated to be 162,000.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were in full-time employment in Clwyd in May 1979; how many are in full-time employment now; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The number of people in full-time employment in Clwyd in May 1979 and now is not available. The nearest available figures, for June 1978 and September 1984, show that the number of full-time employees in employment (which excludes the self-employed) in Clwyd was 103,942 and 90,618 respectively.

Haemophiliacs

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many haemophiliacs in Wales are known to be infected with HIV; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Grist: The most recent information available indicates that 49 haemophiliacs in Wales have been identified as being HIV positive.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many haemophiliacs in Wales have developed (a) full-blown AIDS, (b) prodromal symptoms of AIDS and (c) HIV positivity;

(2) what information he has regarding the number of haemophiliacs treated in Wales who have received blood products contaminated with the AIDS virus.

Mr. Grist [holding answers 12 November 1987]: Haemophiliacs are treated at a number of centres throughout Wales and information on those who have received blood products contaminated with the human immuno-deficiency virus (HIV) or who have developed prodromal symptoms is not held centrally.

The most recent information available indicates that 49 persons in Wales with haemophilia have been identified as being HIV positive. It is not possible to estimate the number who will go on to develop AIDS. I understand that fewer than 10 haemophiliacs in Wales have been identified as having developed AIDS.

Rating Reform

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of poorer households in Wales with an income of less than £75 per week, after taxes, referred to in the document "Paying for Local Government—The Need For Change"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The estimated number of households in Wales with an income after taxes of less than £75 a week is 187,000.

GEC Ltd., Treforest

Mr. John: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what further attempts he proposes to make to avert the closure of the GEC factory at Treforest; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The decision to close the Treforest operation is one for the commercial judgment of the company. None the less, the company is aware of the regional assistance which may be available towards a project which can meet the relevant criteria and safeguard the jobs at risk.

Mr. John: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the meetings he, other Ministers or officials in his Department have had with officials of GEC Ltd. regarding its intended closure of its Treforest factory; what information he has recived from the company as to the likely number of job losses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Neither I nor other Ministers have met the company since the announcement of the closure, but officials of our Department have spoken to representatives of the company about the intended closure.

The Welsh Office stands ready to discuss with the company, or any other party, proposals which may lead to the safeguarding of the 233 jobs that may be lost.

Education Act 1980

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will list by local authority the number of appeals under the Education Act 1980 for each year since 1983, together with the school population for each authority listed beside it.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information on appeals by parents who fail to obtain their first choice of school for their children is not collected centrally.

Welsh Sports Council

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what remuneration the current chairman of the Welsh Sports Council receives; and how many days per month he is expected to devote to the business of the Welsh Sports Council.

Mr. Grist: The chairman of the Sports Council for Wales receives £7,572 per annum for a time commitment of one and a half days per week.

EMPLOYMENT

Hotels (Classification)

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his reply of 13 July, Official Report, column 349, what is the latest information on the numbers of establishments accepted for Crown hotel classification in each category; how many hotels have failed to meet the specification; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: According to the English Tourist Board, the information as at 20 October 1987 is as follows:

Category	Number
Listed	2,042
1 Crown	580
2 Crowns	2,802
3 Crowns	1,709
4 Crowns	1,134
5 Crowns	236
Total	8,503

Of those establishments which have applied, 105 have failed to meet the criteria for registration.

The English Tourist Board, in conjunction with the Wales Tourist Board, proposes to consult the industry about improvements to the scheme, including the introduction of an element of qualitative assessment.

A consultation document outlining a range of options for the future development of the scheme is being prepared.

Career Development Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applications for loans under the career development scheme have been made to date in each pilot area and in total; and in each case how many were rejected.

Mr. Cope: As at 16 November 1987 the total numbers of applications and formal rejections notified to my department by participating banks for each of the four pilot areas and in total was as follows:

	Number of career development loan applications	Number of formal rejections
Aberdeen	159	91
Bristol and Bath	202	62
Greater Manchester	385	245
Reading and Slough	170	35
Total of four areas	916	433

The participating banks receive a greater number of additional inquiries about the scheme which are withdrawn before being formally rejected. Detailed statistics are not kept on these.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many loans between (a) £500 to £1,000, (b) £1,000 to £2,000, (c) £2,000 to £3,000, (d) £3,000 to £4,000 and (e) £4,000 to £5,000 have been made under the career development scheme to date in each of the pilot areas and in total;

(2) how many loans have been made under the career development scheme in each pilot area and in total to date, the value of which are (a) between £300 and £500 and (b) less than £300, respectively.

Mr. Cope: At 16 November 1987, the number of career development loans notified to my Department by the participating banks was as follows:

£	Aberdeen	Bristol/Bath	Greater Manchester	Reading/Slough	Total
300-499	2	15	12	1	30
500-1,000	20	40	69	36	165
1,001-2,000	6	22	22	30	80
2,001-3,000	13	26	21	24	84
3,001-4,000	14	14	8	11	47
4,001-5,000	13	23	8	33	77
All values	68	140	140	135	483

£500 was the minimum level for career development loans from the start of the scheme on 15 April 1986. This was reduced to £300 in November 1986.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the career development scheme to date in each of the pilot areas.

Mr. Cope: The career development loan scheme has made an encouraging start in all the pilot areas. Greater Manchester, with the largest population, continues to attract most applications but the level of interest has steadily grown in the three other areas.

A wide variety of training has been made possible by the scheme, including post-graduate courses in management, personnel and marketing; courses to gain professional qualifications in law and accountancy; secretarial, driver training, hairdressing, and hotel and catering courses. Over three quarters of trainees completing their courses are already in employment and over half of these were unemployed when they made their applications.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many loans have been made under the career development scheme to date in each pilot area and in total;

(2) what is the total value of loans made under the career development scheme to date in each pilot area and in total.

Mr. Lee: At 16 November 1987 the number and value of career development loans notified to my Department by participating banks for each of the four pilot areas and in total was as follows:

	Number of loans	Value of loans £
Aberdeen	68	175,604
Bristol and Bath	140	301,555
Greater Manchester	140	210,503
Reading and Slough	135	332,020
TOTAL	483	1,019,682

Sweatshops (Leicester)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will investigate alleged sweatshop conditions in Leicester.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive is investigating and will continue to investigate alleged sweatshop conditions in the city of Leicester.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the youth training schemes provided at the latest available date, together with the number of places each is offering, for the area of the parliamentary constituency of Chelmsford.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The YTS managing agents, and the places offered by each, at October 1987 in the Chelmsford local authority district, which includes the Chelmsford parliamentary constituency, are as follows:

Provider	Places offered
British Horse Society	28

Labour Statistics

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people aged 16 and 17 years were unemployed in October 1987 in the area of the parliamentary constituency of Chelmsford.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. On 8 October 1987 the number of unemployed claimants in the Chelmsford parliamentary constituency aged 16 was 47. Those aged 17 similarly numbered 47.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will tabulate in full such research findings as may be available to him showing what proportion of the reduction in unemployment quarterly since June 1986 comes from (i) increased employment in service industries, (ii) a slower rate of job loss in manufacturing, (iii) the expansion of special measures, and within that (iv) the higher availability for work rules and (v) the application of the restart programme.

Mr. Cope: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment to the hon. Member on Wednesday 28 October at column 289.

Health and Safety Inspectors

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many health and safety inspectors' hours are spent each week on average, inspecting or monitoring premises and conditions of work for (a) YTS trainees, (b) community programme workers and (c) JTS workers in the Dundee area.

Mr. Nicholls: The information as requested is not available. When carrying out inspections health and safety inspectors examine the health and safety conditions of all persons, regardless of whether they are engaged in Government schemes or not. No distinction is therefore made between those premises at which people are engaged on YTS, community programme schemes and the job training scheme, and those where they are not.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many health and safety inspectors were employed in Dundee during each year since 1974.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of factory and agricultural inspectors in the Dundee local office of the HSE's Scotland east area office at 1 April are as follows:

	Factory inspectors	Agricultural inspectors
1 April 1985	3	1
1 April 1986	3	1
1 April 1987	3	1
1 November 1987	3	1

Figures for earlier years are not available.

Training Schemes

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library his study of the effect on unemployment levels of Government schemes.

Mr. Cope: We have carried out a number of evaluations of our various employment, enterprise and training measures. If the hon. Member could specify precisely which study he is referring to, I will look into the matter.

THE ARTS

Museums and Galleries

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many people visited museums and galleries, outside London, in each of the past three years.

Mr. Luce: Information held on the Museums Association database indicates that some 38 million visits were made to museums and galleries outside Greater London in 1985 and 39·7 million visits in 1986. Information for 1984 is not available.

Regional Expenditure

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Arts what proportion of his Department's expenditure, during the last year for which figures are available, was spent in each of the standard regions in England and Wales.

Mr. Luce: The total subsidies made available by the Arts Council to the English RAA's and by the Welsh Arts Council to the Welsh RAA's in the financial year 1986-87 is as follows:

	£	Per cent. (of £135·6 million) ACGB Grant for 1986-87
England
Eastern Arts	1,715,344	1·265
East Midlands	1,809,737	1·335

National Heritage Memorial Fund

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will list in the Official Report the members of the board of the National Heritage Memorial Fund.

Mr. Luce: The current trustees of the National Heritage Memorial Fund are:

The Right Hon. Lord Charteris of Amisfield (Chairman)
The Baroness Airey of Abingdon
The Most Hon. Marquess of Anglesey
Professor F. G. T. Holliday
Sir Martin Jacomb
Clive Jenkins, Esq.
Charles Kinahan, Esq.
Michael McCrum, Esq.
Sir Norman Macfarlane
Professor B. R. Morris
Commander L. M. M. Saunders-Watson

SCOTLAND

Abortions

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many abortions were performed on resident and non-resident women during 1986 at each of the following gestational ages: 18 weeks, 19 weeks, 20 weeks, 21 weeks, 22 weeks, 23 weeks, 24 weeks and 25 weeks and over, respectively; on what grounds these were performed; what were the ages of the women; and what was the number performed in National Health Service establishments and the number performed in approved places.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There were no abortions performed in approved places at these gestational ages in 1986. Of the 160 performed in NHS establishments, one was for a non-resident woman. The numbers by gestational age and grounds and by age group are set out in the tables.

Dial-a-ride

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many people are being served by dial-a-ride operations (a) in Scotland and (b) in Greater Glasgow;

(2) how many dial-a-ride services are at present operating (a) in Scotland and (b) in Greater Glasgow.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information is not held centrally about Dial-a-Ride services or the number of people using them. Two such services, however — Paisley-Pollok and Easterhouse — are known to be operating with support from Strathclyde regional council.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average of National Health Service beds daily available in the hospitals of Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 3 November to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) at column 684.

Rates and Water

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons in (a) each district and islands council area, (b) each regional authority area and (c) Scotland receive (i) rates rebates and (ii) water rates rebates; and if he will estimate (iii) the total amount paid on rebates and (iv) the total number of rebate recipients for each of the above.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is set out in the table. Figures at district level are not readily available.

Note: Columns do not all add owing to rounding.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons in (a) Scotland, (b) Fife and (c) Dunfermline district currently receive rebates in respect of water rates; and if he will estimate (i) the total amount paid in rebates and (ii) the total number of people on full rebates.

Mr. Lang: In 1985-86, the latest year for which final figures are available 325,994 households in Scotland including 16,558 households in Fife, were in receipt of water rate rebates. The total sum involved was £6,799,000 for Scotland of which £344,000 went to householders in Fife. Figures for Dunfermline district and for the number of people on full rebates are not available.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the current (a) water rate figure and (b) general domestic rate figure for all Scottish regional and island council areas; and if he will give the average figure for Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is set out in the table below.

Rating Reform

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate, based on figures for the current financial year, the amount of community charge payable by senior citizens in Edinburgh liable for 20 per cent. of the community charge.

Mr. Lang: The estimated total level of personal community charge, including community water charge, required in Edinburgh to replace domestic rate income in 1987-88 would be £289.

A person on the maximum level of rebate would have to pay a contribution of some £53 towards his personal community charge liability, plus in appropriate cases the community water charge of £26. Under the reformed social security system to be introduced on 1 April 1988 the minimum contribution towards rates payments, and the overall amount made available through supplementary benefit towards water charges, will be taken into account in setting income support levels. Similar principles will apply from April 1989 in respect of the community charge system.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now list the estimated community charge figure based on returns for the current financial year for all regional and islands authority areas; and if he will give the estimated average community charge figure for Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 13 July 1987 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar).

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy towards the possession of (a) identity numbers and (b) identity cards by those liable to pay the community charge.

Mr. Lang: The administration of the community charge system will not require individuals to use identity numbers or identity cards.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is Her Majesty's Government's contribution to the Scottish Development Agency budget in 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89 at (a) current prices and (b) constant 1987 prices.

Mr. Lang: The information for 1986-87 and 1987-88 is set out in the table:

	Current prices £ million	1987-88 prices £ million
1986-87	89·2	93·0
1987-88	94·9	94·9

As is usual, the information about the industry programme for 1988-89 will be published in the public expenditure White Paper. Further details will be given in the Scottish commentary and in the annual Supply Estimates.

Industry (Aid)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will itemise his allocation for aid to industry for 1988-89.

Mr. Lang: Information on the public expenditure plans for industry will be contained, as usual, in the annual public expenditure White Paper. As in previous years, my right hon. and learned Friend will supplement this information with greater detail in his annual commentary on the Scotland public expenditure programme. Full details will, of course, be contained in the annual Supply Estimates.

Health Service (Rates)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total amount of rates or payments in lieu of rates, paid (a) by each health board in the most recent financial year and (b) in respect of other National Health Service property not attributable to any particular health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Total payments in lieu of rates made by each health board in 1986-87 are shown in the table below. Other significant NHS property in Scotland comprises that of the Common Services Agency, the National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for Scotland, and the State hospital Carstairs. Amounts paid in 1986-87 were £1·310 million, £0·020 million and £0·272 million respectively.

Fish Farms

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to bringing the location and control of marine fish farms within the planning system.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government have no plans at present to legislate to extend planning controls to offshore fish farm developments. My right hon. and learned Friend is considering representations he has received about the need for control from Highland regional council and others. A response will be sent to the regional council, and to the hon. Members who have supported its representations, as soon as possible.

Manufacturing (Electricity Prices)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact on manufacturing industries in the Greater Glasgow area of the proposed increases in the price of electricity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The recently announced proposals to increase electricity prices in England and Wales next year do not apply to Scotland. The setting of electricity tariffs in Scotland is a matter for the commercial judgement of the electricity boards and it will be for them to announce decisions about any revisions when these have been reached.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many homes in Scotland are (a) amenity houses and (b) sheltered houses; and what percentage of households in Scotland with at least one pensioner living in them are owner-occupiers, compared with the percentage figure in England and Wales.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information is provided by local authorities to the Scottish Development Department on the numbers of amenity and sheltered houses in their areas at 31 March each year. The totals of 1987 figures received, and the most up-to-date information submitted for nine authorities who have yet to supply 1987 figures, are as follows:

Type of Housing	Provision (dwellings)
Amenity	9,486
Sheltered	24,398

The corresponding figures for 1979 were 3,363 and 7,031 respectively.

Other sources of statistical information suggest that the numbers of dwellings provided by the private sector are understated in these figures. The information requested on households with at least one pensioner living in them is not available.

Dundee

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, at 1987 prices, spending on (a) regional development grants and (b) regional selective assistance in the Dundee district authority area for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: Total payments of Regional Selective Assistance (RSA) and new Regional Development Grant (RDG), at estimated 1987 prices, to firms in Dundee District between 1979-80 and 1986-87 are set out in the table:

Year	RSA (£ million)	New RDG (£ million)
1979-80	1·1	—
1980-81	1·7	—
1981-82	1·8	—
1982-83	1·5	—
1983-84	2·5	—
1984-85	2·8	—
1985-86	2·2	0·4
1986-87	2·8	2·3

Information under the old regional development grant scheme is only available in respect of payments of over £25,000 to individual businesses in the Dundee local employment office area. These are given in the table:

Payments of old RDG at estimated 1987 prices

Year	(£ million)
1979-80	2·0
1980-81	2·0
1981-82	2·4
1982-83	3·4
1983-84	5·3
1984-85	6·6
1985-86	3·7
1986-87	4·6

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the rate support grant paid to Dundee district council in each of the financial years since 1978 expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms expressed at 1986-87 prices; and what percentage of total spending in each year this represents.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is set out in the table:

Dundee	R.S.G. cash £000	R.S.G. 1986-87 cost terms £000	Percentage of relevant expenditure Per cent.
1978-79	4,534	8,822	48
1979-80	4,795	7,982	42
1980-81	4,941	6,938	35
1981-82	4,595	5,876	29
1982-83	5,314	6,339	31
1983-84	5,805	6,621	32
1984-85	5,550	6,063	27
1985-86	6,504	6,700	30
1986-87	6,522	6,522	28
1987-88	7,086	6,781	25

Notes:

1. The figures for the years 1978-79 to 1983-84 are final. Those for 1984-85 to 1987-88 will be varied following the next rate support grant order. The figures reflect selective and general abatement of grant, except that for 1987-88 no adjustment has been made for grant penalties since they will be restored for authorities which bring their expenditure down to guidelines on outturn.

2. The G.D.P. deflator has been used to convert R.S.G. to 1986-87 prices. The expenditure figures used in the final column are those for relevant expenditure including loan charges.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what capital allocation was authorised for housing purposes to the Dundee district council in each year since 1978, expressed in cash terms and real terms at 1986-87 prices.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Gross housing capital allocations[1] to the City of Dundee district council have been as follows:

	Cash Prices £ million	[2] 1986-87 prices £ million
1978-79	5·575	10·847
1979-80	8·650	14·400

Accident Statistics

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the lastest notified number of accidents to (a) YTS trainees, (b) community programme workers and (c) JTS workers in the Dundee area.

Mr. Lang: Since the beginning of January 1987 notified accidents in Dundee number 43 among YTS trainees and two among community programme workers. There have been no notified accidents among new JTS workers.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the percentage of employers in Dundee who are paying YTS trainees (a) the basic rate, (b) topping-up payments by less than £5 per week and (c) topping-up payments by more than £5 per week.

Mr. Lang: This information is not collected.

Job Training Scheme

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many places are currently available on the job training scheme in the Dundee area; and how many of these were occupied in the most recent period for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: In Dundee 600 new JTS contracted places are currently available, of which 130 places were filled at 12 November 1987.

Low Pay

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the number of workers in Dundee who earn less than £3 per hour and the percentage which they constitute of the total work force; and if he will estimate the corresponding figures for each of the last eight years.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available.

Edinburgh Royal Infirmary

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing, for each year since 1979, (a) the number of National Health Service in-patient beds in Royal Edinburgh infirmary and (b) the number of National Health Service staff, in terms of full-time equivalents.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 October 1987]: The information for the Edinburgh royal infirmary is as follows:

Year	Average available staffed beds	Staff in post[1]
1979	974	[2]2,076·4
1980	961	2,373·6
1981	975	2,494·2
1982	982	2,573·7
1983	987	2,592·9
1984	971	2,513·5
1985	962	2,554·1
1986	962	2,529·3

[1] The conditioned hours for nurses changed from 40 in 1979 to 37·5 hours thereafter. Nurses in training are excluded.

[2] Medical and dental staff figures for 1979 are not readily available centrally. There were 358·6 such staff in post in 1980.

Patients (Statistics)

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients, excluding deceased patients, who were in-patients for over one year, were discharged in each year since 1982; what were the destinations of these patients; and what arrangements have been made to maintain contact with them.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 10 November 1987]: The type of information held centrally about discharges differs between general hospitals and psychiatric hospitals in the NHS in Scotland.

The available information relating to discharges and destinations of patients discharged from general hospitals after a stay of more than one year is as follows:

	1982	1983	1984	1985
Discharge home	157	159	214	144
Discharge to convalescent hospital/home	43	36	34	37

Discharge to local authority care	71	44	82	50
Transfer to other specialty in same hospital	61	49	69	61
Other	28	22	32	31
Total	860	1,057	1,019	961

Information relating to discharges, destinations and after-care arrangements of patients discharged after a stay of more than one year in a mental illness or mental handicap hospital is set out in the tables. Columns 1-10 in each table refer to after-care arrangements as follows:

1. general practitioner
2. out-patient clinic
3. local authority mental health services
4. community mental health services
5. day hospital
6. other form of after-care
7. statutory guardianship
8. more than one after-care arrangement
9. no after-care arrangement
10. not known.

Equal Opportunities

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the proportion of working time allocated to his departmental equal opportunities officer for equal opportunities duties, (b) the other duties carried out by that officer, (c) the proportion, and the amount, of the departmental budget allocated to equal opportunities work, (d) the number of occasions when the departmental equal opportunities officer meets similar officers from other Governmental Departments and (e) the guidelines issued to departmental training officers and equal opportunities officers to promote the use of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act; and what action has been taken to facilitate job-share, part-time working and parental leave.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 12 November 1987]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) on 17 November.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions the Scottish Development Agency has employed consultants; and what were the levels of fees paid to these consultants in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 November 1987]: The precise number of occasions cannot be provided without incurring disproportionate costs, but the amounts of fees in the years in question were:

	Capital	Revenue	Total
1982-83	9,308,420	4,265,553	13,574,473
1983-84	8,329,566	5,086,337	13,415,903
1984-85	10,167,582	4,953,324	15,120,906
1985-86	10,816,582	8,568,179	19,384,767
1986-87	12,568,022	6,851,863	19,419,885

Notes:

A. The capital column includes fees to civil engineers, architects, surveyors, heating and electrical consultants.

B. The revenue column includes fees on research and development, advisory services, appraisal and administration (ie tax and accountancy advice, pension and legal consultancies).

NATIONAL FINANCE

Lord Chancellor

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the minimum tenure of the post of Lord Chancellor which entitles the occupant to the full pension entitlement which accompanies that post.

Mr. Brooke: The holder of the office of Lord Chancellor is entitled to draw his pension after one day's service: this entitlement was established before 1830.

Treasury Indemnity Certificates

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will itemise the insurance benefits of and risks covered by the treasury indemnity certificate provided for employees of the Arts Council and other non-departmental public bodies; and in respect of the Arts Council, if the treasury certificate covers (a) claims for death or injury of persons visiting the South Bank centre, (b) sickness or injury of employees when abroad on official business and (c) fidelity cover for employees who handle cash or programme computers.

Mr. Brooke: The issue of exemption certificates to individual non-departmental public bodies under the Employers' Liability (Compulsory Insurance) (Amendment) Regulations 1974 is the responsibility of their sponsoring Departments. A certificate provides exemption from the statutory requirement for an employer to insure against liabilities for employees' injury or disease arising out of their employment in Great Britain. Other risks, including those mentioned in relation to the Arts Council, are subject to the rule that Government do not normally insure against the risk of any loss which would fall directly or indirectly on the Consolidated Fund.

Industrial Production

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the level of industrial production; and how this compares with June 1979.

Mr. Major: The index of output of the production industries was 113·8 in September 1987. In June 1979 it stood at 111·1.

World Economy

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet his counterparts in the major industrialised countries to discuss prospects for the world economy.

Mr. Lilley: The Finance Ministers of the major industrialised nations meet from time to time to discuss a range of international economic issues.

Public Borrowing

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the main factors currently influencing the level of public borrowing in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Major: Buoyant tax revenues from a healthy growing economy and success in containing public expenditure within plans mean that the public sector borrowing requirement for 1987-88 is now forecast to be over £2 billion lower than in 1986-87.

International Financial Situation

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next intends to meet the United States Treasury Secretary to discuss the international financial situation.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor meets the United States Treasury Secretary from time to time to discuss a range of international economic issues.

Central Unit for Purchasing

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the annual cost and the present staff complement of the Government central unit for purchasing.

Mr. Brooke: The budget for the central unit on purchasing for the current financial year is £461,000 and the present staff complement is 12.

Bank of England

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next plans to meet the Governor of the Bank of England to discuss its banking activities.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor regularly meets the Governor to discuss a wide range of matters.

Unit Labour Costs

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the growth of unit labour costs in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Major: In the second quarter of 1987 unit labour costs for the whole economy were 4 per cent. higher than a year earlier. Manufacturing unit wage costs were 1·5 per cent. higher than a year earlier in the third quarter of 1987.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representation he has received regarding the maintenance of zero rating of value added tax on food, books, periodicals and children's clothes.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has received a number of representations in favour of maintaining zero rating of VAT on food, books, periodicals and young children's clothing.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received against the extension of value added tax to goods which are at present exempt.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has received a few representations principally in connection with the European Court of Justice proceedings against the United Kingdom's VAT exemption for spectacles.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any proposals to extend the scope of value added tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 17 November 1987]: Decisions on changes in value added tax are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's Budget judgment.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the revenue raised by Customs and Excise has been accounted for by value added tax in each year since 1984-85.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 November 1987]: The information is as follows:

VAT as a percentage of total Customs and Excise revenue

Year	Percentage
1984-85	52·2
1985-86	51·7
1986-87	52·0

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of total central Government tax revenue has been accounted for by value added tax in each year since 1984-85.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 November 1987]: Following is the information:

VAT as a percentage of total central Government taxes, royalties and national insurance contributions[1]

Year	Percentage
1984-85	15·2
1985-86	16·1
1986-87	16·6

[1] Both numerator and denominator are on an accruals basis.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total net yield from value added tax in each year since 1984-85.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 November 1987]: The information is as follows:

Year	Net receipts (£ million)
1984-85	18,535·3
1985-86	19,331·4
1986-87	21,422·8

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total net yield from value added tax on cinema admissions in the United Kingdom in each year since 1984-85.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 November 1987]: Businesses registered for value added tax are not required to make returns of the tax charged on particular supplies of goods and services, and information of this kind is therefore not directly available. The figures are based on estimates of consumers' expenditure.

Year	Net VAT yield (£ million)
1984-85	14
1985-86	17
1986-87	19

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what value added tax was due, deductible and payable or repayable in each financial year for which figures are available since 1984-85 in the United Kingdom on (a) museums and galleries, (b) public libraries, (c) cinemas, (d) artists, (e) authors, (f) theatres and music halls, (g) radio and television services, (h) films, (i) recording studios, and (j) all the above combined.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 November 1987]: I regret that information is not available at this level of detail. Figures based on the most detailed information available are as follows:

Year	Tax due (£ million)	Tax deductible (£ million)	Net tax payable (£ million)
(i) Public museums, libraries and galleries
1984-85	3·9	4·3	[1]−0·4
1985-86	5·2	6·0	[1]−0·8
1986-87	5·8	7·2	[1]−1·4
(ii) Cinemas

(iii) Artists, sculptors, designers, authors, journalists (freelance) and composers
1984-85	85·1	38·3	46·8
1985-86	110·5	52·0	58·5
1986-87	142·4	67·9	74·5
(iv) Theatres, music halls etc.; radio and television services (excluding relay services), film and recording studios etc.
1984-85	309·4	249·1	60·8
1985-86	362·3	307·0	65·3
1986-87	412·8	328·0	84·8
(v) Total of (i) to (iv) above
1984-85	408·3	299·1	109·2
1985-86	489·3	372·6	116·7
1986-87	572·2	411·1	161·1

[1] Tax repayable.

Notes:

1. The figures only reflect details of the VAT returns rendered by those registered persons for whom the particular activity is their principal business.

2. As a result of a change in November 1984 in the procedure for accounting for VAT on imports the tax due figures may slightly understate the full tax liability.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total net yield from value added tax on admissions to theatres, concerts and similar live entertainment in the United Kingdom in each year since 1984-85.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 November 1987]: Businesses registered for value added tax are not required to make returns of the tax charged on particular supplies of goods and services, and information of this kind is therefore not directly available. The figures are based on estimates of consumers' expenditure.

Year	Net VAT yield (£ million)
1984-85	35
1985-86	40

SOCIAL SERVICES

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy towards equal opportunities in the National Health Service in the light of the documentation produced by voluntary organisations, research groups and statutory bodies pointing to the exclusion of skilled black professionals from permanent positions in the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Government are committed to equal opportunity in the National Health Service, both in employment and in service delivery. We therefore fully supported the establishment by King Edward's Hospital Fund for London of a task force on racial equality to identify methods of promoting equal opportunities for ethnic minorities. When the task force's model policy was published in July, we urged all health authorities to use it constructively. On 4 November I chaired a seminar for health authority chairmen and general managers to consider how to improve the effectiveness of services for ethnic minorities and I shall be sending a report of the seminar to all health authorities.

Benefit Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what statistical records are kept of disallowed claims for unemployment benefit; if these records identify the reasons given for the disallowance; and if they allow a calculation of the number of claims refused each year under the full extent normal rule.

Mr. Portillo: Records of disallowed claims for unemployment benefit are kept locally by Adjudication officers. These records show the reasons for disallowance, including disallowance under the full extent normal rule. The total number of claims disallowed together with the reasons for disallowance are summarised in an annual analysis of decisions of adjudication officers. In 1986, there were 35,997 disallowances imposed under the full extent normal rule.

Haemophiliacs

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how introduction of the new Social Security Act in April 1988 will affect the position of people with haemophilia who contracted HIV from blood products prescribed by the National Health Service.

Mr. Scott: People who have AIDS or who are HIV-infected will qualify for benefits under the Social Security Act 1986 in the same way as other people. Under the income support scheme, such people will be entitled to the disability premium if they are receiving invalidity benefit or severe disablement allowance or have been submitting medical evidence of incapacity for 28 weeks.

Abortion

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many residents, who presented to their general practitioner at the ninth week, 10th week, 11th week and 12th week, respectively, of gestation, subsequently obtained an abortion at 19 weeks and above in 1986; and what proportion of the total number of abortions performed at 19 weeks and above, in 1986, this number represents.

Mr. Newton: Information on the date of the presentation of a woman to her general practitioner is not collected on the abortion notification form. There were 2,971 notifications of abortions to resident women at 19 weeks and over gestation in England and Wales in 1986.

Salazopyrin

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why his Department has asked all importers of the medicine, Salazopyrin, from Italy, to cease trading in the product and to instigate the immediate recall of all stocks; and if he will name the importers involved.

Mr. Newton: On 26 August 1987 all licence holders were advised that their product licences (parallel import) for Salazopyrin 500mg tablets imported from Italy ceased to ahve effect as a result of the suspension of the Italian marketing authorisation for the Italian product. We were later advised that the Italian health authorities had recalled unsold stocks and corresponding action was therefore taken by the United Kingdom licensing authority on 13 October.

Information about particular importers or licences affected is treated as confidential.

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients in the United Kingdom have received supplies of the medicine Salazopyrin, which have been imported from Italy.

Mr. Newton: I regret this information is not available.

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many product licences (parallel imports) have been granted in respect of Italian supplies of the medicine, Salazopyrin; and if he will name the importers who have been granted such licences.

Mr. Newton: Six product licences (parallel importing) have been granted in respect of the product Salazopyrin imported from Italy. Some of these licences also cover Salazopyrin imported from other sources. Information about particular importers or licences affected is treated as confidential.

Family Credit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the weekly amount incorporated into the proposed family credit figures which reflects compensation for loss of entitlement to free school meals.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 6 November at columns 866-67.

Birmingham Health Authorities

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 4 November, Official Report, column 785-6, regarding Birmingham health authorities, if the figure given in column five of the table takes full account of inflation and technical and demographic changes; and how it compares with the real terms percentage change for the three years 1982-83 to 1985-86 for (a) the west midlands and (b) England.

Mrs. Currie: As explained in my earlier replies to the hon. Member, allocations made to the five Birmingham district health authorities are the responsibility of the West Midlands regional health authority. Information about the precise basis of those allocations is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to pursue my earlier suggestion and write to the chairman of the regional health authority for this information.

The real terms percentage change in gross revenue expenditure between 1982-83 and 1985-86, as measured by the gross domestic product deflator, for the West Midlands regional health authority and for England is 3·9 per cent. which compares with 1·9 per cent. for England as a whole (ie regional health authorities and special health authorities).

NHS (Emergency Planning)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the emergency planning document for the National Health Service in England is to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Following consultation with the Home Office, officials are working on draft revised guidance which will go to the National Health Service Management Board for approval before being referred to Ministers. The final document, when published, will form part of the emergency planning guidance to local authorities issued by the Home Office.

Housing Benefits

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many disabled people in Scotland now receiving benefits will have a lower entitlement under the new housing benefits.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the information is not available.

Benefits (Dundee)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate what proportion of those eligible for housing benefit in the Dundee district authority area do not claim their entitlement to this benefit.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that information is not available on which to base a reliable estimate.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total amount paid in social security payments to claimants of all benefits at the Dundee, East and Dundee, West offices of his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of social security appeal tribunals which took place in Dundee on the latest available figures; in what proportion of those tribunals the claimant was successful; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The national administrative statistics for social security appeal tribunals, which are the source for average durations between the lodging of appeals and hearing, are not disaggregated geographically below social security regions and are not available prior to the second quarter of 1984. The available information for Scotland is in the table.

The number of social security appeals heard in Scotland and the proportion of decisions made in the appellant's favour

Period	Number of appeals heard	In appellant's favour
		number	percentage
Nine months ending 31 December 1984	11,252	2,906	25·8
Twelve months ending 31 December 1985	19,003	5,320	28·0
Twelve months ending 31 December 1986	22,561	6,162	27·3
Three months ending 31 March 1987	7,167	1,965	27·4

Kidney Stones

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his reply of 30 October, Official Report, column 473, he will give details of the locations outside the west midlands where shock wave treatment is available or planned for patients with kidney stones.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) on 16 November.

Blood Products

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when self-sufficiency in blood products will be achieved in the new blood products laboratory at Elstree.

Mr. Newton: Production is expected from this facility within the next few months, leading to very substantial output next year and self-sufficiency in 1989.

Tax Rates and Benefits

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures for the numbers of lower-paid families, with and without children, whose marginal tax rates including benefit withdrawal will be (a) 90 to 100 per cent., (b) 80 to 90 per cent., (c) 70 to 80 per cent., (d) 60 to 70 per cent., (e) 50 to 60 per cent. and (f) 40 to 50 per cent. after the implementation of the Social Security Act 1986 in April 1988, assuming that in 1988-89 personal tax allowances are raised in line with inflation and the basic rate of tax is maintained at 27 per cent.

Mr. Scott: The estimated numbers of families with children, and of couples and single people without children, affected by the various marginal tax rates quoted are shown in the table. The main assumptions are similar to those used in the tables on the "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income-Related Benefits", published at the time of the uprating statement on 27 October. The marginal tax rates are calculated on the sum of extra income tax and employee's national insurance—assumed as 9 per cent. — and the amounts by which income-related benefits are reduced for every extra £1 of gross earnings. To the extent that no allowance has been made for those employees who pay national insurance either at the lower contracted-in rates of 5 per cent. and seven per cent. or at contracted-out rates, the estimates are overstated. The figures should therefore only be taken as illustrating likely broad orders of magnitude.

Smoking and Health (Conference)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the total cost to public funds of Her Majesty's Government's participation in the sixth world conference on smoking and health in Tokyo between 9 and 12 November;

(2) what was the cost to public funds of the civil servants Mr. Neville Teller and Mr. Jeffrey Graham for their attendance at the sixth world conference on smoking and health in Tokyo; what steps were taken to obtain private sponsorship for their visit; how many working days they spent away from their department; what class of air travel they used, and with what airline; and if any part of the visit counted towards their annual leave;

(3) if he will ask the chairman of the Health Education Authority for the cost to public funds of the attendance of Mr. Donald Reid at the sixth world conference on smoking and health in Tokyo; what steps were taken to obtain private sponsorship for his visit; how many days Mr. Reid spent away from the Health Education Authority; what class of air travel he used; which airline he used; and if any part of the visit counted towards his annual leave.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 November 1987]: The conference brought together representatives of 56 nations to survey a wide range of issues connected with tobacco and health. In all, 30 people attended from the United Kingdom, including several representatives of the tobacco industry. Australia sent 22 people, including four officials; there were six officials among the 26 attenders from Canada. The United States of America was represented by 90 people, including at least six Government agency officials.

It was agreed that only two officials should attend from the United Kingdom. The total cost of their attendance including subsistence at specified rates, was £3,443, to which will be added necessary expenses of about £300. The two officials travelled to and from Tokyo by British Airways economy class, one on 5 November and the other on 7 November. Both returned on 14 November. No part of the visit counted towards annual leave. It is not the practice to seek private sponsorship for official visits.

The travel arrangements for officers of health authorities are a matter for the authorities themselves within the specified rates, and it is not our practice to make detailed inquiries on these matters without good reason.

The Department's policy is to send officials to selected international conferences at which the results of research into preventive programmes are presented. This policy was explained in the Government's response (Cmnd. 9917) to the 44th Report of the Public Accounts Committee on preventive medicine.

Home Help Service

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the inflation-adjusted cost of the home help service in the constituency of Batley and Spen for each of the years from 1974 to 1986, respectively.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 16 November 1987]: It is not possible to produce information about the expenditure on home-help services in the constituency of Batley and Spen. Information in respect of the borough of Kirklees is given in the table which shows the net cost of providing home-helps for each financial year revalued to 1987-88 prices.

Year	net expenditure £000
1974-75	2,480
1975-76	2,553
1976-77	2,445
1977-78	2,427
1978-79	2,501
1979-80	2,576
1980-81	2,512
1981-82	2,536
1982-83	2,851
1983-84	3,269
1984-85	3,266
1985-86	3,330

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheepmeat

13. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning proposed changes in the European Community sheepmeat regime.

Mr. MacGregor: I have received a number of representations from producers, the slaughter industry and trade, consumer and environmental bodies.

54. Mr. Hood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next proposes meeting representatives of the National Farmers' Union to discuss the future of the European Community sheepmeat regime.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave today to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies).

56. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress there has been within the Council of Ministers regarding the reform of the sheepmeat regime.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) on the outcome of the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met European Community Agriculture Ministers to discuss the future of the sheepmeat regime.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food gave today to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner).

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how he intends to protect the interests of sheep farmers in the upland areas following the EEC proposals for changes in the sheepmeat regime.

Mr. MacGregor: Our sheep sector has expanded to meet a growing proportion of our market needs and to develop exports. I intend to ensure that our sheep producers can continue to capitalise on their natural advantages under a fair and equitable Community regime.

Common Fisheries Policy

14. Mr. Favell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in the Community's policing of the common fisheries policy.

Mr. Gummer: Over the past few years, the United Kingdom has taken the lead in promoting major new measures in the Community to control and enforce the common fisheries policy. These have been paralleled by action taken in a number of member states.

Storm Damage

15. Mr. Lord: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has identified any specific areas in agriculture and horticulture which need special help as a result of the recent hurricane.

Mr. MacGregor: I am completing assessment of losses suffered by fruit farmers, who have experienced severe damage and whose losses are unlikely to be insurable. As the House knows, I have written to the European Commission about issues relating to help with shelter belts, hedges and traditional walls. A full assessment of damage to woodlands is being made by the Forestry Commission which is also giving advice on the orderly marketing of timber. Financial help is available from the Countryside Commission for replanting small areas of woodlands and, for larger areas, from the Forestry Commission.

39. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he now has to relieve the distress of farmers in mid Kent who have suffered in the recent storm.

Mr. MacGregor: The long-standing position of successive Governments has been that farmers bear the cost of bad weather. It is not the normal practice to pay compensation, particularly where risks are insurable. I have, however, written to the European Commission about the possibility of increasing the rates of some grants under the agriculture improvement scheme to help with work needed on shelter belts, hedges and traditional walls and await a reply. I am also making a full assessment of the losses suffered by fruit farmers about which I am in consultation with the NFU and others. I will consider the position when this assessment is complete.

Pollution

16. Mr. Darling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has held with other Fisheries Ministers of North sea countries regarding the problems of marine pollution.

Mr. Gummer: Last month I met Professor Topfer, the Federal German Environment Minister, to discuss the forthcoming North sea conference and last week I called on the Danish Fisheries and Agriculture Ministers in Copenhagen for talks on a range of environmental issues. Marine pollution is also included in the agenda for the EC Fisheries Council on 24 November.

21. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many inspectors are employed by his Department to ensure that the Oslo and London dumping conventions are respected in British ports and waters over which Britain has jurisdiction; and how many (a) regular and (b) random checks they make annually.

Mr. Gummer: Five scientific staff in my Department are authorised to carry out technical inspections in England and Wales and in addition 23 officers of the sea fisheries inspectorate hold authorisations to enforce the Food and Environment Protection Act. In 1986, a large number of regular inspection were carried out by scientific staff, including 63 involving liquid industrial wastes, the most important category. About half of these were not notified in advance. Additionally, the fisheries inspectorate undertook 26 formal inspections of licensed operations, including the investigation of suspicious activities reported by fishermen and other mariners, most of which were notified in advance.

Arrangements in Scotland are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

23. Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has recently met the National Farmers Union to discuss river pollution caused by agriculture.

Mr. Gummer: I met the vice-president of the National Farmers Union informally on 13 October, when we discussed a number of water pollution issues.

28. Ms. Quin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what work he is carrying out to develop techniques for minimising the environmental effects of farm waste.

Mr. Gummer: My Department is engaged on a major programme of research and development aimed at minimising the environmental effects of farm waste. In particular, work is in hand on the measurement and reduction of odour from animal slurries, cost-effective means of reducing silage effluent, the quantification and reduction of nitrogen losses from excreta, and the incorporation or alternative utilisation of straw.

34. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what expenditure he expects his Ministry to incur in the financial year 1988-89 in the control of pollution in the North sea.

Mr. Gummer: My Department's work on this will cost some £1·6 million in 1988-89.

38. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much sewage sludge is dumped at sea by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: Some 10·1 million tonnes of sewage sludge were dumped at sea by the United Kingdom in 1986.

40 Mr. Henderson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the effect of sewage sludge dumping on the marine ecosystem.

Mr. Gummer: Minor effects such as local chemical and biological changes to the sea bed may be observed close to disposal sites. However, monitoring of fish in the areas concerned shows that their quality is not adversely affected, and that away from the immediate vicinity of the disposal site there is little or no detectable effect.

43. Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to control marine pollution in the North sea.

Mr. Gummer: In pursuit of my statutory responsibilities for controls over the disposal of waste at sea, this Department continues to ensure compliance with the Oslo and London dumping conventions and to subject proposed sea disposal operations to careful scientific scrutiny under part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985. The amount of liquid industrial waste disposed of at sea by the United Kingdom fell by half between 1980 and 1986, and the trace quantities of mercury and cadmium in sewage sludge disposed of at sea were reduced by over 60 per cent. in the same period. Controls over anti-fouling paints, including a ban on the sale and use of Tributyl Tin products on small boats have been introduced under part III of the Act. Acting jointly with the Department of the Environment, this Department has tightened limits on the discharge of radioactive substances to sea such that the quality status report prepared for the ministerial North sea conference records a marked reduction in levels of man-made radioactivity in the North sea over the last three years. The same report shows clearly that continental rivers are the most important source of man-made contaminants in the North sea.

62. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the effect of pollution on fish stocks in the North sea.

Mr. Gummer: Extensive scientific studies suggest that pollution in the North sea has a negligible effect upon fish stocks.

64. Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he is taking to reduce pollution incidents from farms.

Mr. Gummer: The Ministry continues to undertake research and provide advice to farmers on how to reduce all forms of farm pollution. Additionally, I am considering with colleagues the recommendation made in the third report of the House of Commons Environment Committee aimed at reducing water pollution.

Rent (Agriculture) Act

17. Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with representatives of the agriculture industry about the Government's proposals for amending the Rent (Agriculture) Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary met representatives of the agricultural and allied workers' national trade group of the Transport and General Workers' Union on 27 October when some aspects of the proposals were discussed.

Rating Reform

18. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the likely impact on farmers of the proposed community charge.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The impact on farmers will vary in accordance with the local authority areas in which they live. Farmers currently pay rates on their dwellings in the same way as other occupiers of domestic property. It is anticipated that there will be considerable variations in the community charge. I refer the hon. Member to the details of likely community charges which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment placed in the Library of the House on 29 June. As at present, agricultural land and buildings will continue to be exempted from the rating system.

Fish Farming

19. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department is in a position to estimate where expansion is likely to take place in fish farming over the next few years, in terms of species farmed and localities of new fish farms.

Mr. Gummer: Fish cultivation in the United Kingdom is mainly concentrated on salmon, trout and (in coastal waters) shellfish. Forecasts of future developments indicate that expansion is likely to focus on salmon, mainly in western Scotland.

33. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what expenditure he expects his Department to incur in the financial years 1987-88 and 1988-89 in the development of the fish farming industry.

Mr. Gummer: My Department's expenditure related to the development of the fish farming industry is expected to be of the order of £2 million in both 1987-88 and 1988-89, covering direct grant aid and research on fish and shellfish cultivation and disease.

Quick-frozen Foodstuffs

20. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received about European Community document 9402/84 on the approximation of laws relating to quick-frozen foodstuffs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We have received recent written and oral comments from the representatives of frozen food manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers whom we are keeping up to date on developments in Brussels.

Sheep Variable Premium

22. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the sheep variable premium.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In the context of steps to unify the sheep support regime, the Commission has proposed phasing out the sheep variable premium. Offsetting this measure would be the payment of a larger premium on ewes and the ending of the clawback charge on our exports. We have pointed out that the variable premium does have some particular advantages as a means of support in the sheep sector. We shall be pressing to ensure that our producers continue to have the ability to capitalise on their natural advantages, to increase their market share and to develop exports.

Bread-making Wheat

24. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will consider recommending to the European Commission that only bread-making wheat be eligible for intervention storage.

Mr. MacGregor: Restricting access to intervention to bread-making wheat would not be in the interest of United Kingdom producers, since, for technical reasons, bread-making varieties normally grown in this country rarely meet all the criteria for bread-making wheat set in Community regulations. Moreover, the removal of all support for feed wheat would lead to distortions in the feed grain market and could stimulate the production of barley, for which outlets tend to be limited, at the expense of feedwheat, for which there is demand both at home and abroad.

Milk Quotas

25. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his current information as to the level of compliance with milk quota regulations in other European Community member states; how this compares with the United Kingdom; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The recent report by the European Community's Court of Auditors, while drawing attention to a number of shortcomings, indicated that in general most member states are complying with the regulations. I know that the Commission takes very seriously its obligation to pursue suspected infringements; they have, for example, recently undertaken a successful action in the European Court against Italy's failure to implement quota regulations.

National Farmers Union

26. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the National Farmers Union; and what matters they discussed.

37. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the National Farmers Union; and what matters were discussed.

60. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the National Farmers Union; and what subjects they discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I meet the president of the National Farmers Union frequently, to discuss current agricultural issues. We met most recently on 5 November.

Fishing Quotas

27. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make representations in Europe to remove from the quota system the Suffolk inshore winter line fishery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I would find it very difficult to make a case for exclusion of any group of fishermen whatsoever from the operation of the system of total allowable catches and quotas, which it is very much in the United Kingdom interest to see applied rigorously and without exceptions.

Cereals

29. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken following the evidence of fraud and malpractice with regard to the licensed storage of cereals which was drawn to his attention by the hon. Member for Wentworth some months ago.

Mr. MacGregor: Procedures have been strengthened for controlling the intake and storage of grain taken into intervention, and for monitoring the financial soundness of storage companies. In addition, the Intervention Board is continuing to co-operate in police enquiries into events at the Marchington store, and to seek to recover the loss concerned.

47. Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the tonnage of cereals that was in storage in the United Kingdom on 31 October.

Mr. MacGregor: There were 1·38 million tonnes of wheat and 0·78 million tonnes of barley in intervention stores in the United Kingdom on 31 October 1987. Comparable information is not available on stocks held on farms or in private stores.

58. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of cereal output for the current year.

Mr. MacGregor: My Department now estimates the 1987 cereals harvest in the United Kingdom to be 21·7 million tonnes.

69. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made towards a set aside programme for cereals.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory).

Research and Development

30. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline the process for reviewing the priorities and objectives for research and development within his Ministry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There are regular reviews of all areas of research and development work, which draw on advice from research consultative committees consisting of representatives from both industry and the scientific community. These report to a Priorities Board established in 1984 to advise Agriculture Ministers and the chairman of the Agricultural Food Research Council on priorities and the allocation of research budgets. We are also in the process of examining the current balance between industry and Government funding.

57. Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has plans to make changes in the number of staff engaged in research and development or advisory work.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The number of staff engaged on all activities, including research and development and advisory work, is kept under review in order to ensure that our objectives are efficiently and cost effectively met.

63. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the expenditure to be incurred by his Department on research and development during 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The latest estimates of the research and development expenditure which will be incurred by my Department are £112 million in 1987-88 and £117 million in 1988-89. These figures are on a full economic cost basis, including an appropriate apportionment of general departmental overheads and provision for superannuation, which is not borne on my Department's Votes.

50. Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's definition of near market research for the purpose of research and development grants.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Near market research is not a term of art and we have no formal definition of it. It is, however, a convenient way of referring to work with commercial potential, to which the Government believe that industry should make a financial contribution.

Agricultural Produce

31. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to what extent the United Kingdom is self sufficient in basic agriculture produce.

Mr. MacGregor: The provisional estimates for 1986 indicate that the United Kingdom was 59 per cent. self sufficient in all food and 78 per cent. self sufficient in indigenous type food (ie: food that can be grown commercially in this country). When compared with 1973 estimates of 50 per cent. and 60 per cent. respectively, these figures indicate the considerable success of British agriculture.

Sheep

32. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has made of the potential of the Cambridge breed of sheep.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Ministry has conducted assessments of the breed and I shall write to my hon. Friend about our findings.

48. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the present state of the sheep sector.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The sheep sector is buoyant, returns are good and exports are encouraging.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next proposes meeting representatives of the Farmers Union of Wales to discuss problems in the sheep industry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: As my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food said today in reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas), we will continue to stay in close touch with the farmers' unions, including representatives of the Farmers Union of Wales, to discuss in particular matters of common concern on the review of the EC sheepmeat regime.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of the farming unions to discuss the sheep sector; and what was the outcome of that meeting.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My agricultural colleagues and I continue to stay in close touch with representatives of the farmers' unions. The unions have made clear their concern over a number of aspects of the Commission's proposals as indicated by my right hon. Friend, the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, in his reply today to the Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas).

EC Agricultural Expenditure

35. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is satisfied with the powers of the Council of Agriculture Ministers to control agricultural expenditure within the individual countries of the Economic European Community.

Mr. MacGregor: Member states are free to determine their expenditure on agriculture, so long as they do not contravene Community legislation.

Eutrophication

36. Mr. Doran: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to deal with the problem of eutrophication in the North sea.

Mr. Gummer: This subject will be discussed at the North sea conference next week when I and the other Ministers of the coastal states will consider what action should be taken in those areas thought to be affected.

Illegal Fishing

41. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of skippers of fishing vessels convicted of illegal fishing in United Kingdom waters in each of the past four years; and if he will indicate the nationality of each vessel involved.

Mr. Gummer: The number of convictions for offences connected with fishing is as follows:

	1983	1984	1985	1986	Total
United Kingdom	54	33	36	20	143
Belgium	1	1	1	4	7
Denmark	6	1	7	8	22
Netherlands	—	1	3	—	4
France	2	1	2	7	12
Spain	2	12	13	10	37
Germany	—	—	1	—	1
Ireland	—	—	—	1	1
Norway	—	—	1	—	1
Faroes	1	1	1	—	3
Total	66	50	65	50	231

Alternative Land Use

42. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he has received since the publication of the farm woodlands scheme.

Mr. Gummer: We received many responses to the consultation document "Farm Woodland Scheme" issued earlier this year. The Farm Land and Rural Development Bill, which would provide enabling powers to introduce the scheme, received its Second Reading in another place on 5 November and the Government announced details of their revised proposals for the scheme during the debate. These have been generally welcomed.

Fish Disease

44. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what work he is undertaking to assess the causes of fish disease in the North sea.

Mr. Gummer: The occurrence and causes of fish disease in the North sea are the subject of a continuing programme of research conducted by my Department and the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland. This research includes investigative voyages and the examination of disease during stock assessment work.

Wool Board

45. Mr. Mallon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Wool Board; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The last formal meeting with the Chairman of the British Wool Marketing Board was held by the then Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, my right hon. Friend the Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale (Mr. Jopling). The wool guarantee for the 1987 clip was discussed.

Organic Farming

46. Mr. Conway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will report on the development of organic farming; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: There is a growing demand for organically grown food from consumers in this and in many other countries and I believe that this provides an important opportunity for United Kingdom production to be increased significantly. I am therefore particularly pleased that Food from Britain has recently set up the United Kingdom register of organic food standards under the chairmanship of Professor Colin Spedding of Reading university. The UKROFS board will seek to establish, in consultation with organic producers, nationally recognised production standards which in turn will provide a better framework for the further development of this specialised market.

65. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy towards the proposals by the Soil Association entitled "A Manifesto for Organic Agriculture", a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Gummer: In "A Manifesto for Organic Agriculture" the Soil Association put forward a number of proposals which, it suggested, called for Government action. Since the document was published, the Government for their part have taken important policy initiatives which should encourage the development of organic production in this country—in particular, the setting up by Food from Britain of the United Kingdom register of organic food standards, on the board of which three prominent members of the Soil Association serve. I hope that all organic producers, whether members of the Soil Association or not, will now seize the opportunities which are beginning to open up to them.

Fruit and Vegetables

49. Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made on the growing in Great Britain of previously imported fruit and vegetables.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We are broadly holding our share of the market of those fruit and vegetables that can be grown in this country. Home production of some crops has increased, but this has been more than matched by increased demand. Our climate and the limited length of our growing season makes us inevitably reliant on some imports, but new cultural techniques are being introduced which, combined with improved storage facilities should help extend our supply season.

Dairy Industry

51. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will be meeting the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board to discuss the dairy industry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I met the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board on 2 November when we discussed a number of issues affecting the dairy industry.

Common Agricultural Policy

52. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress was made on the reform of the common agricultural policy at the meeting of Ministers on 16 and 17 November.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner).

Horticulture Industry

53. Mr. Hind: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the condition of the horticulture industry growing produce in greenhouses.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Overall, the market is firm; the enhanced capital grants for replacement have helped the industry modernise its glass; and lower heating costs and favourable exchanges in recent years have helped make our growers more competitive. Despite the setback from the recent storm damage in the south, I believe that longer-term prospects are good.

Food Imports

55. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of British food imports currently comes from member states of the Commonwealth.

Mr. Donald Thompson: United Kingdom imports of food from Commonwealth countries in 1986 amounted to 24 per cent. of the total volume and 22 per cent. of the total value of imports from all sources of these commodities.

Intervention Stocks

59. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the cost of storing food for the Intervention Board in the United Kingdom in 1986 and 1987 to the most recent practicable date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The total costs of storing food, including handling, transport and storage charges, met by the intervention board for agricultural produce in 1986 and 1987 were as follows:

	£'000
1986	140,976
1987[1]	95,155

[1] Up to 6 November

The expected outturn for 1987 is £112 million. The reduction in cost from 1986 is mainly due to a lower intake of cereals after the 1986 harvest, partly as a result of reduction in price support, but also reflects savings from new storage rates negotiated by the intervention board for 1987-88. Through its constant endeavours to get reforms in the common agricultural policy, the Government are striving to reduce these particular costs.

Radiation

61. Mr. Allan Rogers: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on the outcome of recent negotiations in the European Communities concerning new permitted levels of radiation in foodstuffs and drinking water.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Since the debate in the House on 28 October, the Commission proposal has been the subject of intense discussions, the last of which took place at the Foreign Affairs Council meeting on 8 November. The Council was unable to reach agreement, but will re-address the matter on 24 November. In the interim, 11 of the 12 member states (the exception is Greece) have agreed not to depart from previous control levels for third country imports and intra-Community trade.

Sugar Beet

66. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the likely turnout of sugar beet yields for the current harvest.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It is estimated that United Kingdom's sugar beet crop, harvesting of which is still in progress, will yield about 40 tonnes of beet per hectare. Production in terms of white sugar is expected to be about 1·2 million tonnes.

Rhizomania

67. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made on monitoring for traces of rhizomania in sugar beet.

Mr. MacGregor: My inspectors, assisted by British Sugar fieldsmen, have checked over 12,000 hectares of beet crops since August when the outbreak of rhizomania in Suffolk occurred. Samples from each field inspected have been tested by Ministry scientists and no further trace of infection has been found. Now that the sugar beet crop is being delivered to the factories, British Sugar staff are alert for any symptons of rhizomania. Any suspicious beets will be tested by the Ministry. Samples from loads with low sugar yield will also be tested.

Food Quality

68. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to ensure that there are teams of skilled public scientists who can investigate competently and independently the quality of food.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Food is already sampled regularly by local authorities which are responsible for the enforcement of food legislation, and the samples are analysed by the public analysts appointed by them. Moreover, the Government have a continuing programme of food surveillance which is designed to ensure that the food intake of the population is both safe and nutritious. This programme is operated by Government scientists under the steering group on food surveillance.

Beef

70. Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, as a result of beef calves being exported during the current year, he anticipates any beef shortage in the United Kingdom in 18 months time.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The beef market has been in a state of considerable oversupply, with heavy expenditure on intervention and other support measures. Some decline in production and supplies will create a better balanced market and enable producers to be less heavily dependent on support.

Food Prices

71. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the increase in food prices during the past 12 months.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The latest figures from the retail price index indicate that food prices have increased on average by 3 per cent. in the 12 months to October 1987 while prices for items other than food have increased by 4·8 per cent.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

72. Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made with respect to environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. Gummer: The first five environmentally sensitive areas in England were successfully launched on 1 March. We intend to invite applications in five new areas from 1 January 1988 and to expand the existing South Downs area. In the United Kingdom as a whole, eight areas have been designated and a further 11 are planned.

Fish

73. Mr. Graham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department is taking in order to ensure an adequate supply of British caught fresh fish for human consumption in terms of both the domestic and export markets.

Mr. Gummer: The common fisheries policy which we negotiated in January 1983 ensures a favourable share of the available fish stocks in waters of Community member states and certain third countries for British fishermen. We shall maintain that share and continue to take the lead in conservation and policing measures which safeguard the future of the industry.

Liquid Milk

74. Mr. Latham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on the availability of liquid milk to dairies for the production of cheese.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I am aware that there were some difficulties during the seasonal trough this year in meeting the requirements of cheese producers. This is basically a marketing problem and, as such, is a matter for the industry. I have however discussed this question with the Milk Marketing Board for England and Wales which is fully aware of the problem and has sought to minimise it. Earlier this year the industry's joint committee agreed modifications to the milk supply arrangements and more recently the price structure has been adjusted with a view to ensuring adequate supplies for cheese production.

Access to the Countryside

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply of 22 October, at column 915, if he will make a statement on the outcome of his discussions with the Countryside Commission on better access to the countryside for riders and pedestrians.

Mr. Gummer: Together with ministerial colleagues from the Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office, I shall be meeting representatives of the Countryside Commission on 2 December to discuss a range of issues including the question of access to the countryside.

New Zealand Butter

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has had from the New Zealand Government concerning the future of New Zealand's butter exports to the United Kingdom; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The New Zealand Government have drawn my attention to the importance that they attach to continued access to the United Kingdom butter market on special terms. Most recently I was visited by the Minister of Overseas Trade and Marketing on 27 October and on 27 November my right hon. Friend the Minister will be meeting the Agriculture Minister.

It would be premature to give an indication of the Government's position, before I have seen the Commission's proposals concerning access to the United Kingdom market for New Zealand butter after 1988.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken and will be taking to implement the pledge given by the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, when visiting Wellington last April, in regard to New Zealand's butter exports to the United Kingdom in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs said during his visit to Wellington that we would continue to do our best to argue New Zealand's corner in the Community. However, he pointed out that this was becoming more difficult at a time of mounting world surpluses when British dairy farmers were being asked to take substantial cuts in production and against the background of New Zealand's current security policy. Arrangements were agreed in 1986 for New Zealand to export 74,500 tonnes of butter to the United Kingdom in 1988. It would be premature for me to make any statement on arrangements after that date before I have seen the Commission's proposals on that subject which are not expected until the middle of next year.

Intervention Food Stores

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report the current contents of each European Economic Community intervention food store in Britain; and what is the total annual cost to public funds of the operation of such food stores.

Mr. MacGregor: At 30 September 1987 intervention stocks at each location in the United Kingdom were as listed in the Table.

Provision in the Intervention Board's 1987-88 Supply Estimates (Class IV, Vote 1) for the storage and related costs of maintaining intervention stocks is £177·3 million towards which contributions from the EC budget were expected to total £100·9 million. However, it is likely that the actual expenditure will be significantly lower.

Food (Destruction)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total amount of food, including fruit, which was destroyed in the EEC under the common agriculture policy arrangements in the most recent annual period for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In 1985-86 a total of 1,819,126 tonnes of fruit and vegetables were assumed to have been spoiled or wasted under the Common Agricultural Policy arrangements for withdrawals of fruit and vegetables from the market. This represents just under 7 per cent. of production of the products concerned.

Although produce withdrawn may be distributed to certain institutions, distilled into industrial alcohol or used as animal feed, it is in practice difficult to find outlets in the time available particularly where the produce is highly perishable. About 17 per cent. of the quantity withdrawn in 1985-86 is estimated to have been used in this way.

I am concerned at the increase in the amounts being withdrawn. This makes it even more important to ensure that withdrawal provisions are such as to provide only an outlet of last resort. This has been our objective at successive annual negotiations on the agricultural price fixing.

Milk Quota

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he makes to ensure that transfers of milk quota comply with national and European Community legislation.

Mr. MacGregor: Milk quota may be transferred from one producer to another only as a consequence of a transfer of land, and in proportion to the areas used for milk production. The agricultural Departments investigate cases in which unduly large amounts of quota are transferred in relation to the area of land concerned; and where disputes occur, the agricultural Departments may, before confirming a change to the quota register, ask the parties to the transaction concerned for further evidence to demonstrate that an appropriate transfer of land has in fact taken place.

It is in the interest of producers in general that transfers of quota should not be open to question in the future and I am aware of concern in the industry about some transfers. In response to this, my colleagues and I propose to put the monitoring of quota transfers onto a more systematic basis. Producers whose quota transfer requests are selected for examination may be asked to provide evidence that there has been a genuine transfer of the land in question before amendments are made to the quota registers.

My colleagues and I have now received a number of responses from industry bodies to the consultation document on the mobility of milk quotas which my predecessor announced on 14 May. My officials will now be considering the next steps with representatives of the industry.

ENVIRONMENT

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by name the number of land fill sites for waste disposal which are used for the dumping of low level radioactive waste, giving the quantity of low level radioactive waste dumped in each, for each of the last five years.

Mr. Moynihan: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Markets

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities in England and Wales which hold market charters, giving the dates of origin and extent of jurisdiction in each case.

Mr. Howard: This information is not available within the Department.

Rates

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will specify precisely how the level of non-domestic rates in each area will be fixed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I must ask the hon. Member to await publication of the legislation.

Storm Damage

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is now able to give the latest estimates of the costs incurred by local authorities in dealing with storm damage incurred in October both in total and for each authority showing (a) the total expenditure incurred, (b) expenditure up to the Bellwin scheme threshold, (c) grant lost by the authority for expenditure up to the Bellwin scheme threshold, and (d) expenditure above the Bellwin scheme threshold, gross and net of specific grant.

Mr. Ridley: My Department does not yet have sufficiently reliable information available to provide the estimates requested. I have already told the House that I expect the cost to be met largely from special financial assistance under the Bellwin scheme or from extra capital allocations which will be made available.

Royal Docks

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will call in for public inquiry the planning application for retail and other developments in the royal docks.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have considered carefully whether or not I should call in this application. The Town and Country Planning (Development Plans) (Urban Development Corporations) (Greater London) Direction 1986 and Town and Country Planning (Shopping Development) (England and Wales) Direction 1986 required that I be consulted before planning permission was granted, not that I should necessarily call it in. I have taken into account the representations that I have received. Newham borough council, in whose area the development lies, has not objected to the proposal; and the proposed scheme is fully in line with the LDDC's development strategy for the Royal docks which I approved in March this year. Bearing in mind also the need to maintain the momentum of regeneration in London docklands, I have decided against call-in.

Sports Policy

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he plans to consult the Sports Council about the future of sports policy.

Mr. Moynihan: I have today written to the chairman of the Sports Council to invite the views of the council and those of other organisations interested in sport and recreation, on the future direction of our sports policies and the mechanisms for achieving them. Copies of my letter are being distributed widely in the sporting world and I have placed a copy in the Library. I have invited comments by 1 March 1988.

Pollution

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by year the quantity in tonnes of United Kingdom emission from maritime and aviation sources of (a) sulphur dioxide (b) nitrogen oxides and (c) hydrocarbons between 1970 and the present day; and what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to reduce these emissions.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 18 November 1987]: Emissions from aviation and shipping are not included in the national tables given in the Department's digest of statistics. However, calculations by Warren Spring laboratory from fuel used by ships in inland and coastal waters suggest that the SO2 emissions from shipping are less than 0·2 per cent. of the national total (less than 7,000 tonnes), NOx less than 2 per cent. (less than 37,000 tonnes), and HCs less than 1 per cent. (less than 20,000 tonnes).

Calculations based on aircraft activity in the United Kingdom suggest that aircraft emissions are less than 2 per cent. NOx (less than 37,000 tonnes NOx) and less that 1 per cent. HCs (less than 20,000 tonnes HCs). Aircraft emissions of SO2 are negligible.

Emissions from ships are not regulated at present, but my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport last year introduced regulations relating to fuel venting and emissions of smoke from aircraft and hopes to bring before Parliament early next year proposals for controlling their emissions of unburnt hydrocarbons, carbon monoxide and oxides of nitrogen.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 12 November, if he will publish (a) the implied taxable income per authority used in his estimate, giving the source and statistical confidence limits and (b) equivalent calculations showing the local income tax liability and community charge liability for (i) single adults on half, one and a half and two times average earnings, (ii) married couples on half, one, one and a half, and two times average earnings, (iii) single pensioners on half, one, one and a half, and two times average single pensioner household income; and (iv) pensioner couples on half, one, one and a half, two times average pensioner couple income.

Mr. Ridley: The covering notes explained that the figures were calculated on the assumption that differences in taxable resources between areas would be fully equalised. It was unnecessary, therefore, to make any assumption about the taxable income of each authority.

The tax liability of the persons referred to would depend on several factors, including the size of any mortgage. The tax rates we have published would enable any individual to calculate their local income tax liability in the light of their personal circumstances.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 16 November, if he will list the precise parts of a farm business which will be liable to pay the nationally fixed non-domestic rate after 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: It is not possible to give an exhaustive list of business carried out on farms which will continue to be liable for rates. The list would, however include farm shops, and storage premises not used in conjunction with agriculture on that farm. Farmhouses, which currently pay domestic rates will not be rated after the community charge is introduced.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply of 2 November, Official Report, column 596, he will now provide a table of gainers and losers in the same form and on the same basis as table J7 in Cmnd. 9714, "Paying for Local Government";

Mr. Howard [holding answer 17 November 1987]: On the basis of the transitional arrangements set out in my reply to the hon. Member of 17 November it is possible to make the following estimates of gains and losses by household type:

£ per week

Thousands of households	Single pensioners	Other single adult	Two adults	Three adults +	All Households
Losers
10+	—	—	—	35	35
5-10	—	—	30	395	425
2-5	5	35	1,275	1,010	2,330
1-2	30	115	1,410	330	1,880
0-1	350	320	3,195	270	4,140
Total Losers	380	470	5,905	2,050	8,810
Gainers
0-1	1,350	740	2,190	140	4,425
1-2	210	285	980	80	1,550
2-5	335	520	1,200	85	2,140
5-10	100	100	350	35	590
10+	10	10	70	10	95
Total Gainers	2,010	1,655	4,785	350	8,800

These figures are based on 1985-86 figures and illustrate the position in 1990-91. Like the figures in Table J7, all the above figures are rounded to the nearest 5,000 households. Differences between this Table and Table J7 may reflect therefore rounding or sampling errors.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his replies on households gaining and losing on the introduction of the full commuity charge in England, Official Report, 26 October, columns 37-38 and columns 39-40, he will give figures of the estimated amount of money gained by gainers and lost by losers.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 17 November 1987]: It is estimated that gains and losses from the full introduction of the community charge would amount to £1,040 million —net of rebates. This total includes net gains for single pensioners and other single adult households of £260 million net gains for two adult households of £110 million and net losses for households with three or more adults of £370 million.

ENERGY

Wind Power

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent representations he has received on the further development of wind power.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department received earlier this year a copy of the British Wind Energy Association's position paper "Wind Power for the UK". This presented a case for a substantial increase in the United Kingdom wind energy programme and emphasised that the programme's aim should be to demonstrate the economic viability of using wind turbines to generate electricity for the national grid. In response, the BWEA was invited to discuss details of its report with departmental officials.

Mining (Redundancy Scheme)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he intends to introduce a further redundancy scheme in the mining industry when the present scheme ceases in March 1988.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The British Coal Corporation and other companies in the coal industry are responsible for their own redundancy arrangements.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Lecturers

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether he intends to intervene in the current lecturers' pay dispute; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has to seek to raise the morale of lecturers in further education colleges in order better to meet the needs of industry and commerce.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Secretary of State has no plans to intervene in the current further education lecturers' pay dispute. The Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act 1987 abolished the Burnham (FE) committee, and both the pay and conditions of service of further education lecturers are now dealt with in the National Joint Council for Lecturers in Further Education in England and Wales, on which the Department of Education and Science has only observer status. Many further education lecturers are now benefiting substantially from a pay restructuring agreed as part of the 1985 settlement. The local authority employers have made a pay offer worth 9·3 per cent. in a full year in return for which they are seeking agreement on more cost-effective working arrangements, the need for which was accepted by the lecturers in the context of the 1985 settlement, but on which no progress has so far been made. It is regrettable that the National Association of Teachers in Further and Higher Education is nevertheless continuing to encourage its members to take industrial action damaging to the interests of students. I hope that a settlement will be reached soon, in the best interests of the students and of industry and commerce as well as the lecturers themselves.

Nursery Education

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list, by local education authority, the proportion of the total number of under fives in pre-school education represented by (a) three-year-olds and (b) four-year-olds.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested for each local education authority in England in January 1987 is given in the table:

Ampligen

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the Medical Research Council has commissioned any studies of the effect of ampligen; what information the council has on studies carried out elsewhere; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that the Medical Research Council (MRC) has not commissioned any studies of the effect of ampligen. The Council is aware of a preliminary study in the United States of America on a small number of patients with AIDS and related conditions. The MRC is always willing to consider soundly based research proposals for support through its grants schemes in competition with other applications.

Education Reform

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he is taking to ensure that his proposals for changes in the management of schools, colleges and universities will not be forestalled by decisions taken before the provisions of the proposed Education Reform Bill come into effect.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: In accordance with the statement I made to the House on 22 July, the Education Reform Bill —which is being published today—contains provisions which require my consent to the disposal by LEAs of land used by or held or obtained for or in connection with the purposes of polytechnics and colleges to be transferred from local authorities (clause 95). That requirement applies to all such disposals after 22 July 1987. Similar provisions apply, in the case of the Inner London education authority, in relation to disposals of land which may be required by an inner London borough if it successfully applies to assume education responsibilities for its area (clause 121), and to contracts over £15,000 (clause 120). Similar controls on the disposal of property will apply in respect of schools whose governing body has informed the LEA that a ballot of parents is to be held on the question whether grant-maintained status should be sought (clause 59). LEAs will also be prevented from transferring staff into or out of such schools except with the agreement of the governing body. The Bill further provides that any new agreements or contracts made after 20 November 1987 by any local education authority or by the governing body of any polytechnic, college or school, which would protect members of the staff from compulsory redundancy or guarantee members of staff redundancy compensation above the statutory minimum, shall be void (clause 138). This will ensure that the ability of future governing bodies to manage their institutions effectively is not constrained by inappropriate commitments to the staff. The provision will not preclude the payment of compensation above the statutory minimum where individuals are identified for redundancy.

In the case of universities, the Government's policy is that newly appointed staff should no longer be given "tenure", that is, special protection against dismissal on grounds of redundancy or financial exigency. The Bill provides (clause 132) that staff currently in post who have tenure should retain it as long as they continue in their present appointments, but that those newly appointed or promoted to permanent posts after 20 November 1987 should no longer have this special measure of protection. This approach will provide on an equitable basis for tenure to be phased out as quickly as reasonably possible, without the creation of substantial numbers of new tenured appointments in the period before the commissioners who will be responsible for the required amendments to university statutes have completed their work.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the means by which the provisions of the Education Reform Bill will strengthen the protection of academic freedom.

Mr. Jackson: We have recently reaffirmed the Government's view that academic staff should have freedom within the law to question and test received wisdom and to put forward new ideas and controversial or unpopular opinions without placing themselves in jeopardy of losing their jobs or the privileges they may have at their institutions. The precise content of the idea of academic freedom in any particular situation depends, however, among other things, on the type of institution and the subject taught or researched; we do not believe that it can be said to have a single clear definition applicable in all circumstances. The Government therefore consider it more appropriate for the requirements of academic freedom to be taken into account by the university commissioners, in consultation with individual universities and colleges, when statutes are amended to provide appropriately for the definition of good cause for dismissal and for arrangements for appeals against dismissal. The existence of suitable and disinterested appeals arrangements will represent an important element of protection for academics from victimisation on account of their views. It will be for the Privy Council, in considering whether to recommend to Her Majesty that amendments to university statutes put forward by the commissioners should be confirmed, to satisfy itself that the Government's objective of protecting academic freedom has been properly met. Moreover, the fact that academics will no longer be precluded from actions in the courts against their employers for wrongful dismissal will represent a further strengthening of academic freedom, in addition to the access they have to industrial tribunals over claims of unfair dismissal.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ministerial Visits

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nights each of the Ministers in his Department spent in Northern Ireland during each of the months of June, July, August, September and October, respectively.

Mr. Tom King: The information is as follows:

[1] Mr. Scott left the Northern Ireland Office and Mr. Stanley joined in mid June 1987.

Social Security Reform

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what are the changes in disposable income after meeting housing costs of the following client groups receiving income-related benefits in Northern Ireland, as a result of changes announced in the reformed structure of income-related benefits (a) pensioners aged 80 years and over, (b) pensioners aged 60 to 79 years, (c) sick or disabled, (d) lone parents, (e) couples in full-time work with children, (f) others in full-time work and (g) others; if he will show the increases in disposable income and decreases of disposable income by bands of £1, £2 to £3, £3 to £4, £4 to £5, and £5 plus; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the effect on disposable income of people in Northern Ireland receiving income support of the reformed structure of income-related benefits by main client groups;

(3) what will be the effect for Northern Ireland of the reformed structure of income-related benefits on the disposable incomes of working families with children receiving family credit, by family size;

(4) what will be the effect of the reformed structure of income-related benefits on the disposable incomes of people in receipt of housing benefit or family income supplement or family credit in Northern Ireland by main client group;

(5) what will be the effect for Northern Ireland of the reformed structure of income-related benefits on the disposable incomes of people receiving housing benefit, family income supplement or family credit, by family status and age;

(6) what will be the combined effects of the reformed structure of income-related benefits on the disposable incomes of all people receiving income-related benefits, by family status and age;

(7) what will be the average changes in disposable income for (a) those receiving income support, (b) those receiving other income-related benefits and (c) those receiving any income-related benefit, by main client groups, as a result of the reformed structure of income-related benefits; and if he will make a statement;

(8) what will be the effect of the reformed structure of income-related benefits on the disposable incomes of people receiving income support, by family status and age.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is not at present available, but consideration is being given to the possibility of obtaining relevant figures. In broad terms, the impact of the reform will be much the same in Northern Ireland as in Great Britain.

Strangford Lough

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated daily tonnage of (a) untreated foul sewage presently entering Strangford lough and (b) additional sewage from the proposed salmon farms in Strangford lough; and if sewage effluent was a factor in his refusal of the salmon farm application for Strangford lough.

Mr. Needham: [holding answer 19 November 1987]: Of the 19,500 tonnes of sewage effluent discharged each day into Strangford lough, 1,030 tonnes, estimated to include 0·4 tonnes of solid waste, receive no treatment at present. However, when the new sewage works now under construction at Killyleagh, at a cost of some £1·4 million, are fully operational, the currently untreated discharge will be receiving full biological treatment. Salmon farming on the scale proposed for Strangford lough could have produced 0·5-14 tonnes of solid waste daily. The possible effect of such a quantity of waste was a factor in the decision to refuse a consent under the Water Act (Northern Ireland) 1972.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library the reports from groups of officials given to the Anglo-Irish Conference on 21 October and mentioned in the joint statement of that date; what meetings of Ministers of both Governments took place and on what specific issues before this meeting of the conference, as reported in the penultimate paragraph of the joint statement of 21 October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 13 November 1987]: It is not our practice to publish such reports. My hon. Friend the member for Gosport (Mr. Viggers) met the Irish Ministers for Tourism and Transport, and for Industry on 29 July, for a general discussion largely on tourism matters; my noble Friend Lord Lyell met the Irish Minister for Agriculture on 12 October to discuss agriculture matters.

ENVIRONMENT

Commissioner for Local Administration

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many cases have been brought to his attention where the Commissioner for Local Administration has considered a matter and reported on it, has then reconsidered the case when the local authority has refused to rectify the complaint and again urged the local authority to take action and it has refused for a second time to do so; if he will list the authorities concerned and the number, for each authority, of such cases; and whether he is considering any action which could help those individuals who according to the local government commissioner have still not had their complaint properly settled.

Mr. Chope: I understand from the Commission for Local Administration in England that, since it was set up in 1974, there have been 120 cases where the local authority concerned has failed to provide a satisfactory remedy following the issue of a second report by one of the commissioners. A list of the authorities is in the table: where more than one such case has occurred, the number is indicated in brackets.

The Select Committee on the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administraton and the Widdicombe committee on the conduct of local authority business have both put forward proposals for remedying this problem. My right hon. Friend is considering these proposals.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Ordnance Survey commercial products have failed to show a profit since the introduction of the Ordnance Survey commercial arm in 1981.

Mr. Moynihan: While recognising the need for a reasonable balance between adequate disclosure and commercial discretion in relation to Ordnance Survey trading activities, I believe that it would not be proper to disclose this information.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will instruct the Ordnance Survey not to attempt to influence local authorities against providing map-revision information, which the local authority has itself surveyed, to private sector map-makers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Ordnance Survey has no interest in the use of surveys made by local authorities provided they are not supplied simultaneously with a copy of an Ordnance Survey map.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the competitive consequences of the Ordnance Survey's tax position in relation to the profit it makes from its commercial products.

Mr. Moynihan: As a Government Department, all the revenues of Ordnance Survey serve to reduce its net Vote. There can therefore be no direct comparison with the profits made by private sector companies.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the practice of the Ordnance Survey with regard to reserving the right to prevent publication of a product by a private sector map-maker if the Ordnance Survey itself markets, or intends to market a competing product; and what assessment he makes of the implications of this practice for fair competition between the Ordnance Survey and private sector map-makers.

Mr. Moynihan: Ordnance Survey claims only the right given to any copyright owner to protect his work. To waive that right would jeopardise the aim of Ordnance Survey to minimise its call on public funds, as required by Government.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the commercial arm of Ordnance Survey is automatically provided with confidential information, including the design and print run, of all publications which the private sector map-makers plan to produce based on public sector mapping; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Prior permission is required from Ordnance Survey before a publisher may use Ordnance Survey material in a publication. The information is supplied in confidence to the copyright section solely for approval and royalty assessment purposes.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the commercial arm of the Ordnance Survey has access to the periodic sales statistics which the private sector map-makers are required to notify to the copyright section of the Ordnance Survey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Publishers whose products are based on Ordnance Survey information are required to notify Ordnance Survey of their sales so that the royalties due can be assessed.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange for an independent audit of the Ordnance Survey's commercial trading accounts.

Mr. Moynihan: The Comptroller and Auditor General is responsible for the audit of the Ordnance Survey's trading accounts.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by whom the accountants commissioned to review the Ordnance Survey trading accounts were given their terms of reference, and what factors governed this choice.

Mr. Moynihan: The terms of reference for the review of the format and design of the Ordnance Survey trading accounts were agreed by Ministers to ensure that there is no cross-subsidisation of Ordnance Survey's commercial activities from its Exchequer Vote.

Peak park

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what criteria he appoints members of the Peak park planning board; and what notice he takes of the locality of origin of local government appointments to the board.

Mr. Moynihan: In making his appointments to national park authorities, my right hon. Friend has regard to purposes for which the parks have been designated and looks for candidates with experience in a range of relevant fields, and preferably local knowledge. Residences of local government appointees are not taken into account.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many of the members of the Peak park planning board live within the area of the Peak park; and, of those which were appointed by local authorities and which by himself;

(2) if he will list the present members of the Peak park planning board, together with the body that appointed them, their qualifications, and place of residence.

Mr. Moynihan: Three out of 23 appointed by local authorities and seven out of 11 appointed by my right hon. Friend. Current membership and places of residence are:

Biographical details of the entire membership are not held centrally.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many members of the Peak park planning board, as a percentage of the total, lived outside the area of the park, in the year the board first met, and at subsequent three-year intervals until the present day.

Mr. Moynihan: At present 70 per cent. Records of the addresses of local authority members in previous years are not held centrally.

National Parks

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list how many members of each national park planning board live within the area of that park as a percentage of the total numbers on each board.

Mr. Moynihan: The information for the seven English national parks is as follows:

Park	Members	Number living within park	Percentage of total number
Dartmoor	21	5	24
Exmoor	21	5	24
Lake District	30	10	33
Northumberland	27	1	4
North York Moors	27	5	18
Peak District	34	10	29
Yorkshire Dales	24	3	12

The three Welsh national parks are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the London Docklands development corporation has spent on education and training for each of the years it has been in existence; and how much it intends to spend in 1988.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is as follows:

	£
1981-83	400,000
1983-84	300,000
1984-85	850,000
1985-86	450,000
1986-87	1,400,000
1987-88	[1]2,300,000

[1] Provisional.

These figures are approximate.

The corporation's education and training budget for 1988-89 is not finalised.

Chelsea Football Club

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from residents of the London borough of Hammersmith and Fulham over the proposed development by Chelsea football club at Stamford bridge; and if he will meet the hon. Member for Fulham to discuss the setting up of a planning inquiry.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend has received a number of letters from local residents about these proposals, including those forwarded by my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham. After careful consideration of these representations we concluded that calling in the planning applications for a public inquiry would not be justified. I have recently written to my hon. Friend setting out more fully the reasons for this decision.

Sports Council

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what remuneration the current chairman of the Sports Council receives; and how many days per month he is expected to devote to the business of the Sports Council.

Mr. Moynihan: The chairman of the Sports Council receives £14,800 per annum, for a time commitment of two days per week.

Pollution

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures the Government intend to introduce to meet their stated aim of reducing sulphur dioxide emissions in the United Kingdom to 3·27 million tonnes by 1990; and what are the implications for this aim of his forecast that emissions in 2000 may be 3·5 million tonnes.

Mr. Moynihan: We have authorised the CEGB to retrofit 6000 MW of coal-fired generating capacity with flue gas desulphurisation equipment, and have announced that all new coal-fired power stations will have the technology to control sulphur emissions.

The forecast range of emissions in the year 2000 range from 2·6 million tonnes to 3·5 million tonnes. This range of estimates reflects the considerable uncertainty about future emission levels which are dependent on factors such as economic growth and energy demand.

We continue to expect to meet our stated aim of policy. The action outlined above will help to ensure that we do so.

Birds of Prey

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reasons were advanced by the Nature Conservancy Council for its recommendation that licences should not be granted for taking from the wild any diurnal birds of prey after 1988.

Mr. Moynihan: The Nature Conservancy Council's recommendation was made on the grounds that the numbers of diurnal birds of prey being kept and bred in captivity should be sufficient to satisfy the needs of falconers after 1988.

Urban Programme

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the qualification by the Comptroller and Auditor General of his Department's appropriation accounts in respect of the urban programme.

Mr. Trippier: The Comptroller and Auditor General has qualified his certificate for the Department's Appropriation Accounts for 1985-86 and 1986-87, which have been prepared and audited in the normal way. This is because of continuing uncertainty about a considerable backlog of uncertified expenditure by local authorities supported by grant aid from my Department under the urban programme (class X, vote 3).

A backlog of urban programme claims built up during the early 1980s. Local authorities are paid grant on account while urban programme schemes are in progress. They are then required to submit final claims, which are subjected to audit by the local authority's auditors. Some claims were submitted very late. In September 1986, 215 claims awaited certification, covering expenditure up to 31 March 1985 of £345·9 million.

In his report on the accounts for 1986-87, the Comptroller and Auditor General recognises that the Department has made "significant progress" over the last year in reducing that backlog. By September this year, the backlog had been reduced to 78 claims covering uncertified expenditure of nearly £210 million. The report notes that changes had been made in the management of the urban programme, and are proving successful in preventing any further backlog from accumulating. The core of the remaining backlog concerns claims from the abolished Greater London council and some of the Metropolitan county councils, and 16 Labour-controlled authorities.

The backlog of claims does not mean that money has been lost or misappropriated. It was paid to local authorities for schemes that have been completed. Certification by the local authority auditors is required to show that the grants have been used for the purpose for which Parliament voted them. The auditors require detailed material from individual authorities to enable them to issue those certificates. The Department is continuing with the full co-operation of local authority auditors to reduce the backlog further.

Sports and Leisure Facilities

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to control investment programmes by local authorities in sports and leisure facilities.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 19 November 1987]: At present, local authority capital expenditure on sport and recreation falls within the other services block. The Government intend in the near future to publish proposals for reform of the legislation which regulates capital expenditure, including expenditure on sport and recreation, by local authorities in England and Wales.

DEFENCE

Information

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what advertising agents have been appointed by his Department, or by the Central Office of Information on behalf of his Department, to handle campaigns involving the communication of information on subjects for which his Department is responsible to Parliament during the year 1985-86; what was the subject of each campaign; and how much was spent on each campaign.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Ministry of Defence engaged the services of a number of advertising agencies in 1985-86 for the purpose of recruiting to the armed forces and the Civil Service. The agencies concerned and the subject of each campaign are listed in the table. It is not our general policy to divulge the costs of individual contracts, which are commercially confidential.

	Campaign
Young and Rubican Ltd.	RN recruitment campaign
Collett, Dickenson, Pearce and Partners	Army officer recruitment campaign
Slaymaker Cowley White (formerly Butler, Dennis and Garland)	Army soldiers, TA, cadet and District recruitment campaigns
George Hynes and Partners	UDR and TA (Northern Ireland) recruitment campaigns
J. Walter Thompson plc.	RAF recruitment campaign

	Campaign
Charles Barker Recruitment Advertising Agency Ltd.	Civilian recruitment campaign
Rex Steward and Associates	Civilian recruitment campaign

Red Arrows Team

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the crash of the Red Arrows team in Lincolnshire on 16 November;

(2) whether he intends to set up a board of inquiry into the accident of the Red Arrows team in Lincolnshire on 16 November;

(3) if he will ensure that safety procedures are reviewed with a view to preventing a repetition of the accident of the Red Arrows team in Lincolnshire on 16 November.

Mr. Freeman: Two aircraft from the Royal Air Force Red Arrows display team collided over Welton in Lincolnshire on 16 November while practising manoeuvres for their performance in the display season next year. Both aircraft crashed to the ground immediately after the collision; the pilots ejected safely, and no civilians were hurt as a consequence of the accident. Claims for damage to property will be carefully considered according to normal rules.

The Royal Air Force has convened a board of inquiry into this accident, which will examine fully all the circumstances with a view to establishing its cause, and preventing recurrence. A summary of the board's findings will be published in due course in the usual way.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ensure that full compensation is given to the residents of Welton, Lincolnshire, affected by the crash of the Red Arrows team, both in terms of compensation for damage to property and in terms of shock.

Mr. Freeman: All claims for compensation received by my Department will be considered carefully on their merits.

Dartmoor National Park

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what construction work is being carried out on behalf of his Department near Lydford in the Dartmoor national park; and what planning procedures have been or will be invoked.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave my hon. Friend the Member for South Hams (Mr. Steen) on 14 July at column 434. No construction work is at present being carried out at Lydford on behalf of the Ministry of Defence. Outline proposals for the replacement of Willsworthy camp were put to the Dartmoor national park authority on 19 October 1987, and the normal planning procedures are being followed.

Residential Accommodation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any residential accommodation is provided for Ministers in his Department and charged to public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No residential accommodation is provided for Ministry of Defence Ministers and charged to public funds.

Horses

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those units in which Army horses are not allocated, but in which personnel are permitted to hunt in duty hours; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Personnel in non-mounted units are not normally permitted to hunt in duty hours.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the costs to public funds of equestrian activity in the Army.

Mr. Freeman: The information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many horses used by (a) the Household Cavalry and (b) other regiments and retired in each of the past three years have been sold for the purposes of serum production or research or for other experimental purposes; and what are the other destinations for horses unwanted for military purposes.

Mr. Freeman: No Army horses have been sold in the past three years for serum production or research or other experimental purposes. Horses that are no longer suitable for military purposes are sold to Army saddle clubs, sold to their riders on grounds of sentiment, sent to a home of rest for horses or humanely destroyed. There are also seven horses which are no longer able to carry out normal ceremonial duties and which are detached to CDE, Porton Down for serum production.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the relative participation rates of (a) officers and (b) other ranks in playing polo and hunting on Army horses in duty time.

Mr. Freeman: Army horses are not used for playing polo. No central record is kept on the relative participation rate of officers and other ranks in hunting on Army horses in duty time.

Battlefield Artillery Target Engagement System

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the contract for the battlefield artillery target engagement system with Marconi is a fixed-price contract; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 12 November 1987]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 2 November at column 605.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there have been any cost over-runs to his Department on the procurement of the battlefield artillery target engagement system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 12 November 1987]: The costs of the project have been estimated more accurately as it has progressed and reassessed at the various stages of approval. Since the introduction of the present incentivised contract arrangements in 1985, costs remain within forecast levels.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what penalty clauses in the contract for the battlefield artillery target engagement system have been exercised.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 12 November 1987]: The contract contains no "penalty clauses" as such. Discipline over the prime contractor is exercised through the target cost-maximum price incentive arrangement. If cost overruns take the contract cost above the target cost the prime contractor's profit will be eroded. Should the contract price reach the maximum price, all further costs to complete the contract will fall to the prime contractor. The contract also contains the standard default clause, standard condition 14, which enables the MOD to purchase the goods elsewhere if the prime contractor does not produce on time or to specification, and to recover the extra cost from the prime contractor.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the original specifications on the battlefield artillery target engagement system project, as negotiated at the time the contract was given, will be met when the equipment is delivered to his Department; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the cost of each change from the original contract specification in the case of the battlefield artillery target engagement system project;

(3) how many changes to the battlefield artillery target engagement system were negotiated by Marconi with his Department after the original contract was placed;

(4) why changes to the contract for the battlefield artillery target engagement system were not submitted for competitive tender; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 12 November 1987]: The current contract requires that the full specification be met. Since the placing of the contract in 1985, a large number of minor revisions to the specification have been agreed, some at the company's instigation and some at the MOD's. This process is not unusual in a project as large and complex as BATES. The value of these changes is estimated at less than 1·5 per cent. of the total project cost. To reopen the prime contract to competition for every minor change would be wholly impracticable.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the original contract cost of the battlefield artillery target engagement system to his Department at the time the original contract was let.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 12 November 1987]: The original contract was placed at an estimated cost of some £30 million at 1981-82 prices for full development on a cost-plus basis. The scope, terms and conditions of that contract are not comparable with the present contract which is let against a full technical specification on a target-cost/maximum price incentive basis, and includes the first slice of production.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Marconi Command and Control Systems secured the contract for the battlefield artillery target engagement system.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 12 November 1987]: The current contract (for full development and initial production) for the BATES project was let from 1 April 1985. This contract subsumed the earlier full development contract which had been let in 1982.

WALES

Classical Studies

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many candidates from maintained secondary schools in Wales entered for O-level Latin in the Welsh Joint Education Committee summer examinations in 1975, 1980, 1985 and 1987;

(2) how many candidates from maintained secondary schools in Wales entered for A-level Latin in the Welsh Joint Education Committee summer examinations in 1975, 1980, 1985 and 1987;

(3) how many candidates from maintained secondary schools in Wales entered for O-level classical studies in the Welsh Joint Education Committee summer examinations in 1975, 1980, 1985 and 1987;

(4) how many candidates from maintained secondary schools in Wales entered for A-level classical studies in the Welsh Joint Education Committee summer examinations in 1975, 1980, 1985 and 1987.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information, as supplied by the Welsh Joint Education Committee, is as follows:

	Latin		Classical studies
	'O' level	'A' level	'O' level	[1]'A' level
[2]1975	1,348	102	226	—
1980	893	78	316	—
1985	581	54	200	35
1987	357	33	101	52

[1] 'A' level Classical studies was first examined in 1983.

[2] Figures for 1975 contain candidates from all establishments. Figures for maintained schools only are not separately identifiable.

Examinations

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what was the total number of candidates entered for O-level subjects in the Welsh Joint Education Committee summer examinations in 1975, 1980, 1985 and 1987;

(2) what was the total number of candidates entered for A-level subjects in the Welsh Joint Education Authority summer examinations of 1975, 1980, 1985 and 1987.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information, as supplied by the Welsh Joint Education Committee, is as follows:

	[1]'O' level	'A' level
1975	33,481	8,477
1980	48,217	9,504
1985	56,522	11,583
1987	58,680	11,372

[1] 'O' level candidates include entries for Common Syllabus examinations.

Capitation

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report the capitation per head in each of the counties of Wales of primary and secondary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not collected centrally.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many language units (speech therapy) there are in Wales, by county; if he is satisfied with the level of speech therapy provision in each of the Welsh counties; what is his estimate of the numbers of children in each of the Welsh counties with speech or language disorders; how many speech therapists work (a) full-time and (b) part-time in the counties of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information about numbers of langage units is not held centrally. The level of speech therapy provision is an operational matter for individual district health authorities to determine in the light of their priorities and the resources available to them. I am greatly encouraged by the increase in the number of full-time equivalent speech therapists employed in the NHS over recent years, which has doubled since 1979.

Information on numbers of children with speech or language disorders is available only in relation to those pupils for whome a statement of special educational needs has been issued by local education authorities. The latest information is taken from LEA returns in January 1987 and is as follows:

	Speech disorder	Language disorder
Clwyd	117	206
Dyfed	33	103
Gwent	4	3
Gwynedd	9	17
Mid Glamorgan	131	156
Powys	48	62
South Glamorgan	43	74
West Glamorgan	197	202

The number of full-time and part-time speech therapists employed by district health authorities in Wales as at 30 September 1987 is given in the following table:

	Full-time	Part-time
Clwyd	19	7
East Dyfed	13	1
Pembrokeshire	6	—
Gwent	13	4
Gwynedd	9	2
Mid Glamorgan	17	—
Powys	3	3
South Glamorgan	25	5
West Glamorgan	14	1

Nurses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the nurse-to-patient ratio for each year since 1979 in (a) Clwyd area health authority and (b) Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Such information as is available is given in the table. Both the numbers of nurses employed and in-patients treated have increased significantly since 1979. The following figures reflect the more intensive care given to patients by nursing staff.

	[1]Nurses per in-patient case[2]		[1]Nurses per occupied bed[3]
	Clwyd	Wales	Clwyd	Wales
1979	0·056	0·059	1·19	1·14
1980	0·057	0·058	1·23	1·16

1986	0·057	0·055	1·54	1·42

[1] Whole-time equivalents as at 30 September excluding nurses in community, school health, Blood Transfusion Service, senior management and teaching. Figures for 1979 have been adjusted to take into account the change in nurse working hours that occurred in 1980.

[2] Total in-patient cases during year.

[3] Daily count of occupied beds, averaged over calendar year.

Job Clubs

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many job clubs have been opened in (a) Wales and (b) Clwyd, expressed in travel-to-work areas.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Seventy four job clubs have opened in Wales since August 1985, and 11 of these are in Clwyd. The table shows the distribution of these job clubs in Welsh travel-to-work areas.

Travel-to-work area	Number

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of job training scheme participants in Wales have gained full-time employment since joining the scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is not yet available. The job training scheme has been operating in most places for less than six months. The Manpower Services Commission has commissioned a follow-up survey of leavers to look into the destination of trainees. The first results will be available in the new year.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the present level of job vacancies reported at jobcentres in (a) Wales, (b) Clwyd and (c) Shotton travel-to-work areas.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: On 2 October 1987 the number of vacancies notified to jobcentres in Wales, Clwyd and the Shotton, Flint and Rhyl travel-to-work areas were 14,949, 2,293 and 937 respectively.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress of the two-year YTS in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: At the end of September 1987, there were some 25,300 young people in training on YTS schemes in Wales. All those taking part will receive up to two years' high-quality training with related work experience. All schemes in Wales are introducing opportunities to obtain a vocational qualification, or credit towards one.

The latest information on those young people leaving YTS between April 1986 and May 1987 shows that 66 per cent. were going into work or further education and training. With the Government guarantee of a place on YTS for all 16 and 17-year-old school leavers, no young person under 18 need choose to remain unemployed.

Structure Plans

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any proposals with regard to the reorganisation of structure plans for Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Government's proposals for changes to the system of structure and local plans were issued as a join consultation paper "The Future of Development Plans" by the Welsh Office and the Department of the Environment in September 1986. The responses to that consultation paper are now being considered and a further statement will be issued in due course.

PRIME MINISTER

European Council Meeting

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what issues she intends to raise at the forthcoming meeting of the European Council in Copenhagen; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave him on 19 November.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what information she has received from the European Economic Commission about the items on the agenda for the forthcoming European Council meeting in Copenhagen; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The European Council at Copenhagen will be discussing the financial situation of the Community, the reform of the common agricultural policy and the strengthening of budgetary discipline.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the proposals she intends to submit to the December meeting of the European Council on budgetary control and the common agricultural policy.

The Prime Minister: At the European Council I shall continue to make clear the need for agreement on effective and binding control over Community spending, in particular agricultural spending, through the strengthening of budgetary discipline and the introduction of stabilisers on agricultural commodities.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Attorney-General what percentage of the Crown Prosecution Service's court work is being covered by agents; what was the total of fees paid to agents in September and in October; and what is the average salary of a solicitor employed by the service to cover court work.

The Attorney-General: During the last quarter, July to September 1987, 45 per cent. of magistrates' court sessions were undertaken by agents. The total of fees paid to agents during September was £1,425,000; in October it was £1,209,000. It is impossible to provide an average salary figure for lawyers employed by the service to cover court work. Court work is undertaken largely by solicitors and barristers in the crown prosecutor and senior crown prosecutor grade. Salaries for these grades range from £11,603 to £16,576 and from £15,030 to £21,092 respectively and certain additional allowances are available.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Attorney-General by what percentage the number of criminal prosecutions has changed since the introduction of the Crown Prosecution Service.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is given in tables 1 and 2 and paragraphs 5 to 7 of "Home Office Statistical Bulletin 21/87" a copy of which is in the Library.

TRANSPORT

Airports (Landing Charges)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of all landing charges in British Airport Authority-owned airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information required is not held by the Department of Transport. I suggest that the hon. Member contacts BAA plc direct.

Manchester International Airport

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has been asked to approve any further development at Manchester International airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Since 1979 the Government have facilitated investment of over £100 million on developments at Manchester International. Further bids — including expenditure to prepare the way for a second passenger terminal—are being considered as part of the annual round of capital expenditure allocations for local authority airports.

Weight-testing Stations (M25)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many weight-testing stations are being operated on the M25; how many lorries have been tested in each year since the M25 opened; and how many prosecutions have been initiated for overloading.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: One weighbridge site has been provided on the M25 at junction 9 (Leatherhead interchange). It came into operation earlier this month and is being used for checking heavy lorries by the Department's traffic examiners, vehicle examiners, Surrey trading standards officers and the police. Surrey trading standards department have weighed 61 vehicles of which 14 were found to be overloaded, and some prosecutions will follow. All enforcement agencies will be making regular use of the weighbridge site.

East London Road Assessment Study

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what representations he has received from the London borough of Haringey concerning consultation on the East London road assessment study, stage II; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when consultations on the second stage of the East London road assessment study will be complete; and when will he make a statement on the future of the scheme.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The London borough of Haringey commented in May 1987 on the consultation arrangements for stage 2 and was party to the joint response by the four boroughs in the East London study area. It was also associated with the response by the London strategic policy unit on the terms of reference for stage 2, which touched on consultation. The chief executive of Haringey wrote to me on 2 November about the borough's participation in the consultation process.

Consultations with the relevant local authority associations, the London planning advisory committee, and boroughs in the study areas will take place regularly throughout stage 2. The consultants' final report on options will be published for comment at the end of stage 2.

Lorry Ban (London)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to extend the night-time lorry ban on London's roads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The London night-time and weekend lorry ban is the responsibility of the London boroughs. It is for them to consider its future, and its value-costs and benefits.

Smoke Hoods (Aircraft)

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the research (a) his Department and (b) the Civil Aviation Authority are currently funding into the use of smoke hoods on civil aircraft; at what cost; what applications for further research are currently before him; when he expects to reach a decision on them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following the B737 accident at Manchester, the air accidents investigation branch of the Department has spent £200,000 on feasibility studies to demonstrate the potential of hoods to protect passengers from the smoke produced in aircraft fires. The branch has no plans for further expenditure. The Civil Aviation Authority is expecting to spend in the region of £150,000 on cabin safety research in 1987-88, much of which has relevance to smoke hoods.

I understand that the CAA plans to make an announcement about the use of smoke hoods before the end of 1987.

BA-BCal Merger

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the implications for charter companies at Gatwick airport of the proposed British Airways/British Caledonian merger.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are aware of the charter airlines' concerns about their competitive position at Gatwick, both from their representations to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission and from general contacts with them.

Motorways (Accident Statistics)

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents have occurred in the approaches to contra-flow systems on motorways for each individual year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The statistics requested are available only at disproportionate cost.

Dial-a-Ride Service (London)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department will give assistance to the London Regional Transport Authority to encourage an expanded use of the London Dial-a-Ride service in order to provide at least one trip a week for disabled people.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I explained the Government's position in the Adjournment debate on transport for people with disabilities on 12 November at columns 676-80. As to funding for next year, I refer to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir G. Young) on 17 November.

London Underground (Safety)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a list of incidents on the railways of London Underground Limited since 1 January 1986 when electrical, mechanical or human failure put passengers' safety at direct risk.

Mr. David Mitchell: Prescribed accidents that occur on the railways of London Underground Limited (LUL) are reportable to the Secretary of State under statutory instrument. Many of these incidents are of a minor nature and are not required to be reported individually. All reported accidents are contained within the statistics published in the Department's annual report on the safety record of the railways in Great Britain, a copy of which is in the Library. The table lists those incidents where passenger safety was put at direct risk: only two resulted in serious injury to a passenger.

Subsequently I am only too sadly aware of the serious fire that occurred at King's Cross on 18 November. This incident is not included in the table; it will, however, be the subject of a formal inquiry and a report will be published in due course.

Cause	Number of incidents 1986	1987
Technical fault
Lift and escalator	2	3
Train	1	2
Track	—	1
Human error
Staff	1	1
Other persons	2	3
Vandalism	13	8
Minor fires in tunnels	3	4

Newly Qualified Drivers

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to impose restrictions on the size of engine of cars and the maximum speeds that can be driven by people in the first 12 months after passing their driving test; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. There is no evidence that this would lead to significant road safety benefits and there would be difficulties in enforcing such arrangements.

Accident Statistics

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many road accidents involving personal injury or death, excluding motor cycles, were recorded in England and Wales involving drivers between the ages of 17 and 18 years for the latest available year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 1986 there were 16,378 recorded accidents in England and Wales where (a) one or more drivers or cyclists were aged 17 or 18; and (b) no two-wheeled motor vehicle was involved.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many road accidents involving personal injury or death, excluding motor cycles, were recorded in England and Wales for the latest available year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 1986 the number or recorded accidents in England and Wales involving death or personal injury which did not involve a two-wheeled motor vehicle was 215,240.

Child Passengers

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the numbers of children travelling in (a) the front seat or (b) the rear seat of passenger cars who were killed or injured; and how many were (i) restrained or (ii) carried unrestrained, for each year since 1983.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The relevant information is in the table:

Transport Authorities (Government Funding)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what criteria the Government fund (a) 12 per cent. of West Yorkshire's public transport expenditure and (b) 36 per cent. of the expenditure of most other passenger transport authorities.

Mr. Channon: Like all other local authorities, the block grant allocation of each passenger transport authority depends on its grant-related expenditure per head, its rateable value per head and its expenditure per head in excess of its GRE. West Yorkshire's GRE is significantly lower than four of the other five PTAs, and its expenditure is substantially in excess of its GRE.

Driving Tests

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish his proposals for driving licence tests.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 18 November 1987]: The aim of the review was to find ways of improving the driver testing service without prejudicing its integrity. I am determined to cut the queues for tests; to reduce the wastage of resources implicit in a failure rate of over 50 per cent; and to end the situation in which candidates — the customers — cannot get through to booking sections on the telephone.

The report has just been submitted. It proposes a strategy for immediate action to cut waiting times quickly and a package of longer-term measures to improve the standard of candidates coming for test and hence increase the pass rate. Provided these improvements can be delivered, I am inclined to accept the review's general conclusion that the best way forward would be to build on the current system rather than to privatise driver testing. I have accordingly asked for an action plan to be formulated as a matter of priority.

The review emphasises that too many candidates take the test too soon and fail. That lengthens the queues for everyone else. The worst 20 per cent. of candidates have virtually no chance of passing. If they delayed their tests until they were ready, queues could be halved in a year. Candidates should seek and follow their instructors' advice about whether they are ready to take the test and instructors should give firm and professional advice even where it may be unwelcome.

The review also discusses ways of providing learner drivers with a better basis on which to choose a good instructor and of encouraging all instructors to bring their performance up to the standard of the best. These are very important aspects. Good teaching produces good drivers. I am keen to move forward in these areas as quickly as possible and am consulting those concerned with a view to finalising a programme for action early in the new year which might contribute to my general goal of improving driving standards and reducing casualties.

I am placing copies of the report in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Select Committees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord Privy Seal if he will list in full those substantive motions arising from reports of departmental Select Committees which have been agreed to by the House.

Mr. Wakeham: The following is the information:

On 5 June 1980 it was resolved, "That this House welcomes the important contribution made by the Report of the Home Affairs Committee relating to section 4 of the Vagrancy Act 1824, accepts the need for a change in the law, and looks forward to the imminent publication of the Law Commission's Report on Attempt and to the public response to these reports, as providing the basis for an early decision as to the best way of reforming the law while ensuring adequate protection for the public." (The motion was amended.)

On 5 December 1980 it was resolved, "That this House takes note of the Second Report from the Social Services Committee, Session 1979-80, on perinatal and neonatal mortality (House of Commons Paper No. 663) and the relevant Government Observations (Cmnd. 8084)."

On 6 June 1985 it was resolved, "That this House notes that the period for consultation on the consultative document on wages councils is only just ending and representations are still being received; and asks the Government to take into account the views of the Employment Committee, together with very many other responses from interested organisations and individuals." (The motion was amended.)

On 13 May 1986 it was resolved, "That this House welcomes the steps taken by the Government to keep the House and the public informed of the consequences for the United Kingdom of the accident at the nuclear plant at Chernobyl in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; endorses the Government's commitment to the safety of the complete nuclear fuel cycle in the United Kingdom; and in that context approves the Government's first stage response on 2 May to the Environment Committee's report on radioactive waste (House of Commons Paper No. 191), setting out as it does the principles against which current proposals to dispose of low-level radioactive waste can be considered." (An amendment was moved to the motion.)

On 7 July 1986 it was resolved,"That this House endorses the Government's response (HC 457) to the Second Report from the Trade and Industry Committee on the Tin Crisis (HC 305-I); regrets the difficulties brought upon the Cornish tin industry, the International Tin Council's creditors and others as a result of the failure of the International Tin Council to reach agreement with its creditors, despite the considerable efforts made by the Government, and welcomes the Government's package of measures to help employment in Cornwall." (An amendment was moved to the motion.)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord Privy Seal, for each of the years since the establishment of the new Select Committees, if he will list the number of reports published, the number debated on the Floor of the House, and the number voted upon.

Mr. Wakeham: A total of 565 reports have been published by the departmental Select Committees since 1979. During the same period, 60 reports from departmental Select Committees have been referred to on the Order Paper as relevant to debates in the House in accordance with the views expressed by the Liaison Committee. Sixteen reports have been debated in relation to the consideration of the Estimates; four on motions for the Adjournment; and six reports have been named in substantive motions. Votes were taken on four of these substantive motions.

EMPLOYMENT

Beach-cleaning Projects

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many beach-cleaning projects have been agreed to with the Manpower Services Commission for community programmes; and how many beach-cleaning projects under the community programme have been vetoed by trades unions.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is not available.

YMCA (Portsmouth)

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will seek to amend the law or change the practice which leads the Manpower Services Commission to prevent the YMCA, Penny street, Old Portsmouth, from advertising for an employee to help with Manpower Services Commission training schemes in terms of a supporter of the Christian aims and purposes of the YMCA; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: No such restriction has been imposed.

Residential Accommodation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if any residential accommodation is provided for Ministers in his Department and charged to public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: No residential accommodation is provided for Ministers in this Department.

Community Programme

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list community programme schemes which have not been proceeded with as a result of failure to secure trades union co-operation or agreement.

Mr. Lee: The Manpower Services Commission does not keep records of community programme project proposals which do not proceed.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomatic Bag

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish evidence available to him on the use of the diplomatic bag for smuggling cannabis, heroin and black rhino horn into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: We have no evidence that the diplomatic bag is used for smuggling cannabis, heroin and black rhino horn into the United Kingdom.

British Subjects (Imprisonment)

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in the Official Report the names of British subjects currently imprisoned in (a) Iran, (b) Iraq and (c) Libya, and the offences they were charged with.

Mr. Eggar: There are two British citizens, Mr. Roger Cooper and Mr. Nicolaos Yianni Nicola, detained in Iran. Despite our repeated representations neither has been formally charged.

There are two British citizens, Mr. John Smith and Mr. Ian Richter, imprisoned in Iraq. Mr. Smith was convicted on a charge of bribery, and Mr. Richter was convicted on charges of bribery and forgery. There is one British citizen, Mr. James Abra, imprisoned in Libya. He was convicted on a charge of jeopardising revolutionary security by passing secret information to an agent or agents of a foreign Government (espionage).

Non-Proliferation Treaty (Pakistan)

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning alleged breaches by Pakistan of the non-proliferation treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Pakistan has not signed the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Alex Archibald

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken in the case of Alex Archibald, the Scot held by the Thai authorities, for alleged currency offences.

Mr. Eggar: Our consular staff in Bankok visit Mr. Archibald regularly. We remain in touch with his family.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date and with what procedure and ceremony, the Anglo-Irish Agreement was registered with the United Nations Organisation.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Anglo-Irish Agreement was registered, in accordance with article 102 of the charter, at 11 am on 19 December 1985 simultaneously by the permanent representatives of Ireland and of the United Kingdom.

Residential Accommodation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any residential accommodation is provided for Ministers in his Department and charged to public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: A flat in a Government building is provided for my right hon. and learned Friend in central London.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Lord Chancellor (Pension)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the pension payable to a retired Lord Chancellor.

Mr. Brooke: Since section 29 of the Parliamentary and Other Pensions Act 1972 provides that the Lord Chancellor's pension shall be a fixed proportion of final salary, the pensions of former Lord Chancellors reflect their salary at the time of retirement. These pensions attract pensions increase under the Pensions Increase Act 1971, subject to the condition that they may not exceed the pension that would be payable to the incumbent if he retired. Thus, pensions of former Lord Chancellors cannot at present exceed £35,275.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the pension payable to a former Lord Chancellor is paid in full where the former Lord Chancellor is appointed to a judicial office.

Mr. Brooke: No. Under the letters patent granted to each Lord Chancellor, a pension is not payable while he is in receipt of moneys from an office of profit under the crown equal to or greater than the value of the pension. If the remuneration from such an office is less than the pension, the pension is abated by the amount of such remuneration.

Information

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advertising agents have been appointed by his Department, or by the Central Office of Information on behalf of his Department, to handle campaigns involving the communication of information on subjects for which his Department is responsible to Parliament during the year 1985-86; what was the subject of each campaign; and how much was spent on each campaign.

Mr. Brooke: In 1985-86, the Treasury incurred expenditure on the employment of advertising agents for work on two privatisations:

Britoil—August 1985—Dewe Rogerson Ltd.
Cable & Wireless — December 1985 — Collett Dickinson, Pearce & Partners.

In addition, the Central Office of Information incurred expenditure on the Treasury's behalf for the Cable & Wireless prospectus using Dorland Advertising Limited.

Total pre-sale publicity costs (excluding VAT) for each of the two privatisations were:

	£'000
Cable & Wireless	2,422
Britoil	3,528

United States Dollars

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been spent so far in 1987 by the Bank of England in purchasing United States dollars.

Mr. Lilley: It is not the practice to disclose details of intervention.

Authorised Deposit Takers

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to what criteria will be used in determining whether, when, and which Japanese finance houses join the list of authorised deposit takers in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lilley: The criteria envisaged in the Banking Act 1987.

Standard Chartered Bank

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to whether the Bank of England will make public the conclusions of its investigation into the recent affairs of Standard Chartered bank.

Mr. Lilley: As I indicated in my reply to the hon. Member on 26 October at column 33, the full report of the investigation will be subject to Banking Act confidentiality. However, the Bank of England has said that it intends to make the general conclusions public.

Crown Estate Commissioners

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if there are any plans to privatise holdings run by the Crown Estate Commissioners in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lawson: There are no such plans.

Interest Rates

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the level of interest rates.

Mr. Lilley: Bank base rates are 9 per cent.

Housing Expenditure

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the projected level of public expenditure on housing for 1987-88 compared with 1979, expressed at current prices.

Mr. Major: The table compares the estimated outturn of public expenditure on housing in Great Britain for 1987-88 with the outturn of expenditure for 1978-79 expressed at 1987-88 prices.

Housing Expenditure in Great Britain

£ million

	Gross capital	[1]Current
[2]1978-79	6,434	3,493
1987-88	4,704	1,524

EC Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Lawson: The ECOFIN Council met in Brussels on 16 November. I represented the United Kingdom. Recent developments in the financial and foreign exchange markets were discussed. The council considered it of high importance that the fiscal and monetary co-operation agreed at the Louvre should be continued. European countries were determined to improve the conditions for further internally generated non-inflationary growth, and they intend to co-operate actively with other countries to ensure a more stable development of world financial and foreign exchange markets. Early and appropriate decisions on a further substantial reduction of the United States budget deficit were considered to be especially urgent.

The Council agreed that the monetary committee and committee of central bank governors should be asked to study and report as soon as possible on the Commission's proposals on liberalisation of capital movements and related matters.

The Council confirmed that the economic policy committee should carry out rapidly an economic analysis of the Commission's proposals for the abolition of fiscal frontiers prior to further consideration of the proposals by the Council. I made it clear that the United Kingdom would not permit to come into force any proposals that in any way conflicted with pledges Her Majesty's Government has given concerning the United Kingdom's zero rates of VAT.

The Commission undertook to produce a new proposal for a common system of VAT for works of art, antiques and other used goods. It was agreed that further preparation should be undertaken for a future Council discussion of the draft 18th VAT directive abolishing certain derogations contained in the sixth VAT directive.

The Council agreed that a directive on investment by unit trusts in mortgage-type bonds should be submitted to the European Parliament after the United Kingdom parliamentary scrutiny reserve is raised.

VAT

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total net yield from value added tax on admissions to museums and galleries in the United Kingdom in each year since 1984-85.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 November 1987]: Returns rendered by VAT-registered public museums, libraries and galleries do not distinguish amounts of tax charged on particular aspects of their business, for example on admission charges. It is not possible to identify separately information about museums and galleries from that covering the whole category of museums, libraries and galleries. Aggregate figures of tax due, tax deductible and net tax repayable for such bodies are as follows:

Year	Tax due £ million	Tax deductible £ million	Net tax repayable £ million
1984-85	3·9	4·3	−0·4
1985-86	5·2	6·0	−0·8
1986-87	5·8	7·2	−1·4

THE ARTS

Collections (Display)

Mr. Miller: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) what proportion of the collections acquired by them have been displayed to the public during the last three years in (a) the Tate gallery, (b) the National gallery and (c) the British museum;

(2) what proportion of the collections bequeathed to them have been displayed to the public during the last three years in (a) the Tate gallery, (b) the National gallery and (c) the British museum.

Mr. Luce: All the pictures in the National gallery collection, whether bequeathed or acquired by other means are on permanent display to the public. This is not possible for the Tate gallery or the British museum whose collections are very much larger. Statistics are not available in the form asked for, but all the national museums and galleries are aware of the priority I attach to improving public access to their collections. Any items not selected for permanent display, either because constant exposure would damage them or because space is not available, are, however, available to the public on request. In addition, both institutions regularly rotate items between their reserve collections and public display. I continue to encourage our great national museums and galleries to make the national treasures which they house more widely accessible.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Balderton Hospital

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when a decision will be taken on the future of the Eastdale unit at Balderton hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: A decision will be taken following the consultation currently being undertaken by Central Nottinghamshire district health authority.

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultation procedure with interested bodies will take place on the proposed closure of the Eastdale unit at Balderton hospital; how it will be undertaken; and which community health council will be consulted.

Mrs. Currie: The Central Nottinghamshire district health authority has issued a consultation document to all interested organisations, in accordance with the normal procedures for consultation on proposed hospital closures. Bassetlaw, Central Nottinghamshire, Nottingham, North Lincolnshire and South Lincolnshire community health councils are being consulted.

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, pending a decision on the future of the Eastdale unit at Balderton hospital, it will continue to be available as an option when the discharge or transfer of a patient from a special hospital is being considered by any person or body, including mental health review tribunals, who has responsibility for discharging such a patient; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The unit will remain an option pending a decision on its future.

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the average annual cost for the financial years 1981-82 and 1985-86 of running the Eastdale unit; how many patients in each of these years were resident throughout the year and what was the cost per patient; and what was the average cost of keeping a patient at Rampton hospital for the same period.

Mrs. Currie: The annual cost of running the Eastdale unit in the financial years 1981-82 and 1985-86 was £229,000 and £256,000 respectively. No patient was resident in the unit throughout 1981-82; four were resident throughout 1985-86. The cost per patient was £16,099 in 1981-82 and £24,461 in 1985-86. The cost per patient in Rampton hospital was £16,273 in 1981-82 and £30,411 in 1985-86.

Single Payments

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the totals disbursed in each of the past 10 years, at constant prices, by his Department's offices at (a) Johnstone, (b) Greenock and (c) Irvine in respect of single payments for essential items.

Mr. Portillo: Information regarding the amount paid in single payments for essential items at the Department's local offices at (a) Johnstone, (b) Greenock and (c) Irvine is given at 1987 equivalent prices in the table.

Year	Johnstone £	Greenock £	Irvine £
1979-80	227,271	172,646	420,178
1980-81	345,789	415,490	547,070

[1] 1986-87	927,633	1,595,050	1,895,566

Note: Information is given for the year April to April and is not available for any period before April 1979.

[1] Figures for 1986-87 are provisional.

Solihull District General Hospital

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement as to when each of the principal phases of the new Solihull district general hospital will commence and when the whole scheme will be concluded.

Mrs. Currie: The West Midlands regional health authority is responsible for the management of building schemes contained in its operational capital programme. I understand that decisions are due to be taken shortly concerning the rescheduling of schemes in the programme to enable the authority to remain within budget. My hon. Friend may therefore wish to write to the chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority for the information he requires.

Supplementary Benefit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole were receiving supplementary benefit payments above the standard rate in order to help pay residential or nursing home fees at the latest available date; and if h[illegible]will estimate the total amount of supplementary benefi[illegible]id to those claimants.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information requested is not collected by individual local offices and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Blood Transfusion

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list any regional blood transfusion centres which have since 1982 (a) experienced a shortage of supplies and (b) been unable to supply blood to National Health Service hospitals; and what was the duration of the interruption of supply in each case.

Mrs. Currie: Since 1982 no emergency surgery has been suspended because of shortages of blood from the national blood transfusion service. It is for regional transfusion directors to advise hospitals whether blood for elective surgery is to be restricted, and this information is not held centrally. We are aware that shortages of blood for elective surgery have occurred in London primarily because of its many specialist hospitals.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list, by regional transfusion centre, the units of blood supplied to non-National Health Service hospitals since 1982.

Mrs. Currie: The figures held centrally for units of blood supplied from regional transfusion centres to non-NHS hospitals since 1982 are as follows:

Regional Blood Transfusion Centre	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
Northern	0	2,236	1,739	1,722	1,678

[1] Oxford have previously been included as a "nil return". It is now thought that this may be incorrect and is being followed up.

Cataract Unit (Manchester)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the proposed day care cataract unit at Manchester royal eye hospital.

Mr. Newton: The provision of patient services at local level is a matter for individual health authorities in conjunction with their regional health authority. The hon. Member may therefore wish to address any queries he has to the chairman of the Central Manchester health authority.

Adjudications

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the practice of tribunals in cases where a notice of appeal against the decision of an adjudication officer is made orally by a claimant.

Mr. Portillo: Under regulation 3(1) of the Social Security (Adjudication) Regulations 1986, appeals to tribunals against adjudication officers' decisions must be in writing. Where an appeal is made verbally, it cannot be accepted as an appeal, and the claimant is advised to lodge a written appeal. Where such an appeal is subsequently received it is treated as though it had been lodged on the date of the original verbal appeal.

AIDS

Mr. Chris Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the projections of AIDS infections in the United Kingdom undertaken by the communicable diseases surveillance centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Last year the communicable diseases surveillance centre published projections for new cases first presenting with symptoms in 1987 and 1988: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 2 July 1987 at column 150. These cases would not be expected to be reported to CDSC until some time later.

The number of reported new AIDs cases is at present doubling every 10 months. If this rate continues during the fourth quarter of 1987, the communicable disease surveillance centre expects a total of about 1,270 cases to have been reported by the end of this year. It expects about 1,500 new cases of Aids to be reported in 1988. These cases of course reflect the pattern and rate of spread of HIV infection some years ago; and on present evidence it is not possible to make reliable estimates for later years.

Mr. Chris Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what reports have been received from the communicable disease surveillance centre of any British citizen having become HIV positive as a result of (a) needlestick injuries and (b) blood splashes.

Mr. Newton: The communicable diseases surveillance centre (CDSC) has received one report of a nurse who seroconverted following a needlestick injury. However, in this case, a small amount of infected blood may have also been injected. The CDSC has received no reports of anyone becoming HIV positive as a result of being splashed with infected blood.

Residential Homes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is (a) the number and (b) the total cost of supplementary benefit claims paid to elderly residents of residential establishments and nursing homes for each office of his Department in Wales in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information requested is not collected by individual local offices and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Attendance Allowance

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what he estimates would be the annual cost of removing the minimum age requirement for payment of the attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated that the complete removal of the lower age limit for entitlement to attendance allowance would result in additional benefit expenditure of about £17 million in a full year at April 1988 rates.

Ambulances

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which ambulance authorities met the ORCON standard for emergency services in 1986; and which ambulance authorities did not meet the ORCON standard in 1986.

Mr. Newton: The information requested will not be available until January 1988. I will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Cytology

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the percentage of unfilled posts in National Health Service cytology laboratories.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that information on vacancies for staff in National Health Service cytology laboratories is not collected centrally.

Mr. Miller (Pension)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department will have finalised the pension award to Mr. Miller, a constituent of the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate, under investigation since January.

Mr. Scott: The query concerning Mr. Miller's 1980-81 contributions has now been resolved and the local office has been instructed to pay arrears of additional pension. Further adjustment will be required on account of increments to the additional pension and this will be dealt with as soon as possible. A final statement of Mr. Miller's entitlement will be sent to him in the near future. I will write to my hon. Friend shortly.

Resettlement Units

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is currently the total number of bed spaces in resettlement units managed by his Department; what have been the occupancy rates over the past year for each unit; and what breakdown is available by age and ethnic origin of the people using each unit.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that there is no breakdown by age and ethnic origin of people using each unit.

The other information requested is as follows:

(1) The total number of bed spaces in the resettlement units managed by the Department is currently 1,836.

(2) The average occupancy rate for each unit for the year ending 20 October 1987 is as follows:

Resettlement unit	Capacity	Average occupancy rate (per cent.)
London
Bridge House (Notting Hill)	120	93
Cedars Lodge (South West London)	100	73
Lancelot Andrewes House (Southwark)	60	96

Births

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the number of live births per special care baby cot in each (a) district health authority and (b) regional health authority in each of the last six years;

(2) what was the number of low and very low birth weight babies per neonatal intensive-care cot for each (a) district health authority and (b) regional health authority;

(3) what was the number of births per midwife for each (a) district health authority and (b) regional health authority in each of the last six years.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 2 November 1987]: The information the hon. Member seeks has now been placed in the Library.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his Department's allowance paid to private nursing homes for each National Health Services patient transferred from mental hospitals.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 9 November 1987]: Arrangements for transferring patients from long-stay hospitals under the care in the community initiative are for local negotiation. Health authorities meet the cost of contractual arrangements for patient care they make with the private sector. Charges vary according to individual circumstances.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate the number of availability cases referred to the social security appeals tribunal, indicating the success rate of such cases when so referred.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 16 November 1987]: A total of 631 appeals were heard in Great Britain in the three months ending 31 March 1987 against the disallowance of unemployment benefit because of non availability for work, of which 212 (34 per cent.) were decided in the claimant's favour. A further 85 appeals were heard against the disallowance of unemployment benefit because the claimant had restricted his or her availability for work, of which 39 (46 per cent.) were decided in the claimant's favour.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, (1) further to his reply of 22 October, Official Report, column 878, to what factors he attributes the increase in the numbers of disallowances between 1980 and 1986;

(2) further to the reply of 22 October, Official Report, column 878,. if he will give a breakdown of the number of disallowances for 1980 and 1986 by sex and age.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 16 November 1987]: Statistics of disallowances are not maintained broken down by age and sex and this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

As regards the increase in the monthly average number of disallowances between the last quarter of 1980 and the last quarter of 1986, I regret that the figures given in the reply of 22 October should have read 3,400 and 6,400 respectively.

Without an in-depth study of availability decisions over the period, it is not possible to state definitively what factors contributed to this increase.

Hospital Admissions

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which are the 10 most common illnesses suffered by patients admitted to National Health Service hospitals for more than seven days.

Mrs. Currie: [holding answer 26 October 1987]: The table shows the 10 most common conditions and groups of conditions for which patients were hospitalised for more than seven days, in order of the greatest numbers of discharge following a stay of seven days or more.

Principal conditions requiring in-patient duration of stay in excess of 7 days, NHS hospitals, England, 1985.

	Diagnosis Codes[1]	Condition
1.	D29/31 (Part)	Mental Illness.[2]
2.	D34/33	Diseases of the digestive system.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a table based on Table 3.14 of the public expenditure White paper (Cm 56-II) with all the figures converted to 1986-87 prices;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a table based on Table 3.14.1 of the public expenditure White paper (Cm 56-II) with all the figures converted to 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Newton [holding answers 26 October 1987]: The information is as follows:

[3] For 1985-86, the figure of £100 million in the White Paper was an error. This has been corrected to £124 million before revaluing to 1986-87 prices. The corrected figure is also reflected in the totals for NHS, HPSS and DHSS expenditure.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Police Cells)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have been cleared from police cells in the last month; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Since 15 October, well over 1,000 prisoners have been taken out of police cells in to prison establishments, and the number of males held in police cells in the south-east has reduced from almost 1,150 to just over 500. The planned movement of prisoners from police cells into prison establishments has been affected by a further substantial increase in the prison population but work continues. In the north region an average of 155 male prisoners has been locked out each night, but the conversion of Hindley from a youth custody centre to a remand centre will resolve this.

Computer Hacking

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals for the amendment of section 8 of the Forgery and Counterfeiting Act 1981 so as to make computer hacking an offence pursuant to that section, having regard to the decision of the Court of Appeal in the case of Regina v. Gold (1987) 3 All ER 618.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 30 October 1987 at column 455.

London Lorry Ban

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been instituted by the Metropolitan police in respect of transgressions of the lorry ban in London in 1986 and the current year to date.

Mr. John Patten: Such prosecutions are not recorded separately in the information available.

Residential Accommodation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if any residential accommodation is provided for Ministers in his Department and charged to public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The Department meets the basic costs of the Home Secretary's official residence: rent; rates; heating; lighting; water rates; maintenance and minor works; furniture and fittings.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will indicate, for (a) Scotland and (b) England and Wales: (i) the number of cases awaiting decisions by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board and (ii) the average length of time taken to dispose of such cases; and if he has any proposals to reduce the time taken to dispose of such cases.

Mr. John Patten: There are about 74,000 applications awaiting resolution by the board. Information on the number of which came from Scotland and from England and Wales is not readily available. Figures published by the board in its annual reports show, however, that about 16 per cent. of all applications arise from incidents in Scotland. On that basis, it is estimated that about 12,000 of the 74,000 total are Scottish cases.

Information is not available on the average length of time taken to deal with applications to the board. As stated in the board's latest annual report (Cm. 42, paragraph 5) copies of which are in the Library, 70 per cent. of cases resolved in the financial year 1985-86 were decided within a year of application.

To help reduce the delays in dealing with applications, the Government have made available an extra £33 million for the criminal injuries compensation scheme for this financial year—an increase of about two thirds over the previous planned provision—and additional funding for later years. This has enabled the board to recruit additional staff for a new office in Glasgow. When fully operational, the Glasgow office will deal with all applications from Scotland and a proportion of those from England and Wales, as well as helping the London office to reduce the arrears.

Footballers (Offences)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many professional footballers have been charged in courts with offences relating to their conduct on the field over the past 10 years.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not available from the records of the results of court proceedings held centrally. However, I understand from the Professional Footballers Association that there has been only one case in the English league since 1977 when a player has been prosecuted following an incident during a match.

Police Horses

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many horses used by the Metropolitan police and retired in each of the past three years have been sold for the purposes of serum production or research or for other experimental purposes; and what are the other destinations for horses unwanted for further police purposes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that none of the police horses retired in the past three years has been sold for purposes of serum production, research or for other experimental purposes. Horses unfit for work are retired to recognised rest homes, humanely destroyed on the advice of a veterinary surgeon and in the presence of a mounted branch officer, or sometimes sold to mounted branch officers. Horses found to be temperamentally unsuitable are sold at the Reading horse sales.

British Nationality

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he will take to advise citizens of dependent territories resident in Britain and seeking British nationality as to the applicability to them of the 31 December deadline for registration.

Mr. Renton: Our information programme has been directed to those eligible to be registered as British citizens under sections 7 and 8 of the British Nationality Act 1981, who must apply before 31 December 1987. No such deadline applies to British dependent territories citizens, who will continue to be able to apply for registration under section 4 on grounds of residence here.

Prisons (Disturbances)

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the action plan on Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons' report on the 1986 prison disturbances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I have now received and endorsed the action plan prepared by the director general of the prison service on the report by the previous Chief Inspector of Prisons, Sir James Hennessy, on the 1986 prison disturbances. As I reported to the House when announcing publication of the report on 16 July, action had been set in hand on a number of fronts, including contingency planning, before the chief inspector's report was received. Work has continued since.

Following the chief inspector's report, all establishments were required to review their contingency arrangements in the light of his findings and to submit revised plans to prison department headquarters by the end of the year. New guidance is to be issued shortly on the industrial relations and personnel management aspects of planning responses to industrial action.

As regards the chief inspector's conclusions on the wider issues, work is being taken forward in the context of the major changes in management structure and working practices — known as fresh start — now being introduced in the prison service.

Metropolitan Police (Inspection)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements have been made for Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary to contribute to the inspection of the Metropolitan police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: At the invitation of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary will in future conduct inspections of aspects of the Metropolitan police. The inspections will complement the internal inspection arrangements already existing in the Metropolitan police, copies of reports of which I already receive.

The inspections will ensure that the Metropolitan police and provincial forces share the experience and best practice of each other. Reports of inspections will be submitted to the Commissioner of Police and to me. The programme of inspections will be agreed between Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary, the Commissioner of Police and myself.

SCOTLAND

Information

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advertising agents have been appointed by his Department, or by the Central Office of Information on behalf of his Department, to handle campaigns involving the communication of information on subjects for which his Department is responsible to Parliament during the year 1985-86; what was the subject of each campaign; and how much was spent on each campaign.

Mr. Rifkind: Two advertising agencies, Woolward McCann Limited and Ogilvy and Mather Scotland Limited, handled my Department's publicity campaigns in the financial year 1985-86.

The subjects of the campaigns and the cost of each were as follows:

	£
Ogilvy & Mather
Right to Buy	96,453·30
Children's Panels	25,009·36
	121,462·66
Woolward McCann

	£
Rates Revaluation	3,087·75
Crime Prevention	45,813·09
Fire Prevention	85,794·25
Multi-Organ Donor Cards	27,649·53
Electoral Registration	27,528·65
Industrial Development Drive	1,439·94
Local Enterprise Week	2,516·01
Scottish Economic Bulletin	1,534·96
Career Service	30,963·07
Botanic Gardens	6,745·02
Road Safety	30,000·45
Control of Pollution	11,054·11
Ombudsman	5,825·21
	279,952·59

Figures include VAT where applicable.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of job vacancies in the Glasgow, Pollok constituency for the latest available date.

Mr. Lang: Vacancy statistics are not available on a parliamentary constituency basis. However, the number of vacancies notified and remaining unfilled on 2 October 1987 at the jobcentres in Barrhead, Govan and Shawlands, which inter alia serve residents of the Glasgow Pollok parliamentary constituency, was 1,094 including 257 community programme vacancies). It is estimated that only around one third of all vacancies nationally are notified to jobcentres.

This information is available in the Library.

Scottish Special Housing Association

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what effect the proposals contained in the recent Scottish Homes document will have on the rights of Scottish Special Housing Association tenants, as guaranteed under the Tenants' Rights, Etc. (Scotland) Act 1980.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. It is proposed that tenants of Scottish Homes shall have exactly the same rights as tenants of the Scottish Special Housing Association. This is made clear in the White Paper, "Housing: The Government's Proposals for Scotland" (Cm. 242), which was published last week. The White Paper also makes it clear that the Government propose to give further rights to public sector tenants, from which the tenants of Scottish Homes will benefit.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the cost to the Scottish Special Housing Association of sending copies of his reply to John Reynolds to all the association's tenants in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This is a matter for the Scottish Special Housing Association. I suggest that the hon. Member writes to the chairman of the association.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a guarantee to Scottish Special Housing Association tenants that rent levels may be subject to an independent fair rent assessment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The rents of houses let by the Scottish Special Housing Association are determined by the association, within boundaries of discretion set by my right hon. and learned Friend. On transfer of these houses to Scottish Homes, it is proposed that the rents shall continue to be determined in a similar way.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ballot Scottish Special Housing Association tenants on the matter of whether they wish to stay within the Scottish Special Housing Association rather than being transferred to Scottish Homes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

Footballers (Offences)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Lord Advocate was consulted by the procurator fiscal in Glasgow before recent charges were made against four professional footballers in respect of their conduct on the field; what offences the players have been charged with; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate was consulted by the procurator fiscal before the four players were charged by the police with breach of the peace. Since the matter is still under consideration by the procurator fiscal, it would be inappropriate for me to make any statement at this time.

Scottish Homes

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to seek to establish a right to buy for tenants of housing associations and other landlords in the independent rented sector which have the benefit of access to public funds through the proposed Scottish Homes organisation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not proposed that the existence of a financial contribution by Scottish Homes towards the construction or improvement of a house should determine whether or not the house is one to which the right to buy applies.

Right to Buy

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to continue the right of public sector tenants to buy their homes where the ownership of the property is transferred to other landlords under the proposals in the White Paper "Housing: The Government's Proposals for Scotland."

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to bring forward soon detailed proposals for legislation covering various aspects of transfer of ownership of public sector housing.

School Management

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of representations he has received on the consultative paper "School Management and the Role of Parents"; how many of these representations (a) fully supported (b) partially supported, and (c) opposed the Government's proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: By the deadline date of 3 November we had received some 6,500 submissions. Many take the form of detailed comments on our proposals. It is not possible to classify them in the form requested. The main principle of increasing parental and community involvement in education by providing bodies at the level of the individual school is widely supported.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Information

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advertising agents have been appointed by his Department, or by the Central Office of Information, on behalf of his Department, to handle campaigns involving the communication of information on subjects for which his Department is responsible to Parliament during the year 1985-86; what was the subject of each campaign; and how much was spent on each campaign.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In 1985-86 Doyle Dane Bernbach Ltd. was appointed by the Central Office of Information on behalf of my department to handle the rabies prevention campaign. The expenditure involved was £73,300.

Council of Ministers

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers' meeting on 16 and 17 November in Brussels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given in the House on 19 November to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner).

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fireworks

Mr. Sims: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received recently urging a ban on the retail sale of fireworks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I have received about 50 letters from hon. Members and from the public asking for further restrictions on the sale of fireworks. This is rather less than in previous years. Judging by reports from the police, fire brigades and hospitals, November the Fifth this year seems to have gone well, although it is too early to be sure about the accident and injury figures. It seems likely that the strengthened legislation against firework offences is having an effect. Our publicity campaign this year was very well received. Taking all these factors into account, I remain convinced that it would be wrong to ban the retail sale of fireworks to legitimate users because of abuse by a minority.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish in the Official Report details of the numbers of children and adults injured in accidents involving fireworks in each of the last five years.

Mr. Maude: A full breakdown of figures for 1981 to 1986 was published in the Official Report on 6 March 1987, columns 718-20. The figures for 1987 will be made known to the House as soon as they are available, which is normally in March.

Office of Fair Trading

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the guidelines set forth by the Office of Fair Trading are subject to review or appeal; and whether, in view of the number of new cases, he has received further complaints about the operation of the guidelines.

Mr. Maude: The recommendations contained in the Office of Fair Trading's May 1986 review of the distribution of newspapers and periodicals are a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading. I understand that his office continues to receive a large number of representations about the wholesale supply of newspapers, and he is keeping the situation under close review.

British Steel Corporation

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the Government's plans to privatise the British Steel Corporation.

Mr. Atkins: The Government believe that the British Steel Corporation will be best placed to continue its improvement of recent years if its activities are returned to the private sector. No decisions have yet been taken, however, as to how or when the corporation is to be privatised.

Manufacturing

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on the level of manufacturing output in (a) Scotland, (b) England and (c) the United Kingdom (i) now and (ii) in 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Comparable information on gross domestic product for the manufacturing sector is given for Scotland, England and the United Kingdom in the 1987 and earlier editions of "Regional Trends", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Cinemas

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what information he has on the average quarterly revenue per cinema in 1967, 1977, 1985 and 1987;

(2) what information he has on the box office revenue (a) inclusive of value-added tax, and (b) exclusive of value-added tax from cinema admissions in the first quarter of 1967, 1977, 1985 and 1987;

(3) what information he has on how many cinema sites there were in operation in the United Kingdom in the first quarter of 1967, 1977, 1985 and 1987;

(4) what information he has as to how many cinema screens there were in operation in the United Kingdom in the first quarter of 1967, 1977, 1985 and 1987;

(5) what information he has as to how many admissions there were to cinemas in the United Kingdom in the first quarter of 1967, 1977, 1985 and 1987.

Mr. Butcher: The available information is given in the table:

	1967	1977	1985	[1]1987
Average quarterly revenue per cinema (£ thousand)[2,3]	8	21	48	90
Box office revenue (£ million)[2,4]	14	21	32	30
Number of cinema sites[4]	1,736	1,004	655	277
Number of cinema screens[4,5]	n.a.	1,510	1,238	706
Admissions (millions)[4]	66	26	17	16

n.a. = not available.

[1] Information prior to 1987 is based on statutory returns from licensed cinemas in Great Britain. 1987 figures refer to returns from a voluntary panel of cinema exhibitors in the United Kingdom.

[2] Figures for box office revenues are only available inclusive of value-added tax (VAT) for 1977 and 1985, and exclusive of VAT for 1987. VAT was not levied in 1967.

[3] Information for 1985 is based on the first quarter of the year only, that for 1987 on the first half of the year.

[4] Box office revenue and admission figures for the first quarters of 1967, and 1977 are a quarter of the annual figures. The numbers of cinema sites and screens for these years refer to licensed cinemas open at the end of the year and any open for at least 26 weeks during the year but temporarily closed at the end of the year.

[5] Information on the number of cinema screens was not collected until 1969, when there were 22 more screens than sites. The difference between the number of sites and screens in 1967—will have been small.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to how many commercial films have been made in the United Kingdom in each year since 1977.

Mr. Butcher: Before the passing of the Films Act 1985, British films released for public exhibition in cinemas had to be registered by my Department. The 1985 Act, however, removed these registration requirements with effect from 23 May 1985 and there are no official statistics of films since that date. The information I have, which does not include training, industrial, scientific or other "corporate" films, is as follows:

Registered British Films under previous Films Acts

	Over 72 minutes	33⅓ to 72 minutes	Under 33⅓ minutes
1977	42	16	64
1978	51	8	72
1979	40	16	87
1980	41	16	66
1981	32	9	73
1982	29	4	51
1983	36	3	49
1984	37	3	26
[1]1985	18	1	7

[1] Period from 1 January 1985 to 23 May 1985 only.

British Industry (Prospects)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his latest assessment of future prospects for British industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Output should continue to expand, particularly in manufacturing industry, helped by the greater flexibility and competitiveness which our policies are designed to encourage.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES

VOLUME 122

SESSION 1987-88

9th November-20th November 1987

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.

[Mr. Barron]

The figures of youth unemployment paint a very grim picture. There are seven electoral wards in the Rother valley constituency and they all have an excess of one third of people between the ages of 18 and 25 unemployed. A total of 2,149 young people in my constituency are registered as being out of work, and that figure does not include the many hundreds of people who are on youth training schemes or community programmes.

It is not surprising that youth unemployment is so high. In the past, many young people were recruited and trained by the coal mining industry, just as I was trained in the 1960s. That no longer happens. In 1986-87, British Coal recruited only 33 workers in the whole of the south Yorkshire coalfield, and recruited only 2,000 in the country as a whole. In 1978-79, over 20,000 were recruited to the industry. Not only do young people not get jobs with British Coal, but they no longer receive any training.

Mr. Allan Rogers (Rhondda): Does my hon. Friend accept that nationalised industries such as the Coal Board in areas such as Yorkshire and south Wales were the main trainers of young people? By way of electrical, mining and fitting apprenticeships, young people were able to develop skills. The privatised industries, such as British Gas and in future the electricity industry and in recent years British Coal, are not training young people. That means that unemployed young people have no skills, no options and no opportunities to go into developing employment.

Mr. Barron: My hon. Friend the Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers) raises an important point. I was trained as an electrician in the coal mines in the 1960s and the idea of craft apprenticeships being offered in my constituency has been unheard of for well over four years. I highlighted this major problem in the industry during a debate that I had in the House in May on youth unemployment.

Young people were not trained as electricians and fitters and for other skilled trades merely for the coal industry. It is a major point that these people were trained and entered private industry in south Yorkshire. What remains of the training programme is now threatened because young people are not being taken on. Nothing has changed since I had that debate on youth unemployment in the Rother valley. Between April and September last year, only 38·4 per cent. of YTS leavers in the Rotherham area found full-time jobs, and over 36 per cent. of YTS leavers last year in Rotherham became immediately unemployed.

It is clear that permanent jobs for young people in that area have disappeared and the training schemes that are available are not proving to be a solution to that major problem. In March this year the number of unfilled vacancies in the Rotherham-Mexborough travel-to-work area was 364. That is one vacancy per 63 persons registered as unemployed, compared with the national figure of one per 15. Training and retraining is not just a problem for school leavers, but also for miners coming out of the coal industry in my area.

The jobs and career change scheme, which is a joint enterprise between British Coal Enterprise and the Manpower Services Commission, is an inadequate response to the urgent and pressing needs of our area. Very few people have taken up the retraining scheme and even fewer have completed the course. In September last year, only 447 people had commenced retraining and only 296 completed it. It is no wonder that a report on the scheme commissioned by the Coalfield Communities Campaign and carried out by the department of land economy at Cambridge university concluded:

"the British coal scheme is not adequate to meet the scale of the problem and that training opportunities in coalfield areas are fairly limited."

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Does my hon. Friend recall that, as a result of the confidence trick pulled by the Government in setting up British Coal Enterprise, the chairman of that organisation, Merrik Spanton, appeared before a group of MPs at a meeting that I chaired here just before the Recess? We asked Merrik Spanton to tell us precisely where the new jobs were in every constituency throughout the coalfields of Britain. We asked where the £30 million had gone. He would not give us a list, or place one in the Library. That scheme was set up in a flurry of excitement by the Prime Minister and the Government during the coal strike. It is a big confidence trick and no jobs have ensued. The Government ought to be surcharged for the use——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. Clearly, a large number of hon. Members are waiting to take part in the debate. Interventions must be brief and hon. Members who make them will be borne in mind when they seek to catch my eye.

Mr. Skinner: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think that a point of order arises. Mr. Barron.

Mr. Barron: I can tell my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) that I intend to go into the details of British Coal Enterprise. [Interruption.] He raises a good point about British Coal Enterprise Ltd. In reality, its setting up is the only way the Government have responded to the problems in any sort of direct fashion. When it was set up I think that I described it in the House as a knee-jerk reaction to the basic problems that had caused the 1984-85 miners' strike. It was set up in the summer of 1984 as an afterthought to respond to the plight of miners involved in colliery closures and the problems that that created in coalfield communities.

The major plank of the Government's success, or non-success, story has been British Coal Enterprise Ltd. and they place great store by its claim to success. The Government say that to date it has created just over 16,000 job opportunities. British Coal Enterprise Ltd. offers three main forms of help. Two of them have provided some aid to local authorities. It has contributed to the provision of managed workshops for small businesses and has supported the enterprise agencies. They are both limited but worthwhile areas of support for local authority initiatives.

The third form of help has been loans to companies, which has assisted in the creation of about 16,000 job opportunities in the coalfields since it began. However, it is impossible to check the accuracy of the figures that British Coal Enterprise Ltd. has produced, because it will not name the companies that it assists and it will not even provide a detailed regional breakdown. Loans average about only 15 per cent. of project costs and are never above 25 per cent. British Coal Enterprise Ltd. never initiates business development through its loan scheme. It tends to just marginally cut the cost of investment that would take place anyway.

On current trends, British Coal Enterprise Ltd. will reach the stage where it has outstanding loans of about £50 million, which will stabilise as repayments are made and bad debts start to be written off. The cost to the Government to provide that amount on cheap terms at the most is about £3 million a year, or about 6 per cent. In addition, it spends about another £3 million a year on salaries, managed workshops and enterprise agencies.

Recent coal job losses have been in the region of 100,000 to 150,000, depending on definition. British Coal Enterprise Ltd. aims to offset those jobs at £6 million a year, over a period of eight years, at a total cost of £48 million. Even on the most generous assumption, it envisages spending £480 per job, or an average figure of about £300 per job, to relieve those jobs that have been lost in the industry. If it could achieve that miracle in job creation, it would be in demand all over the Western world. It is just not feasible that it can do it in that fashion.

Earlier this year, the House of Commons Energy Committee report, "The Coal Industry," reported positively about some of the industry's problems. It recommended that the resources allocated to British Coal Enterprise should more nearly match the size of the problems encountered in coal mining areas. The Committee concluded in paragraph 131:

> "If the macro-economic and social disbenefits of the polices of the management of a strategic industry like coal outweigh the benefits to society of those policies, then it is the job of the government to right the balance by fiscal or other means."

In the Government's response to the report, published in May just before the general election campaign, they dodged any direct response to that recommendation.

In paragraph 133, the Committee stated:

> "The worst sort of indifference to the community is displayed when no proper opportunity is given to prepare for a closure."

That obviously referred to colliery closures. It continued:

> "The 1985 strike was precipitated by the decision to bring forward the closure of Cortonwood colliery where the NCB was regarded by miners as having broken an earlier promise to the community. There should be no further antagonising incident of this type. BC should give more warning when closures are imminent — their attitude at present appears somewhat secretive, even complacent, and we were distressed by the CCC's evidence that BC do not enter into a proper dialogue with local authorities on these matters, a criticism echoed by the Local Authorities Associations. This was the burden of a large part of the report of the independent review body which recommended a delay in the proposal to close Cadeby colliery. BC claimed in response that 'the arrangements under which the Board close collieries are more extensive in timescale and consultation with the workforce and their representatives than those of any other major employer in the country'. However, the Board must recognise the special vulnerability of mining communities which we outlined in the introduction to this report, and must take local authorities, responsible Government departments and statutory agencies into its confidence as soon as it begins to suspect that a colliery might need to be closed. Only by so doing will BC justify its claim to be 'like any good employer . . . extremely concerned about the impact of their operational decisions on both their employees and local mining communities'."

The Government's reply in paragraph 5.2 of their response referred to a timetable of four to five months if those concerned decide to challenge a closure. However, if that challenge is not made, the closure will go ahead. That affects not just those who work in the industry but the whole community. It affects small businesses, local transport, pensioners, schoolchildren and women. A number of coal mines have been closed in the last two years by the dangling of carrots with massive redundancy payments. Even this financial year, if miners do not accept closures 13 weeks from the end of the financial year, people who were considering redundancy will lose the £5,000 carrot on top of current redundancy payments.

That is how British Coal is closing coal mines at present, with no respect to the problems caused in the communities. It is a disgrace that the Government have not responded positively to what the Select Committee, which has a majority of Conservative Members, felt that they ought to do.

The Select Committee also recommended that a special ministerial Cabinet Committee should be set up. The Government, in their response, said that there was no role for a Cabinet Committee; yet they have recognised the needs of inner cities and have set up a Cabinet Committee to co-ordinate the work of seven Government Departments to set priorities and oversee results. If the inner cities need that response to their problems caused by the Government—I do not deny that they need that real commitment — so do the coalfields, as they have similarly suffered, although they need different solutions to their problems.

Dr. Dafydd Elis Thomas (Meirionnydd Nant Conwy): Does the hon. Member accept that coalfield communities in the valleys of south Wales and the other areas that he has mentioned suffer similar deprivation to many of our inner city communities? Does he agree, therefore, that it is essential not only for there to be a special programme for those communities but also that regional policies should be more effective to ensure that resources are distributed effectively?

Mr. Barron: I was about to mention that point. If one took six of the villages in my constituency and put them together, they would have similar housing problems to those of any inner city that the Government are assisting. While many coalfield areas benefit from United Kingdom assisted areas status, substantial areas are excluded, which also excludes them from any existing European aid that may be available.

In paragraph 144 of the report, the Committee stated:

> "It is far from clear that the present distribution of regional aid properly reflects the needs of the mining communities or the advantages of Community membership. We believe Government should have pressed harder to obtain a larger share of EEC aid and we urge a firmer determination to make more persuasive representations for additional assistance."

The Government did not accept that recommendation, and in paragraph 5.10 of their response they describe the objectives of their regional policy, which are:

> "to reduce employment imbalances between regions rather than dealing with particular sections of industry in decline."

If that is correct, it begs the question: when unemployment in Yorkshire is increasing, particularly in areas that have traditionally relied on coal and steel, why have the Government cut regional development grants, at 1986 prices, from £58 million in 1978-79 to £21 million in 1986-87? At the same time, they have carried through a policy of deliberately running down the steel and coal industries that south Yorkshire has been built on for generations. While the Government may argue that regional development grants are not the only avenue of assistance, other forms of help have not succeeded. Rotherham, a borough that I represent, has an enterprise zone and also gets selected financial assistance from the Government. However, that has not stopped unemployment increasing.

The Government have rejected the idea of tax incentives as a means of attracting the private sector into areas of high unemployment, although there are some who claim that this policy has been successful in achieving urban renewal in the United States. During September, I visited West Virginia in the United States, which is a coal mining area with problems similar to those that are faced in my constituency. In West Virginia there is a partnership scheme between local authorities and the private sector, but the British Government are less disposed to recognise the role that local authorities can play. They often ignore local authorities, presumably for party political reasons, and in so doing display a lack of common sense. Partnership schemes could help areas that have suffered from the rundown of the coal and steel industries. Unfortunately, the Government seem to be prepared to allow these areas to become wastelands.

There is evidence of that attitude in the Government's neglect of the environment within coalfield areas. Last year, at the invitation of the Coalfield Communities Campaign, the hon. Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey), who was then an Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, visited coalfield communities in Yorkshire and north Derbyshire, including the one which I represent. He was quoted in the press as saying that he was > "deeply depressed by the experience and understood why people in the coalfield areas thought that current spending on restoring the coalfield environment was not enough to solve the problems of unemployment and increasing poverty in such areas."

It was an honest appraisal from the then Minister. The fact that the hon. Gentleman now sits on the Government Back Benches — in other words, he does not hold a ministerial position — perhaps says much for the Government's attitude to the Coalfield Communities Campaign.

Mr. Michael Welsh (Doncaster, North): The Coalfield Communities Campaign is directed to improving the quality of life in mining communities, and the Government show no desire to help. Does my hon. Friend agree that, if the Government are not prepared to help, they should allow local authorities to spend the moneys that they have in bank deposits as a result of selling council houses so that they can help to improve the quality of life and revitalise coalfield areas? Local authorities could use these moneys to buy old pit houses. Some of the miners who live in these properties do not know who owns them. The spending of local authority money would improve the quality of life and encourage new industry and commerce to come into the areas that we are discussing.

Mr. Barron: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for that intervention. I can do no more than agree with him. Central Government ignore the plight of coalfield communities and prevent initiatives being taken locally by those who are concerned about the problems in their neighbourhood. It is difficult to understand the Government's approach.

Paragraph 142 of the Select Committee's report states:

> "it is indefensible for British Coal to delay the return of derelict sites to economic productivity. We maintain that it is the responsibility of British Coal to liaise closely with local authorities to ensure the most rapid possible return of mining sites to productive use."

It is well known that, in 1982, when the Department of the Environment's last national survey was undertaken, spoil heaps, excavations and tips — coalfield dereliction — accounted for 48 per cent. of Britain's derelict land that justified reclamation. If the associated dereliction as a result of railway closures is also taken into account, the coalfields' share of dereliction becomes even greater. The amount of dereliction has increased markedly as a result of the closures within the coal industry since 1982.

All the local authorities in coalfield areas have been running reclamation and environment improvement programmes in an effort to overcome the problems of dereliction and to make their areas more attractive to investors. Major improvements have been achieved, but the rapid rundown of collieries and industrial closures over the past seven years have overstretched these programmes. To the legacy of dereliction that stemmed from about 100 years of uncontrolled industrial activity has been added the new dereliction that has come from the recent wave of colliery closures. In addition, the rundown of the steel and shipbuilding industries has resulted in serious industrial dereliction.

Mr. Martin Redmond (Doon Valley): Is my hon. Friend aware that British Coal has adopted a vicious attitude towards welfare schemes that our forefathers saw fit to introduce to improve the quality of life in mining villages? The board is seeking to sell off playing fields. Will my hon. Friend join me — I ask Conservative Members to do likewise—in condemning British Coal's approach to the welfare schemes?

Mr. Barron: I am pleased to join my hon. Friend in condemning what is happening in many mining areas. In the area which I represent, the local authority bought into welfare schemes during the late 1970s. These facilities are now under even greater threat because the Local Government Bill will oblige local authorities to put out their services to tender. In areas where the local authority did not buy in, miners in work had to pay a subscription to support welfare schemes. With manpower being run down, it is obvious that the schemes are in jeopardy. In many instances, they provide the only source of recreation. They must not be left to the vagaries of the market. Someone must step in and ensure that the recreation that the schemes provide stays within the Community. I hope that this issue will be taken up during the debate.

The Government's response to the problem of derelict land has been to ignore it or to leave it to others. Some successes have been achieved with the Scottish Development Association and the Welsh Development Association, but many areas of England leave much to be desired. Many in coalfield areas feel — I believe with some justification—that their communities are being left to decay. These are communities in which people must live, bring up their children, care for the elderly and work, if employment is available to them. These local people are part of the social fabric. The tasks that face them are becoming even more difficult, and one of the reasons is the Government's attitude, and that of British Coal, towards the sale of British Coal housing. The motion refers specifically to Shelter's report entitled "Pits and Mortar". It provides an excellent description of what is happening in many communities throughout Britain.

Paragraph 132 of the Select Committee's report states that British Coal

> "manage their housing in a responsible manner."

This it has not done, despite representations that have been made to it by the Department of Energy, the Department of the Environment and right hon. and hon. Members. Nothing has been done. I have talked on many occasions to tenants and the representatives of housing associations and local authorities. I have spoken and written to Ministers to try to bring help to my constituents. Unfortunately, the Government have closed their ears. Against that background it is not surprising that their response to "Pits and Mortar" has been a deafening silence. The report provides a vivid description of the difficulties that tenants of ex-British Coal houses are facing in having to live with new landlords. There are dozens of reasons why there should be no further sale of this housing.

I shall give the House some examples from my constituency. In Kiveton Park there are homes that are classified under the Housing Defects Act 1984, which in itself has created many problems. It has effectively put a stigma on these houses, even though they are now described as providing an ideal opportunity for DIY enthusiasts. This description is applied in an attempt to re-sell houses that were bought in October 1986 by private landlords for £3,250. They are now being offered at prices between £7,000 and £9,050. As I have said, they are described as providing an ideal opportunity for DIY enthusiasts, and they are the people who are living in those properties.

No mention is made of the problems faced by Mrs. Richardson, for example, who describes her dealings with her new landlords as follows:

> "We get drowned at the back due to faulty guttering and the garage doors are coming off. They were never fixed. So I stopped the rent. He came back"— this is the new landlord—

> "and said, 'It's against the law to withhold rent.' I told him, 'It's against the law not to do repairs!' I agreed to pay the rent for six weeks during which he would do the repairs. It's now eleven weeks and no one has come."

The secretary of the tenants' association of Kiveton Park, Mrs. Whaley, describes the overall position as follows:

> "There's a lot of problems along with water coming in and panel joints, dangerous electricity and generally no repairs. No one knows how to get their repairs done and writing letters just doesn't seem to work. When repairs are done, they are often done badly."

It is not only tenants in so-called defective houses who are suffering from the policy of British Coal and that of the Government. In the Dinnington area—it is a village in my constituency—brick-built houses have been sold off. The home of one of my constituents, Mrs. Turner, was taken over in December 1986. She states:

> "In January"—

that is, January 1987—

> "I had my cold water tank burst. I rang London—nothing happened. They said they couldn't do anything while the cold weather was on."

Mrs. Turner did not get her tank fixed until the following May; during all that time she was unable to use her bath, hot water or washing facilities.

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim (Amber Valley): The hon. Gentleman says that he has problems with private landlords who are not doing repairs in his constituency. He is obviously aware that they are obliged by law to make repairs. If he has constituents who have problems in that respect, surely they should go to see their Member of Parliament who should put pressure on the landlord, possibly legal pressure, to ensure that he does the repairs. My right hon. and hon. Friends have experience of that and we have very few problems with landlords.

Mr. Barron: Mrs. Turner is one of 16 residents in Dinnington village who are currently taking their landlord to court.

Mr. Skinner: The landlord is probably a member of the Conservative party.

Mr. Barron: Yes, he probably is. The landlord is being taken to court by a solicitor in my constituency, a man to whom I have spoken on many occasions.

The hon. Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim) purports to represent a coal mining area. How is a 70-year-old retired miner and perhaps his wife, although he could be a widower, who knows little about the law or landlord and tenant legislation and has no money to go to a solicitor in order to talk about the problem going to cope? Such people are thrown into confusion by the selling and re-selling of their homes above their heads by money speculators. They are unable to comprehend what is happening. The hon. Gentleman is speaking nonsense and he well knows it.

Mr. John Brown, the chairman of the tenants and owners association in Dinnington points out what the problems are for many. He has said:

> "There's another woman whose mind wanders a bit. She's not sure how much rent she's sent off. Sometimes she sends off £100 but because of the system of paying she can't really tell whether she is in arrears or not. The Coal Board used to collect every Wednesday. What is needed is someone to collect the rent and report the repairs to, so everyone knows where they are."

That is exactly what is needed, but it is not happening in dozens of areas.

Despite mounting evidence that the sale of British Coal houses is a disaster for the tenants, British Coal still plans to sell off its remaining 14,500 houses by October 1988. Housing associations and tenants' co-operatives have offered to buy them but British Coal is demanding a higher price than many of the homes fetched at the auctions held late last year. It is asking a price higher than those bidding can afford to offer. Every remaining British Coal house could be taken over by socially responsible landlords if British Coal would drop its asking price or if the Government would assist those willing to buy. If that does not happen, thousands more will be sentenced to the fate of the tenants in my constituency and in the constituencies of many of my hon. Friends.

I have lived in a coalfield community all my life. I have seen the problems worsening day by day. Those areas have never been the most prosperous areas in the country, but the depths of poverty are now at levels that have not been known in my lifetime or for decades past. A few weeks ago during the summer recess I visited the primary school that I attended as a pupil in the 1950s. The class sizes have decreased from about 45 pupils when I was there to about 35. The number of children in those classes receiving free school meals has risen. From my memory of 30 years ago, there were never more than three or four children in each class receiving free school meals. Today, over half the pupils are receiving free school meals.

That is not in a community where the coal mine has closed down. It is in the village of Maltby where I live. The colliery in that area has a massive investment programme. The programme is nearly complete and it has cost £170 million over five years. However, there is no correlation between investment in coal mines and poverty in the community. I hope that when the Minister replies to the debate he will not try to talk about investment and productivity in the coal industry and about how good things are when, even in communities that are receiving investment, there is poverty at the levels I have mentioned.

In the Rotherham area there are still coal mining jobs, but over 8,000 children received free school meals in the year 1986-87. That is the reality of the problems and poverty in coal communities that are working and it can only be worse in communities where the collieries have closed. I hope that all hon. Members who speak today will concentrate their minds on what needs to happen to the communities before the problems get worse.

10.15 am

Mr. Michael Alison (Selby): Those who listened carefully to the introductory words of the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) will have noticed a significant sentence that was almost obscured at the beginning of his speech. He said that he did not want to have a general debate about the coal industry today, but wanted to confine himself to the narrow issue of the motion on the Order Paper. Let me remind you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that a politician is never more political than when he disarmingly says that he wants to leave out a large chunk of relevant material to do with a particular issue and concentrate on a little bit of it.

The hon. Gentleman sought to tell the House that a great economic and social hurricane had blown across many coal mining communities. Needless to say, the name of that hurricane is, in his view, Hurricane Maggie.

Mr. Allan Rogers rose——

Mr. Alison: I shall tell hon. Members another name for that hurricane—Hurricane Arthur.

Mr. Allan Rogers: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Alison: I shall give way shortly, but I want to move on a little.

It is ludicrous and grotesque for the hon. Member for Rother Valley to argue that the scale of financial relief and resources being made available to the coalfield communities is inadequate, especially when we consider the cost of the coal strike to the British taxpayer. After all, it is the taxpayers' money for which the hon. Gentleman is appealing, and we are the representatives of the taxpayers. I shall remind the House of the cost to the taxpayer of King Arthur's strike.

Mr. Allen McKay (Barnsley, West and Penistone) rose

Mr. Alison: Subsidy to the power stations to burn more oil during the strike cost £1,624 million. Subsidy to the National Coal Board because of the loss of income and revenue to the coal industry cost £733 million. The income tax lost to the Treasury amounted to £319 million. The police cost was £155 million, expenditure tax loss was £51 million and supplementary benefit to strikers' families cost £64 million. The total cost to the taxpayer of Arthur Scargill's strike was close to £3,000 million.

Mr. Rogers: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Alison: I will give way shortly.

To ignore that and claim that the Government have not done enough to support the coal mining communities is simply ludicrous.

Mr. Barron rose——

Mr. Alison: I did promise to give way to the hon. Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers), and shall give way to the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) in due course.

Mr. Rogers: I remind the hon. Gentleman of two points. During the coal strike, in response to an intervention of mine, the Chancellor of the Exchequer said that the amount of money that the Government were spending on keeping the miners out was a good investment for the country. Has the right hon. Gentleman now turned that on its head? Instead of trying to score third-form public school debating points, I wish that the right hon. Gentleman would address the real problems that are mentioned in the motion, as did my hon. Friend the Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron). The right hon. Gentleman should address these problems, not try to score cheap political points.

Mr. Alison: I am delighted when Opposition Members accuse me of scoring cheap political points. They are not politicians; they are general men of good will who never indulge in any dirty, sordid party politics. Never so much as a party political thought crosses their mind.

The hon. Member for Rhondda took me up on the issue of whether the money that was shelled out by the taxpayer —£3,000 million—was a good investment. I thought that the hon. Gentleman was always complaining that we were not investing enough in British Coal. He cannot have it both ways. That £3,000 million was either a jolly good investment or no investment at all. He will have to make up his mind. That £3,000 million of taxpayers' money, if it had not to be shelled out for King Arthur's coal strike, might have been available, at least in part, for some of the expenses that are mentioned in the motion.

Can anybody deny that the coal strike—quite apart from the taxpayers' money involved—inflicted serious social and domestic injuries on coal mining communities by damaging local pits? The official figures are that 73 coal faces were lost or irrecoverable as a direct effect of the coal strike. That was typified by Polkemmet colliery in Scotland, where all three faces were lost and the pit closed. That self-inflicted damage was the result of Hurricane Arthur blowing over coal mining communities.

Mr. Jimmy Hood (Clydesdale) rose——

Mr. Alison: The hon. Member for Rother Valley wanted to have a go. He does not wish to any more. I shall give way to the hon. Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) in a moment. I shall complete this part of my speech.

Against that background, the hon. Member for Rother Valley did not do a fair job in commenting on the more narrow matters relating to British Coal Enterprise Ltd. He did not give sufficient credit to what has been done. Nearly £37 million in taxpayers' money is going to the National Coal Board or to British Coal to help in the creation of as many as 23,000 new jobs.

Mr. Skinner: It is a con trick.

Mr. Alison: In one of his typical interventions, the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) says that it is a con trick. Imagine the words "con trick" falling from the mouths of those who support Arthur Scargill. What about the con trick after the March 1983 ballot, which was held throughout the coalfields to find out whether the miners wanted to strike? What about the con trick of the 1984 ballot to see whether they wanted a strike or not? In nearly every case, the large ballots in different areas resulted in massive majorities against a strike. Where was the con trick? It was King Arthur's con trick. He is the man of con tricks, in getting the coalfields out on strikes that most miners did not want.

The hon. Member for Bolsover says that British Coal Enterprise Ltd. is a con trick. We shall not take the lesson from him. We can see what British Steel has been able to do by its enterprise project. It has done a massive job in creating jobs. We shall see British Coal Enterprise Ltd. do the same thing.

Hobart house has kindly supplied me with a list of specific projects, broken down into all the main regions, specifying the number of jobs that will be forthcoming, and giving the total of projects and jobs. The jobs will materialise, just as they did in the case of British Steel.

Mr. Hood: The right hon. Gentleman referred to the loss of three coal faces and the closure of Polkemmet colliery. Is he aware that that colliery closed because British Coal deliberately flooded it? The unions offered to go in and save it, but they were held back by British Coal. Is the right hon. Gentleman aware also that, in Scotland, Polkemmet, which produces coal for Ravenscraig steelworks, is now being run on imported coal from Colombia and South Africa? The hon. Gentleman referred to sabotage. It was sabotaged by the Government and British Coal in closing down a major industry.

Mr. Alison: The hon. Gentleman has produced the ludicrous argument that British Coal deliberately flooded Polkemmet colliery. As he made the point, I shall respond to it. He knows that many deliberate things were done during the coal strike. There was much deliberate mobilisation of coal miners to go and picket. Why, then, did the coal miners not deliberately stop the National Coal Board from flooding Polkemmet colliery? Why did they not mobilise large forces and stop the few managers from deliberately flooding it? There could not be any more ludicrous argument than the hon. Gentleman's thesis that British Coal management deliberately flooded Polkemmet colliery.

Mr. Hood rose——

Mr. Alison: I shall not give way. I have already given way to the hon. Gentleman once. I must press on.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The right hon. Gentleman clearly will not give way. Hon. Members must not persist.

Mr. Alison: It is not only the investment in British Coal Enterprise Ltd. that I wish to draw to the attention of the House. The hon. Member for Rother Valley——

Mr. Geoffrey Lofthouse (Pontefract and Castleford) rose——

Mr. Alison: I shall give way to the hon. Gentleman in a moment.

The hon. Member for Rother Valley touched on British Coal investment in the rather wider technical, proper productive investment sense in the coalfields. According to my figures, it is running at about £650 million a year at present. In my own constituency, investment in the Selby project will be at least £1.25 million, and we have spent £1 million on it already. That kind of capital expenditure on new pits, new projects and new machinery is directly relevant to some of the older communities and coalfields that he talked about.

Leaving aside the rowdy exchanges that we have had the motion points out some of the difficulties that the older mining communities face. For example, in my own constituency, where we have had, in principle, an influx of 3,000 new miners to work in Selby, at least half seem to have decided not to live in the Selby constituency, but to commute. In other words, they will live in their own communities in south and west Yorkshire. Some of them travel from as far as Bradford every day by car. If they are not on strike—most of them do not want to be—face workers can take £250 a week back into the communities in which they live. They commute to and from the new coalfields.

That is the way to get resources, buying power, enterprise, new prospects and new hope to some of the older villages. It is happening in Selby precisely because coal miners are commuting in their cars from places all over south and west Yorkshire and earning good money and taking it back to their communities. Some such coalfield communities might become as prosperous as Ascot and other such places as people take money from the coalfields back to their communities. That is the way to get prosperity for pit villages.

Mr. Lofthouse: On the point about the British Coal Enterprise Ltd. scheme, in which the hon. Gentleman seems to put great store, the deputy chairman of the National Coal Board informed the Select Committee:

> "I do not claim much for it", meaning the British Coal Enterprise scheme. Indeed, other senior officials informed the Committee that they expected the scheme only to scratch at the surface of the problem.

Mr. Alison: The chairman of the National Coal Board could not claim much for it because he was not providing the money. The Government provided the full £37 million. The Coal Board did not provide anything, so it is no wonder that the chairman said that.

Finally, I should like to make a constituency point, which I hope leaders of British Coal will take on board as it has some bearing on what is known as the Coal Industry Social Welfare Organisation. In the public inquiry that was held in my constituency in 1975 on the development of the Selby coalfied, reference was made by Mr. J. G. C. Milligan OBE, the director-general of industrial relations at the National Coal Board, to the provision of leisure facilities in Selby. In referring to the settlement of miners and their families into new communities, Mr. Milligan stated:

> "This has been helped in some places because the arrival of miners has led to the provision of improved recreational and other facilities assisted by the Coal Industry Social Welfare Organisation which is financed by the Branch."

That statement was incorporated into the inspector's findings at paragraph 25.10 on page 47 of the report on the Selby coalfield inquiry.

The implication is that the Coal Industry Social Welfare Organisation was hoping to promote the acceptance of the Selby project by holding out the prospect of some welfare provision for Selby. I am sure that, although that was said as long ago as 1975 and that in 1987 nothing has as yet materialised, the Coal Board will, in good faith, produce some extra resources to ensure that Selby gets its recreational facilities. I hope that the Coal Board will be able to expedite that as soon as possible.

Mr. George J. Buckley (Hemsworth): I thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for calling me to make my maiden speech in this debate on the coalfield communities. I hope that Conservative Members will not degenerate the debate by raking over the coals of the 1984-85 strike. I am sure that it was not for that purpose that my hon. Friend the Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) tabled the motion on the Order Paper. Opposition Members are trying to draw the coal communities to the attention of the House and my hon. Friend the Member for Rother Valley outlined their problems extensively.

In this, my maiden speech, I want to draw to the attention of the House the social traditions of my constituency. It is a mining constituency and its communities are very much dependent on the prosperity of the mining industry. By their very nature, the communities in my constituency are isolated as compared with other parts of West Yorkshire. When the mining industry developed at the turn of the previous century, small communities developed around the mines. They were attached to the workplace of the mine, and the entire community revolved around the investment that then took place in the mine.

Hemsworth is no different from other traditional mining constituencies. The House will appreciate the complexities that that causes. The House must be aware — I am sure that Opposition Members are aware — of the difficulties that such small communities encounter when dealing with the transformation of the economy of the area. It is that transformation that should exercise our minds in this debate, not the historical upheavals of industrial struggle. My constituency is made up of small communities such as Upton, Ryhill, Havercroft and Featherstone, which, in the past, were totally dependent on collieries that no longer exist. The fact that the mines no longer exist has caused havoc in the economy of my constituency.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Rother Valley has stated, we are not talking about the prosperity of the coal mining industry in isolation, but about the overall economy of the community, the social aspects of that rundown of the economy and the inability of the economy to rejuvenate itself from its own resources. I feel sure that the House will appreciate that massive Government assistance is needed to finance investment in the transition from dependency on one source of employment to alternative employment in the area.

I should like to pay tribute to my predecessor who represented the Hemsworth constituency for 13 years in this honourable House. Naturally, my predecessors in the constituency are from mining stock. My immediate predecessor, Alec Woodall, represented the constituency diligently and I am sure that many hon. Members will recall the many opportunities on which he exercised that responsibility. I hope that the House will wish him well in his retirement. I should like to mention other hon. Members who represented the constituency before my immediate predecessor. They include Mr. Alan Beaney, Mr. M. E. Holmes and Mr. G. A. Griffiths, who were all from traditional mining stock.

The indigenous problems of mining areas are not new. I do not want to lead the House into believing that the problems of mining communities are new. However, such problems are now more desperate as a consequence of the present Government's policies. I found it curious that the right hon. Member for Selby (Mr. Alison) who, I am sure, tried to make a positive contribution to the debate, referred to the £3 billion that was expended by the Government during the 1984 strike. I shall make only one point on that — £3 billion was spent on negative expenditure, whereas only £37 million has been spent in positive expenditure on British Coal Enterprise Ltd. I ask the House and the nation to weigh up that fact. My hon. Friends and I call upon the Government and Conservative Members to give positive consideration to the problems that exist in mining communities. We want to resolve those problems, but that cannot be done without massive Government aid.

I refer now to recent mine closures. In my constituency alone — this will be duplicated throughout British coalfields — Ackton Hall colliery was closed in 1985. That colliery was surrounded by the community of Featherstone and when it closed 1,388 jobs were lost. In 1986 Kinsley drift was closed with the loss of 460 jobs and more recently in 1987 Nostell colliery has been closed, with the loss of 600 jobs. Such closures have a massive impact on small mining communities. South Kirby colliery, which is currently under review by British Coal, employed at one time nearly 2,000 men. It currently employs 696. That is a massive reduction in employment potential. The colliery is under threat of closure and that is having a major impact on the South Kirby, South Hemsworth and Upton areas.

We must get the problem into perspective. As my hon. Friend the Member for Rother Valley has said, we must realise the social consequences of the rundown of the mining industry and ask the Government to give a positive response. Apart from the fact that the social structure of mining communities is being destroyed, their regeneration is causing immense difficulties. Even if new industry could be cajoled and persuaded to take root there, massive investment in the infrastructure would be needed to make such areas economically viable. Even if the Government were generous enough to provide investment in mining community areas, no industrialist, with the best will in the world, would be prepared to go down small village roads with large transport lorries to reach industrial estates.

I am disappointed and surprised that the Government have not responded to the excellent Shelter report on housing in mining communities. It is impossible to dispose of properties, whether they are rented or owned, in mining communities when the only source of employment is taken away from them.

I shall not refer to statistics in my maiden speech. I do not really care about them. The unemployment statistics for mining communities are higher than those for any other group of unemployed people in Great Britain. Unemployment statistics as high as 20 per cent. are to be found in mining communities. The people who live in those communities are devastated by the high level of unemployment. Coal mining communities, including those in my constituency, are taking advantage of the so-called community programmes and of work training experience, but Government schemes are temporary. They do not provide a long-term solution to unemployment in mining constituencies. They are only a palliative.

[illegible] task I have set myself in my maiden speech is to outline to the House the desperate plight of the communities that I represent. I repeat the call in 1959 of one of my predecessors, Alan Beaney. He said:

> "Miners will spurn charity, the dole and National Assistance. We shall demand the right to earn our livelihood in the full dignity of our labour."—[Official Report, 30 October 1959; Vol. 612, c. 557.]

I repeat that call in 1987. We do not want charity, or the dole, or unemployment. We demand the right to earn our living in order to maintain the quality of life for our families and children.

10.42 am

Mr. Patrick McLoughlin (Derbyshire, West): It is a pleasure to follow the hon. Member for Hemsworth (Mr. Buckley) and to congratulate him on his maiden speech. He well fulfilled the tradition of maiden speakers by giving a graphic description of his constituency and by paying a formidable tribute to his predecessor, Alec Woodall, who was well respected on all sides of the House. He was a man of Hemsworth who, throughout his career as a Member of Parliament, represented that constituency. We congratulate the hon. Gentleman on his maiden speech. I know what a great relief it is to get it off one's chest. I am sure that he is looking forward to making many more contributions to our debates in the months and years to come. The hon. Gentleman chose the right debate in which to make his maiden speech.

In recent times there have been a number of changes in mining communities. However, such changes are not a recent phenomenon; they do not apply only to the 1970s or the 1980s. My father died when I was very young. One of my few memories is of my father walking over the old pit tops in the Cannock Chase and South Staffordshire coalfields. I remember the High Town colliery where he used to work in the south Staffordshire coalfield. Since 1960 there have been over 32 mine closures in the south Staffordshire coalfield—a horrendous number. In recent years only one new mine—Lea Hall—has been opened in the area. That shows how radically the area has changed. That new mine was opened in 1960 by a Conservative Government.

To say that this Government have paid no regard to the coalfield communities is a travesty of the truth. Opposition Members regard the coal industry and the coalfields as their bastion, but sometimes they suffer from selective amnesia. The then National Coal Board, now British Coal, recognised on many occasions the importance of the coal industry. The 1966-67 report of the National Coal Board says——

Mr. Barron: The hon. Gentleman says that Opposition Members seem to regard the coal industry as their bastion. During the last five years, coalfields could have been found in 105 constituencies that are represented by both Conservative and Opposition Members. The hon. Gentleman cannot claim that the Opposition regard the coal industry as their bastion. The hon. Gentleman ought to direct his remarks to the problems in the coalfield communities. He should not refer to investment in coal mining. That is not the subject of this debate.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand why the hon. Gentleman is anxious that I should not refer to what is happening now in the coal mining industry. I am not turning away from the subject of the debate. The hon. Gentleman's motion calls attention to the report of the Select Committee on Energy, which deals with the present state of the British Coal. He cannot say that we should pay no regard to the Select Committee's report and to the history that backs up its conclusions.

Mr. Barron rose——

Mr. McLoughlin: I see that the hon. Gentleman wants me to give way, but I do not intend to do so. I have given way already, and many other hon. Members want to speak in this debate.

The only way for British Coal and for the industry to have a successful future is by winning markets and selling coal. We cannot run away from that most important fact. That point has been accepted by many NCB chairmen and by many Governments.

I said earlier that I wanted to refer to the NCB's 1966-67 report. It says:

> "The task now facing the Board is to secure the largest possible output of coal at prices that are competitive with all rival fuels. Competition from oil, natural gas and nuclear power will be a formidable and continuing challenge to coal's share of the expanding energy market."

Mr. Rogers: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I do not want to delay the debate, because many hon. Members want to participate in it, but the motion specifically refers to the social problems and to the high levels of unemployment, falling investment and increasing poverty in the coal industry. The motion then refers to the Select Committee's recommendations regarding the coalfield communities. The hon. Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) is deliberately diverting this very important debate from the problems of the mining communities to investment in the mining industry.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is right to draw attention to the fact that the Select Committee's report is relevant to the motion only in so far as those parts of the report are relevant to the motion.

Mr. McLoughlin: With the greatest respect, Mr. Deputy Speaker, it is impossible to refer to the coalfield communities without referring to the investment by British Coal. There is no doubt that——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am drawing the hon. Gentleman's attention and that of the House to the fact that the appendix to the motion says that the report will be relevant to the debate only insofar as parts of the report are relevant to the motion. References to the report should be confined to that purpose.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am trying to set this debate in context by suggesting that this is not the first time that coalfield communities have had to go through radical changes. I am sorry that Opposition Members seem to find that so objectionable.

The future and the size of the industry and its employment opportunities depend upon the speed at which British Coal's plans for making coal more competitive can be fulfilled.

Mr. John Cummings (Easington): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. McLoughlin: No, I will not give way, for the simple reason that a lot of other hon. Members wish to get in and make their own speeches.

There is no doubt that the way in which we will secure a positive, good coal industry future is by becoming competitive within the market.

Mr. Cummings rose——

Mr. Allen McKay: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. McLoughlin: I want to give other hon. Members the opportunity to make their speeches, but I will give way to the hon. Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. McKay).

Mr. McKay: Can the hon. Gentleman explain to the House what he and British Coal mean about being competitive—competitive with what and with whom?

Mr. McLoughlin: The competitive nature of coal must be based upon its relationship with the gas industry, the oil industry and imported coal, although some people would say that imported coal represents an unfair area of competition. I believe that British Coal can get round that problem by offering quality. There is no doubt that, with today's modern fire-handling, coal-burning equipment, quality is of the utmost importance. It is important to ensure that the product is clean and does not have a high ash content when delivered.

I wish to spend some time discussing the coalfield community that I know in south Staffordshire, which is now partly represented by my hon. Friend the Member for Cannock and Burntwood (Mr. Howarth). I wish to discuss the two mines that are left in that area, Lea Hall colliery and Littleton colliery. As far as I can tell, the greatest threat to the production in those areas is not from British Coal, but from the Labour-controlled county council. That county council will not allow opencast mining to take place in that area. One of the problems alluded to by the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) was related to those areas that had produced coal and the subsequent use of the land that had become derelict. One of the problems that is faced when local authorities continually stand in the way of opencast mining is that areas become landlocked.

Mr. Rogers: What about north Yorkshire?

Mr. McLoughlin: Such landlocked areas cannot be used.

There is no doubt that, if opencast mining is not allowed at the collieries I have mentioned, the future of those collieries is in danger. The coal mined from those colleries has a fairly high chlorine content and opencast coal is required to blend with that coal. The way in which British Coal and the Opencast Executive return such land to productive use ensures the benefit of amenities for such communities. Such efforts are commendable.

Ms. Joan Walley (Stoke-on-Trent, North): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. McLoughlin: No, I will not.

The coal industry wants a future and there is no doubt that it can have a future. There have been closures and to an extent they are regretted, but such closures are not a new thing. No Government have done more to help with the changeover period than this Government.

Mr. Rogers: Absolute rubbish.

Mr. McLoughlin: This Government set up British Coal Enterprise Ltd. to try to help with that transitional period, which has been extremely difficult. However, anyone who considers the recent actions of British Coal and the National Coal Board will appreciate that some huge closure programmes took place between 1965 and 1970. The Opposition cannot escape that, yet it is one example of the selective amnesia of the Opposition.

I should like to refer to the annual report of the National Coal Board for 1965-66. I believe that a Labour Government were in power at that time. That report states that the board had originally > "planned to phase colliery closures fairly evenly over the years 1966 to 1970, but at the Government's suggestion the major part of that closure programme will be completed in the two years 1966 and 1967."

There was no help whatever from the Government to see that transitional period through. There was no British Coal Enterprise Ltd. and nothing to help those mineworkers.

There have been tremendous changes in the coal industry. We have accepted that those changes must take place, but we have tried to do something to help.

When my hon. Friend replies to this debate, I hope that he will make some reference to the Select Committee on Energy report. I draw his attention to paragraph 193;

> "It may also be that there are pits which BC has recently closed or will close in the immediate future which could be operated profitably, whether on a different scale or by different methods."

Mr. Rogers: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. You have already pointed out to the hon. Gentleman that he is out of order if he talks about the mining industry. Will he address himself to the problems we are talking about?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: What I have done is the very opposite of what the hon. Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers) has suggested. It is in order to talk about the coal mining industry. It would seem to me extremely difficult to talk about the coal mining communities without talking about the coal mining industry. However, I was at pains to point out that the fact that there was a link provided on the Order Paper with that Select Committee report did not mean that we should have a debate about that Select Committee report, although it would be relevant to refer to it.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am grateful to you Mr. Deputy Speaker. I believe that this matter is important. So often Opposition Members say that there is not enough investment in the coal industry. However, we are told that the National Union of Mineworkers has access to quite a bit of money, often from Libya and such places. The report continues:

> "For example, BACM witnesses thought that Horden colliery had an 'opportunity of breaking even' or better; NACODS argued vigorously that Bates colliery should not have been closed; while the NUM maintained that up to 20 million tonnes of capacity had been lost because of the abandonment of the Plan for Coal. In consequence, when BC decides to close a pit, we believe that the licence to operate at that site should immediately be offered on the open market."

The report said that that licence should be offered on the open market only after it had been offered to the unions and those people interested. I believe that that would be a positive way to ask the unions to give their commitment to British Coal.

British Coal and the coal industry have great opportunities in this country. I believe that those opportunities will come about as a result of investment and achieving more sales in the industrial market. At the moment, approximately 10 per cent. of British Coal's output goes to the industrial market. There must be ways in which that level can be increased, and that would lead to a great future for the coal communities. I appreciate that those communities feel threatened at the moment. Indeed, there have been tremendous changes within that industry, but the challenge of those changes has been met.

Mr. Cummings rose——

Mr. McLoughlin: I am about to conclude; then other hon. Members will be able to speak.

The challenge has been met by the coalfield communities. I believe that, in future, similar challenges may be faced if a positive commitment is given to the industry. So far as the union has an impact on the future of the industry, the present president of the NUM has done more to sell British Gas for industrial installations than anybody else. At the very mention of the burning of coal, the spectre of Scargill emerges. That does great damage to the potential sales of coal.

There is only one way in which British Coal will have a successful future; that is by selling its products within the market so that we do not have to rely on imported coal. That is the way that the coalfield communities can secure a future.

Mr. Rogers: Cheap black labour in South Africa.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. All this sedentary noise is only delaying the debate and it is out of order. I hope that hon. Members will behave themselves.

Mr. McLoughlin: When British Coal has a positive future, the coal communities will have a positive future.

Let us consider wages—the hon. Member for Rother Valley mentioned this. The average wage of miners in 1965-1966——

Mr. Barron: I never mentioned wages.

Mr. McLoughlin: The wage level then was £19 14s. British Coal's annual report for 1986-87 shows that a miner's average earnings in that year were £219 a week. Wages generally would have had to increase 10 times during that period to keep up with wages in mining. The fact that for miners they increased by more than 12 per cent. above that does not bear out what the hon. Member for Rother Valley said about miners being poor and unable to pay their way. Indeed, it adds to the remarks made by my right hon. Friend the Member for Selby (Mr. Alison) about the future of coal mining areas.

Money is there to be made in the industry, provided that we can sell the coal. But we must not produce coal that we cannot sell, because that is no good to British Coal or to the country which, under this Government, has invested a great deal of money to give British Coal a future.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I remind the House that about 20 hon. Members are trying to catch my eye. Unless speeches are curtailed, many of them will be disappointed. I appeal for very brief speeches.

11 am

Mr. A. J. Beith (Berwick-upon-Tweed): I add my congratulations to the hon. Member for Hemsworth (Mr. Buckley) on his sensible maiden speech and on his valuable contribution to the debate.

This is a depressing debate. Not one job in the coalfields will be created by raking over the grim experience of the strike. The shouting match that seems to be developing is wholly out of character with the work that the Coalfield Communities Campaign has done. I commend that organisation, which works across party lines, having to accept that the coal industry involves change and having to accept that colliery closures have taken place and will take place in the future. It brings together people who have different views about what the rate of closure should be and about the Government's policy towards the industry. But it brings them together in agreement that the coalfield communities have specific problems that need special attention. We should take our model from the Coalfield Communities Campaign in our discussions on these matters and in our attempts to develop ways of dealing with the problems. I welcome the fact that the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) chose this subject for debate today.

Since 1957 my constituency has experienced 10 colliery closures, three of them in the past few years. We still have the large and productive Ellington colliery, which has absorbed manpower from all parts of the Northumberland coalfield, but almost all the Northumberland coalfield's eggs are [illegible] that one basket. It is worrying to think that Lynemouth colliery, which, in its time, was a showpiece colliery and the great hope of the future, has gone. A great deal of hope now hangs on the future of Ellington colliery. My constituency is experiencing all the problems which have been described during the debate and which are shared by other hon. Members.

The Select Committee report states:

> "It is far from clear that the present distribution of regional aid reflects the needs of the mining communities or the advantages of Community membership."

Nowhere is that more true than in the Northumberland coalfield. The Alnwick and Amble area, which has experienced the colliery closures that I have described, does not enjoy any development status and is wholly denied the benefits of European aid, as well as the now very limited benefits of the Government's regional policy. The adjoining Morpeth and Ashington travel-to-work area has only intermediate status, which gives it limited assistance. Unemployment in the Alnwick and Amble area is higher than in most intermediate areas, and higher than in many assisted areas. It is a clear case of what the Select Committee meant: the Government have ignored the way in which colliery closure patterns have developed by failing to revise their assisted area map. They have simply not taken account of the impact of colliery closures on their regional policy.

We have pleaded with Ministers again and again. Just a few weeks ago a deputation from the coalfield came to see the Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. I too went to see him, but he was unable to respond positively, although he listened to us sympathetically and acknowledged that we had a good case. He has still done nothing to bring to that area, so hard hit by colliery closures, the benefits of regional policy and access to European help. It would be helpful if the Under-Secretary of State for Energy would tell us today what will happen on regional policy. Will there be a regional policy in the future? Will it be drastically changed, as the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry seems to wish? If it is changed, what will be done to ensure that it meets the problems of the coalfield communities, which have the most obvious need for an effective regional policy?

The coalfield communities have tended to lose again and again in various aspects of regional policy. Urban aid is another example. Many of us are worried that, with the understandable emphasis on the needs of the inner cities, the problems of the coalfield communities will be forgotten because they are small communities. Yet the problems in those communities are just as acute.

In my constituency, urban aid was withdrawn suddenly from Alnwick — an area where many miners and ex-miners live — on the grounds that its population was fewer than 20,000. It met every other criterion, including free school meals taken by many children and high rates of deprivation. It met all the criteria that one could imagine, except that it had a population of fewer than 20,000 and, according to the Government, was not urban. One can think of many colliery communities that are smaller than 20,000 but which have worse problems, on all the standard criteria, than some of our worst inner-city areas. We are worried that the needs of the coalfield communities will be forgotten while the inner-city problems receive the emphasis which, of course, they deserve.

The Select Committee, and hon. Members today, mentioned miners being given the chance to take over their pits. The Select Committee said that the Department of Energy should be the body that licensed coal and that miners should have the first option to continue mining operations at a colliery that has been closed. But I must tell Conservative Members that the Government have not done that. They have left licensing in the hands of British Coal, and it has not given the first option to the men who work in the pits.

A specific example of that was Whittle colliery in my constituency. When the colliery closed, a group of employees decided that they would like to take it on and mount a smaller mining operation, for which they could see a clear future, and for which they had access to capital, but British Coal, following its normal practice, granted the licensing option on a first come, first served, basis to an organisation which was familiar with the procedures and got in its application quickly. The miners at the pit simply were not familiar with the procedures and could not be expected to know what they had to do.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell (Blyth Valley): Will the hon. Gentleman confirm that the engineer who closed Whittle mine is leading the consortium that wants to buy it?

Mr. Beith: That would require apportioning responsibility within British Coal more accurately than I could, but it would at least be fair to say that the outside consortium that put in its bid knew British Coal very well, was familiar with its procedures and had good contacts on the board. That is not giving the miners first option on their pits. Indeed, they would have to wait for 12 months to see whether the first applicant backed out before they had any chance of becoming involved, and by that time the pit would have deteriorated substantially.

In this case there is hope that an understanding will be reached between the miners who wanted to take over the pit and the group that has the first option, but it is not a sensible way to proceed. Why should British Coal license its competitors? Why should a body which is a near-monopoly have the right to license its potential competition? I do not understand what sense that makes in the Government's economic thinking. It makes it difficult, if not impossible, for miners to get the first option to take over their pits. The Government fell down badly in not doing something about that when I drew it repeatedly to their attention.

Another problem affecting the coalfield communities is opencast mining, which provides 40 per cent. of Northumberland's coal production and employs more than 800 people, most of them local. Initially, it helped a great deal to clear up dereliction in parts of my constituency. Therefore, the problems associated with it were borne by the community, in the knowledge that, at the end of the day, the area would be in a better state than it was when opencast mining started. But we have moved from there to the point where opencast mining is going deep into open countryside and its proximity is beginning seriously to threaten local communities.

In places such as Linton and Ulgham, people are deeply concerned that opencast mining is coming right up to their doorsteps, posing environmental problems for a long time to come.

One of the few benefits of the decline of deep mining in areas that have experienced many environmental problems as a result of such mining is that at least the environment would be improved. For most of their lifetime they now face the threat of serious environmental disruption from opencast mining. We must consider carefully how to maintain employment in opencast mining without further disrupting the local communities, which have already had to cope with a great deal over the years.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy (Mr. Michael Spicer): I am very interested in the hon. Gentleman's comments. Does he believe that the situation is getting to the point where the land is not capable of being restored to a better condition than it was in the past?

Mr. Beith: Opencast mining is moving into areas where I cannot imagine it would be restored to a better condition than before. In some parts of my constituency, areas made seriously derelict have emerged in a better state than they were when opencast mining took over. It is still painful and hard going for the people living there, and, in the case of bigger schemes, it was for a long period. Following the Butterwell scheme, however, the potential expansion of opencast mining around villages such as Ulgham and Linton creates a long period of disruption with no prospect that the areas will be better after restoration than when they started. It makes it difficult for local people to accept, even though it would offer employment to local people.

Given the decline of deep mining in many areas, the case for improvement of the environment is very strong. The village of Lynemouth has a very attractive beach and setting, but it has all the grimness of massive tipping and the works associated with it. The local authority should have the support and encouragement of the Government to try to do something about it. These communities deserve environmental improvement. When I talk to people in Lynemouth they look back to the time when it was a showpiece village. It was to have been the model coal mining village of the future. In the intervening years, it has suffered serious environmental decline and the people in that village now look back with real sadness, because it is not now what it was once hoped it would be. By modern standards, the housing stock is quite inadequate. Many houses have no inside toilet and have inadequate facilities. Local authorities should have more freedom to use their own resources—the money in the bank from council house sales—to improve the communities.

All these things must be taken together. Villages suffering from environmental decline need a resident policeman to ensure that vandalism does not lead to a further decline in the physical structure of the community. To put these places back on their feet requires the integration of many policies, not just housing policies.

Hon. Members have referred to the problems that have arisen from the sale of Coal Board houses. I welcome the fact that many miners now want to buy their own homes and have been able to do so. I do not believe in the company town structure in which the employer owns everything—the place of employment, trading facilities and houses. It is an unhealthy and uncomfortable position for the community. However, where tenanted houses are sold, we want to see housing associations and local authorities, rather than distant landlords, given the chance to take over responsibilities.

There was a specific problem at Ellington colliery, where miners could not purchase houses because the lease was not owned by the Coal Board. The Coal Board has agreed to buy the lease when it expires, thus enabling people to buy the houses in which they live. I am grateful to the deputy chairman of the Coal Board for the personal interest that he took in the matter, which I hope will be resolved to the satisfaction of all concerned.

I find it extraordinary that, in areas such as Northumberland which still have considerable deep-mining potential, the Central Electricity Generating Board should be considering, not its coal-producing capacity, but its attractiveness for nuclear power. It wants to establish a nuclear power station at Druridge Bay rather than expand coal-fired power facilities in the area, thereby sustaining coal-based employment. We shall have plenty of other opportunities to debate this issue, but if the Government intend to privatise the electricity industry and put the issue to the free market, it is obvious that private enterprise would not make that decision. The CEGB is taking decisions which the free market would not support. I want to see the courage of the Minister's convictions when we come to that issue.

One of the few things bringing money into the coalfield communities at the moment is, alas, the redundancy money being paid to miners. That has some side benefits. I am glad to see that those who are able are setting up their own businesses and others are enjoying an early retirement from an arduous industry. I look back to the time when I was first elected. When I went down the pits, miners said, "People should not have to work here in these conditions. As soon as I can get out, I shall do so. I do not want my son to work here." Now they do not say that, because they do not see alternative opportunities outside the pit.

It is all the more important, therefore, that we put the effort into helping and restoring these communities. Redundancy money is only a short-term thing. When that is gone, there will be no opportunities for young people in those areas when they leave school. There is a potentially great market if we realise what is available in those areas—the quality of labour and the fact that land costs are much lower than in the congested areas of the south of England—but it will need encouragement and backing from the Government to safeguard the future of communities that have given so much to this country over the years.

Several Hon. Members rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I repeat my plea for brief speeches.

11.15 am

Mr. Spencer Batiste (Elmet): This is a welcome opportunity to discuss the circumstances of the coalfield communities. In response to the request for brief speeches, I apologise in advance if I do not accept any interventions, so that more people may have the opportunity to speak. However, it would be remiss of me not to join other colleagues in congratulating the hon. Member for Hemsworth (Mr. Buckley) on his exceptional maiden speech. We all look forward to his future contributions to our coalfield debates.

Of course, one cannot divorce a debate about the coalfield communities from a debate about the wider circumstances of the industry. It is typical of the disarray on the Opposition Benches that they have done nothing this morning but precisely that. Government policy towards the coal industry affects the communities in three vital ways—first, in relation to the investment and restructuring of the industry; secondly, in relation to the employment and environmental restoration of those areas with pit closures; and thirdly, in relation to the working practices and industrial relations of the industry which will determine the pattern and location of future investment and the shape of the communities that will serve them.

My constituency is deeply involved in all three aspects. There have been a number of pit closures in recent years. There is one long-term pit remaining with major investment in it. Significant problems have arisen from opencasting and its aftermath and there is the development of the Selby coalfield adjacent to my constituency. Let me deal first with investment and restructuring. No industry can have a future unless it produces a commodity at a price and time and of a quality that its customers require, without the threat of disruption. After all the water that has flowed under the bridge in the last five years, is it not a tragedy that we still have to tell Labour Members that in our coal debates.

Leaving all the rhetoric aside, two simple facts stand out. First, the Government are spending £2 million a day in support of the coal industry to give it a future; secondly, major restructuring has taken place, without any compulsory redundancies. Without that investment and restructuring, the future for all coalfield communities in Britain would be very bleak indeed. That is widely recognised in my constituency by miners who have a future in the industry, as a result of Government investment, and by those who are taking their redundancy money and making careers outside the industry, thus broadening the industrial base of my constituency.

This leads me to my second point, concerning the restructuring of employment and the environment, which is vital in areas with pit closures. I ask my hon. Friend the Minister, in taking away the lessons from the debate, to go back to a point that I have raised in previous debates. The urban development corporation, which works so well in city centres, is a device well suited to the remoter mining communities. It should not be confined to the city centres, because there is dereliction and poverty outside those areas, too. If we have a device that works well in one place, let us adapt it to all the places that need it.

The opencast debate has been a constant theme this morning. There may be circumstances in which the effective restoration of an area of pit closures, where there has been deep mining, will be achieved more effectively if there is opencasting afterwards, but I hope that not many hon. Members share in their constituencies the problem that I have with the Gamblethorpe site in mine. After a long period of opencasting, when the site was supposed to be restored for the benefit of the community, the local authority said, "There's a lovely deep hole. We'll tip rubbish into it for the next 20 years." Anyone in my area who makes another proposal for opencast mining will have to answer to those who look at the example of Gamblethorpe and say that they want guarantees that in their lifetime that site will be restored for public use and utility. It is no good people arguing that opencasting is essential unless they also address the real concerns of people who live in those areas and look at what has already happened.

It is pointless Conservatives arguing any more with the Opposition about British Coal Enterprise Ltd., when the Opposition do nothing but belittle its efforts. Let me say simply that any investment that it wants to make in my constituency will be welcome. I have found its co-operation and assistance in business projects welcome. There is an open door for it among Conservative Members, and if the Opposition do not want it and do not recognise its achievement, let them forget about it. We are happy to use that resource that has been made available.

Working practices and industrial relations are a vital concern in my area. We do not want the future of the Selby coalfield to be put at risk because of the failure by the NUM to adapt to modern working practices. The problems that have arisen in south Wales have been noticeable, and led to Dr. Kim Howells of the south Wales NUM saying that Mr. Scargill

> "is prepared to distort history and mangle the facts to convince others, and perhaps himself, that he is the saviour of the workers. The national president feels he has to bulldoze into the dirt anyone who dares voice opinions contrary to his own. He dismisses the democratic decisions of the South Wales miners as if he were the Pope and they were heretics".

Mr. Scargill has achieved what people would have regarded as almost impossible five years ago. He has marginalised the NUM, first by splitting it over his undemocratic strike, and now by threatening to split what remains over the fundamental issue of the adoption of modern working practices. He is the real enemy of the coalfield communities. Nobody is deceived by his sudden conversion to democracy on the road to Damascus—or is it Tripoli or Havana? Labour Members of Parliament could use this debate most profitably for their coalfield communities if, at this sensitive moment, they were to take the opportunity of repudiating Mr. Scargill and what he stands for.

Mr. Ted Rowlands (Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney): It is my privilege to represent four of the 14 remaining pits of the Welsh coalfield.

The hon. Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) talked about change. Our communities are not strangers to change. There are now 14 pits compared with a coalfield that once had 200 pits and 108,000 miners. Our communities are not static. The hon.Gentleman missed one point—he does not realise what has been going on in the past few years. We have lost jobs not only in the coal industry. Over the past 20 or 30 years, we have sought to diversify our economy and encourage alternative employment. In the 1950s and 1960s, regional development policy brought new companies to our area and produced an alternative economy. What is the big difference between then and the past seven or eight years? Not only have we lost more pit jobs, but the jobs that were brought in by the companies and factories that were meant to be the alternative economy have become the victim of decline.

I can illustrate that best in my own community in Merthyr. There was a regular movement from pit to factory in the 1950s and 1960s. That is why pit closures took place—alternative jobs were being created. People moved between Merthyr Vale and Aberfan pit and Hoover and Thorns. There were job opportunities, but not only Penrhiwceiber, Ewis Merthyr and Deep Duffryn collieries have gone. In 1979, there were 5,400 jobs at the Hoover factory, but now there are only 1,900. That is a loss of nearly 4,000 jobs. Thorns has halved the number of jobs in the neighbouring factory. It is a matter not only of pit closures but of the decline and destruction of jobs in the alternative economy in our pit communities, which has led to tension and frustration. That is the major issue that we face. The number of jobs lost in the pits and through the decline in the factories is the equivalent of the closure of the whole of one steelworks in my community. So we are not strangers to change. Jobs are being destroyed not only in the coal industry but in our industrial and manufacturing base.

In the county of Mid Glamorgan, there are now nearly 30,000 fewer people in employment than in 1979. That is taking into account a notional figure of the number in self-employment. That is the crisis that we face and the difference between the 1960s and the 1980s in my communities. Four of the 14 remaining Welsh pits are now under review, so it is little wonder that we are worried about a new wave of redundancies and pit closures.

My hon. Friend the Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers) and several of my colleagues went to see the present Secretary of State for Wales when he was Secretary of State for Energy just before the election to discuss the redundancy payments scheme. He said that we did not need one in the coal industry any longer, which we had until last March, because the restructuring and rationalisation were over. But now a new redundancy payment scheme has suddenly been reintroduced—£5,000 per man if more than 50 people leave the pit. It is an incitement to a collective walk-out by miners, who now fear that we are in for another round of pit closures. It is little wonder that the apprehension, worry and concern are re-emerging.

We are concerned not only about pit closures, as my hon. Friend the Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) is right to remind Conservative Members, but about the impact of closures on the communities that are the subject of the debate. I should like to draw attention to some key areas.

There is not only environmental dereliction but dereliction in health, housing and infrastructure. In my constituency, there has been a generation of dereliction in limbs, lungs and heart. Our health resources, hospital services, demands and special health needs, by every index that one can devise, show that the county of Mid Glamorgan has massive deprivation. The resources given to the area do not match, reflect or acknowledge properly our historic health problems, which are with us now. That is an issue of profound concern. Our area health authority suffers from a lack of resources.

I do not have so many massive problems as my hon. Friend the Member for Rother Valley, with regard to tenants of Coal Board housing. I used to have them, and we are beginning to resolve them. One of the reasons why we do not have so many is that we have a long tradition of working-class home ownership. Vital to the maintenance and salvation of that housing stock are improvement and repair grants, yet thousands of my constituents in the communities of Rhondda, Merthyr and Rhymney have been waiting up to four years for repairs and improvement grants. On top of that, the Government introduced in their White Paper plans to means-test for home improvement grants. That would be a disaster for housing in our communities. In terms of health, housing and the infrastructure, we have the right to demand on behalf of the coal mining communities bigger resources and more investment.

Mr. Rogers: My hon. Friend has highlighted a problem that is peculiar to the south Wales valleys as against areas such as Yorkshire. It is true that the Rhondda has the highest percentage of owner-occupation in Britain and we desperately rely on improvement grants for our very old houses. Does my hon. Friend agree that leasehold reform is a problem? British Coal or other home owners have sold off their leases. Some 100 years have passed since the houses were built and we, as constituency Members, have to chase property companies all around the country.

Mr. Rowlands: Our communities are familiar with the problem of ground landlords, and that legislation needs to be strengthened.

I wish to draw the attention of the House to some positive steps that could be taken to encourage development in the south Wales coal mining communities. It need not be a matter of gloom and despair—it could be a positive move. The people and those communities have a great capacity for survival and regeneration. We have already demonstrated that, and we can do it again.

One way of supporting south Wales coal would be to develop power generation within the region. This year, for the first time, south Wales will be a net importer of electricity. For the past three or four years, we have exported electricity. Although there may be a case for building the large coal-fired plants at West Burton and elsewhere, there is also a case for the smaller units of power generation such as the combined heat and power scheme or the extension of Aberthaw C to produce regionally generated electricity so that once again we shall at least be in balance, or be able to contribute to the national grid. If we did that, opportunities would arise which would reinforce and support the Welsh coalfield. That would give greater stability to the coal industry.

I want to emphasise to the Minister that we do not need a new agency—we have the Welsh Development Agency and the local authorities. We need resources and a bigger budget, particularly to help with land reclamation. I have some knowledge of those matters as I was the first Minister in the Welsh Office to set up the land reclamation project in 1969, and I represent the community of Aberfan. We know all about the problems of land reclamation and land dereliction. Since then, we have been quite successful, and we have spent £100 million.

The problem is that we still have the same amount of dereliction as when we started the project. Even with the investment of £100 million we are still in the same position in terms of clearance because the pace of new land dereliction is almost as fast as our ability to deal with existing dereliction. Therefore, the WDA's budget of £16 million a year for land reclamation is hopelessly inadequate for the needs of good environmental and reclamation programmes on the scale needed by communities such as those in my constituency. We need a budget of about £25 million. Is that a terrible demand, considering how much money the Chancellor claims to have available? Is it so terrible to request that we spend £25 million a year on clearing the land dereliction in our communities?

We must also stop creating new land dereliction. The hon. Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin), spoke about opencasting. I have vivid experiences of opencasting.

We had one of the largest holes in Europe. The hon. Member for Elmet (Mr. Batiste) spoke about the holes in his constituency. I have one that would compare with his, and the local authorities are putting rubbish into it. In addition, British Coal has proposed the opencasting of both sides of my valley simultaneously — only yards away from residential areas, and next to a new industrial and commercial park on land that we had just reclaimed and in which we are trying to promote new diversified investment in our economy.

When Ministers speak about expanding the opencast programme in my community, where there is still a lot of coal in the hills, people know that 10 or 15 years of opencasting will mean the destruction of opportunities to diversify our economy and move into other areas. We are told that we must attract jobs and companies, and we must not cling to the old jobs in coal and steel. We may not want to cling to the jobs of gouging and desecrating our hillsides when, as a result of reclamation programmes, we can regenerate, build new factory premises and create new varieties of job opportunities so that the community that I represent, which started the industrial revolution in the 1750s, can take part in the new industrial revolution of the 1980s and 1990s.

Mr. Andy Stewart (Sherwood): I congratulate the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) on his choice of subject — the effect of Government policy on coalfield communities—a title that allows hon. Members a fairly wide brief for today's debate.

With British Coal's continued commercial success towards viability, it may be the only time that the House has the opportunity to debate the coal industry, when it is introduced on a private Member's motion. It is a far cry from the annual ritual of the Secretary of State for Energy coming to the Dispatch Box cap in hand to ask for money to meet the National Coal Board's revenue deficit, which during the lifetime of this Government has been £5·5 billion. With those requests was always the latest plan fo[illegible] the industry to become viable in our time. The mo[illegible] famous of those plans was "Plan for Coal" 1974-75. Even today, the concept of that plan cannot be criticised. It was born as a result of the world's energy crisis, conceived between Government, management and trade unions, but sadly it was only the Government who stuck to their side of the bargain to meet their investment commitment. Weak management and domineering union leadership denied the work force the opportunity to participate in the plan, giving them the rewards which should have been theirs by right.

With the wisdom of hindsight, we now know that, if "Plan for Coal" had been adhered to by all its signatories, our coalfield communities would not be facing the problems of today. However, before highlighting those problems, I must pay tribute to those who work in the coal industry for achieving productivity records which would have been considered unobtainable two years ago. Productivity has increased by 23 per cent. in the last year and is unmatched by any other industry, giving us unprecedented national levels of production of more than 3·5 tonnes per man shift. In my constituency, more than 5 tonnes per man shift have now been reached.

Mr. Hardy: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Stewart: No. Many other hon. Members wish to speak.

Mr. Hardy: It is important. I want to agree with the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Stewart: I am grateful for the compliment.

Continuing good results ensure the coal industry's future — a future in which British Coal's largest buyer, the Central Electricity Generating Board, will be privatised. Private or public, 75 per cent. of that industry's raw materials will be coal for the foreseeable future.

Mr. Hardy: Will it be British coal?

Mr. Barron: Will it be Nottinghamshire coal?

Mr. Stewart: If the hon. Gentleman will give me a chance, I shall deal with that.

The history of the nuclear industry guarantees the industry's future.

Earlier this year, two new coal-fired power stations were announced, one of which will be built in Nottinghamshire, with a promise of another three in the medium term. The commitment was recently endorsed by the Secretary of State for Energy as justification for increasing electricity prices to pay for that investment. There is a large market for coal and the demand can be met by British Coal meeting customers' requirements on quality, availability and price.

The House will recall that last year British Coal reduced its prices to the CEGB by £4 per tonne to secure a five-year contract. Knowing those who work in the industry, I am confident that that contract can be won again in four years time.

Mr. Hood: Against imported coal?

Mr. Stewart: Yes, against imported coal because many coal faces in British mines are matching the high performance levels achieved by our overseas competitors, and because the high investment in the heavy duty coalface equipment will continue. In Nottinghamshire alone this amounts to £220 million in the next two years. That continuing efficiency and our advantage in transporting coal with the knowledge that the world steam coal trade is small and unreliable gives me confidence to predict that the electricity industry will continue to receive its present volume from British coal for years to come.

British Coal has other valuable customers, taking 25 per cent. of output. To increase that market, it introduced Coalflow at a launch in Nottinghamshire in September. Coalflow is a system which is clean, automatic and gives cheap heat at a cost which is 20 per cent. lower than oil or gas.

This autumn British Coal launched a new coal conversion scheme in response to the ending of the Government's coal firing grant. Within a month that initiative has been a huge success, attracting applications from industrialists, local authorities and health authorities. It was especially good news for the public sector, since it was not eligible under the old scheme. The savings will allow the public sector to devote more resources to its services and communities.

While I am talking about conversions, perhaps the hon. Member for Rother Valley will tell us how he has been converted from being the chief campaign manager when Arthur was elected president, to being the chief campaign manager for his present leader, who wishes Arthur to disappear completely.

I have spoken about the upside of the coal industry. Unfortunately that success has been responsible for a downside, with pits closures, unemployment and low morale in the industry where the future of some pits is uncertain. Associated with that is the inept way in which British Coal went about disposing of the remaining housing stock, which caused unnecessary fears among tenants, not only those living in my constituency but across the breadth of the country. The uncertainty which we in the coalfields have experienced for the past two years will, I hope, be satisfactorily concluded in Nottinghamshire in the next few days. The "Pits and Mortar" report, to which the hon. Member for Rother Valley referred, gave me one small comfort.

Mr. Hood: Is that all?

Mr. Stewart: It actually gave me three small comforts. Nobody in my constituency featured in that document. What surprised me was why other hon. Members allowed what happened in their constituencies to arise.

Mr. Barron: When we debated the matter at the conference in Mansfield it was clear that the houses in Nottinghamshire have not been sold because Nottingham estates office has been tied up dealing with subsidence claims and has not been able to go ahead with the regional sales policy. That should be easy for anybody to understand. Perhaps I should draw a picture for the hon. Gentleman so that the facts will sink in.

Mr. Stewart: There have been no sales in my constituency because the former chairman, Mr. MacGregor, imposed a moratorium until arrangements could be made with local housing associations. That is why they did not feature in "Pits and Mortar". If you had been listening, Mr. Deputy Speaker, you would have heard that the contracts for sale of these houses in Nottinghamshire will be concluded in the very near future.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I was listening.

Mr. Stewart: You never miss a thing, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I should like to thank my local district councils, the coalfield community campaign secretariat and the housing associations which will be the new landlords. Above all, I must thank my elderly constituents for being patient and understanding. The Nottinghamshire coalfield is generally regarded as being one of the most prosperous in the country.

Mr. Alan Meale (Mansfield): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Stewart: No. The hon. Gentleman must realise that many other hon. Members want to make a contribution. I am sure that he agrees with everything that I have said.

The Nottinghamshire coalfield is generally regarded as one of the most prosperous in the country, with an assured long-term future. However, 15,000 jobs have been lost in the industry over the past five years. In March 1982, almost 41,000 people in the county worked for British coal. By March this year that number had fallen to 26,000. Half the lost jobs were due to pit closures and the others to increased productivity and mechanisation.

Hucknall colliery in my constituency closed after 120 years, as a result of what is known in the industry as a wash-out of the coal seam, causing losses of 1,400 jobs and over £100 million. In March this year Newstead joined the Annesly colliery complex in the constituency represented by the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) and in the next 10 days the future of Linby colliery will be discussed. I hope that I have illustrated clearly that even in a successful coalfield there are closures and job losses.

Recognising the need for rationalisation, the Government introduced generous redundancy terms for those who wished to leave the industry before 31 March this year and arranged alternative jobs for those who wished to stay. [Interruption.] Hon. Members must be patient; I have a long speech to make.

So far, we have not given assisted area status to all areas which are heavily dependent on mining. That was recommended in February this year when the Select Committee on Energy published its report on the coal industry. In a paragraph relating to pit closures, it recommended that such areas should have assisted status. It also urged the Government to pump in more resources at least comparable to the commitment required to generate London docklands.

Of course, we now have the new commitment to the inner cities. I believe that the time has come for some form of regional assistance that is specially aimed at the problems of the declining coalfields. Such coalfield aid could be directed to improving business advice and support services, providing better sites and premises for industrial development and improving the local infrastructure and environment.

As things now stand, local authorities in the east midlands do not receive any extra resources to meet the demands that fall upon them when pits close in their districts. I pay tribute to Nottinghamshire county council which, in the past four years, has made available assistance from its own resources to 17 businesses in the pit closure areas of Nottinghamshire, totalling £797,000 in loans, £546,000 in equity subscriptions and £32,500 in grants. My district councils of Ashfield and Sherwood also help in this work, but without special coal aid they are losing the battle in which we have involved them.

As deficit funding to British Coal is almost over now, would my hon. Friend the Minister consider channelling some of the substantial savings into the hard-hit coalfield areas? That would complement the role of British Coal Enterprise Ltd., which is doing an excellent job within its brief. In our region of the north midlands, which comprises Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire, British Coal Enterprise Ltd. has committed £1 million, which has resulted in 640 new jobs.

I know that those figures do not yet match the 3,000 who left the industry in my constituency during this period. That is why I appeal to my hon. Friend to consider the number of lost jobs in the industry and present a case for European assistance for programmes that have been successfully introduced in recent years for other traditional industries—such as steel, textiles and shipbuilding. We need look no further than the old steel town of Corby to see how successful that programme has been.

The Coal Industry Act 1987, passed by the Government this year, is one that Opposition Members will not wish to be reminded of, as they tried to vote it down at every opportunity. The Act will have a profound effect on the running of the mineworkers pension scheme, which has assets of £5 billion, by allowing two seats on the pension body to be taken by members of the Union of Democratic Mineworkers. Their expertise will enhance the moneys paid to their pensioners, who are the forgotten people of the coalfield communities — but no longer. In future, investment decisions will be made with their interests in mind — not those of Marxist philosophers. As Roy Lynk, the president of the Union of Democratic Mineworkers said:

> "A good union can be judged by the treatment of its pensioners."

To back up his statement he announced a 30 per cent. increase in his members' pensions from this month. That, I am sure, will not have gone unnoticed by those who depend on the mineworkers scheme for their pensions.

Today, the industry is entering a new chapter in its history — viability through capital investment, a work force committed to increasing productivity, and, God willing, a future without Scargill.

11.55 am

Mr. Ronnie Campbell (Blyth Valley): Unlike the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart), who passes as a farmer, I was in the mining industry for 27 years—14 of them in the coalfields—so I know what I am talking about. I remember when the Coalfield Communities Campaign was set up to help the areas affected by pit closures and the running down of the industry, which Arthur correctly predicted would happen. Never mind the strike. It would have happened even if the strike had not taken place, so let us get that out of the way immediately.

I want to discuss my area. I am a miner, but I do not have a mine in my constituency—unfortunately, it was closed. It was the first colliery to go through the so-called review procedure set up during the miners' strike. I remember trying to fight to save it. I remember coming down here with the delegation of councillors, the Mayor,

[Mr. Ronnie Campbell]

Old Uncle Tom Cobbleigh and all, and we went to see that 71 year-old American known as the chairman. We sat round the table and said that there would be devastation in our town if its only pit, which employed 1,500 men, was closed. The man's answer was that he was sorry, but his remit was to get rid of uneconomic capacity. It did not run to acting as the conscience of the community, or anything like that.

We received little help from Mr. MacGregor, so we hot-footed it to the House of Commons to see the then Secretary of State for Energy, who is now in the Welsh Office. He was very nice and told us that our pit would go through the review procedure, and he would abide by whatever decision was arrived at. We thought that that was quite fair, considering that it was just after the miners' strike. What more could we want if the Secretary of State was going to abide by whatever decision was made?

We got our review and we obtained a decision, which was that the pit should stay open for two years at least to see whether it could break even. We reckon that it could have done, and that was how we convinced the independent review to take that decision. Unfortunately, the Secretary of State for Energy was never found again. We sent him letters and telephoned him, but we could not find him. Obviously, someone else, somewhere else had taken a decision, which he did not like, to close the mine, whatever he said about it.

So there were 900 redundancies in Blyth Valley and the men took their money, with which some tried, and some failed, to set up businesses. There is now 18·4 per cent. unemployment in Blyth, which is the highest recorded level since records began. I am quoting figures from this year's economic review of our town. They have been put together by professional men. That means that 21 per cent. of all men who are capable of working in a proper job are on the dole. Two big wards adjoin the area around Bates's colliery. Cowpen ward has a male unemployment rate of 29 per cent. Croft ward, which I represented as a councillor for 20 years, has 27 per cent. male unemployment. That makes a grand total of 21 per cent. Those two areas are close to the pit and comprise the region that we are discussing.

I sometimes have to laugh when people talk about regional aid. The amount of regional aid given by the Government is unbelievable, and I shall tell the House about it. Regional aid for northern regional development used to be £235 million. Today, under this Government, it is £70 million. That is the amount given to the northern region Coalfield Communities Campaign. It has been decreased by 78 per cent., and that is an indictment of the Government. That is all that they are doing for the areas that they have devastated in the north-east.

Hon. Members have mentioned British Coal Enterprise Ltd. I must admit that since its launch it has done a lot. We estimate that at least 198 projects have been given £5 million in the north-east region. On numerous occasions my hon. Friend the Member for Easington (Mr. Cummings) has tried to find out how many jobs it has created. It cannot tell us how many have been created in my constituency, nor can it tell how many have been created in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Easington. British Coal Enterprise Ltd., cannot tell anybody how many jobs it has set up. We know that 198 projects have been set up, but how many jobs did they create? That is what we want to know, but we cannot find out. We know how many jobs it says it has created in the north-east, but we want to know the figures for specific areas.

I do not decry British Coal Enterprise Ltd., because it has done the best that it can under the circumstances and has set many people up in business, but it should try to provide some proper figures about the constituencies, and perhaps the Minister will take note of that point. In the north-east we need something to rejuvenate the people following the massive pit closures since the strike. We have had four or five such closures and many men took redundancy payments and are now on the dole.

We have asked for an extension to Blyth power station. In the north-east we have the capacity of I. E. Parsons. It has been making skilled men redundant, and those men can build boilers and know about engineering and other trades. Once those men go, they are lost for ever; and we know that we need that power station. Lord Marshall might say that he does not need it in the north-east just yet, but we need it in order to keep the men that we already have, because we are losing skilled men at an awful rate and will never get them back.

The Coalfield Communities Campaign is about trying to convince the Government, but they are difficult to convince. Since I arrived here, they have not taken notice of anything. We must try to build up Tyneside, and we can do it by ordering a new coal-fired power station, or by at least telling the people of the north-east—the managers of Parsons and the people in the trade unions—that the Government will order the new power station as quickly as possible.

I started by talking about Bates's colliery and I shall close in the same way. I spent 27 years in a colliery of 29 million tonnes and it was a sad day when we lost it, and especially when we lost the review. At the time many things were said about the review and I am sorry that the Secretary of State at the time had to do what he did. I do not know who was running the Government, whether at that time it was the Secretary of State or the Prime Minister, when the Secretary of State took the decision about Bates's colliery. Bates's colliery has now gone. It is a derelict site and will probably be grassed over and made into a park. I invite the Secretary of State for Energy to come and look at Blyth to see its potential. He is welcome to visit my constituency at any time that he wishes.

12.4 pm

Mr. David Ashby (Leicestershire, North-West): I remind the hon. Member for Blyth Valley (Mr. Campbell) that it is no help to any coal mining community to support failing mines. There is no point in the coal industry maintaining an unprofitable pit that is poorly managed and incompetent. There is no point in supporting a man like Arthur Scargill who maintains the bad practices and an unhelpful work force and who is looking for unprofitable mines and an unprofitable industry. The decline of any community faced by failing mines is slow and inevitable, but it is a reality that must end. It must be clearly understood that Mr. Scargill is no friend either to the miners or to the coal communities.

Mr. Cummings: He is my friend and the friend of many other people.

Mr. Ashby: There is no future for those communities with Mr. Scargill. In 1950 in my constituency, we had about 8,300 miners and 11 mines. By 1981, we were down to about 7,000 miners and nine mines. Now we are down to about 2,800 miners split between two pits, Donnisthorpe-Rawdon and Bagworth in Ellistown. Therefore we have lost about 4,300 jobs in the last six years.

In the 1950s, about 15 per cent. of our communities depended on mining jobs and in some communities it was as high as 30 per cent. In 1981 we saw levels of unemployment of 6·2 per cent. and by 1987 that had risen as high as 12·3 per cent. It is now down to 9·9 per cent. and in some areas the percentage is much lower. We have also seen an increase in long-term unemployment. Those figures speak for themselves and show the difficulties that these communities have faced during the last few years. The reason for that is clearly understood. In an extractive industry there is no alternative but to go when the coal becomes exhausted. In 1981, there was an absence of alternative sources of employment. We also had long-standing problems of a poor environment, and they have been exacerbated by derelict sites that have come about as a result of the closure of these mines. A very worrying problem for us is that by the 1990s it is anticipated that mining will cease in the area, with the loss of a further 2,800 jobs.

Mr. Gerald Bermingham (St. Helens, South): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that, when jobs are beginning to go in an area because of a change in employment strata, it is even more important for Government resources to go into that area so that the lost jobs can be replaced with new technologies, new skills and new opportunities? That would enable people who have lived all their lives in a particular part of the country to continue to live there in full employment.

Mr. Ashby: This is a complex matter and is the subject of my speech. I agree with the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham), but it is a combination of two things, and at the end of the day there is no solution but to look to private enterprise. However, it needs some help and some priming from the Government. That help will come from such bodies as British Coal Enterprise Ltd., and also from British Coal itself. Therefore, it is a combination, but I agree that it is important to have directed help from the Government.

We in north-west Leicestershire have been looking to Asfordby. In that context I pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham). He was anxious to be here for the debate, but unfortunately he has urgent constituency problems that have kept him away from the Chamber. Asfordby is in the constituency of Rutland and Melton. In north-west Leicestershire we have a very reasonable work force. It is a work force that is worthy of investment.

During the 1984-85 coal miners' strike the work force remained working and it has been at the forefront of turning from the National Union of Miners to the Union of Democratic Mineworkers. Even the NUM is opposing Arthur Scargill as miners now recognise the need for a six-day week to maximise investment. It is a vital feature that, when one has a high investment, one cannot have the investment in machinery standing idle for half the time. British Coal recognises that if it is to be competitive and a forward-thinking industry, it has to look to maximising its investment. Arthur Scargill is flying in the face of reasonable investment in the industry. Most reasonable miners and certainly other Britons recognise and understand that one must maximise investment.

Mr. Meale: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that the best use of resources and the best record are seen in British Coal when, since the Government were elected in 1979, 100 pits have closed, 100,000 jobs have been lost and over 60,000 homes with tenants who have given their lives to the industry have been sold?

Mr. Ashby: It was the Labour party that devastated those communities. The Labour Government closed far more coalfields. If the hon. Gentleman had been listening to my speech, he would have heard me say that there is no future for communities which have a declining coal mine, because the end is inevitable. Their future is in a strong industry, and that is what I am seeking to speak to.

One thing that worries me about Asfordby is that assurances were given by British Coal that the first option on jobs there would be given to the miners of Leicestershire. That has been significantly departed from, because it appears that those jobs will now also be open to Nottinghamshire coal miners. I have asked the chairman of British Coal to look through his files and to note that his predecessors gave positive assurances that the Leicestershire coal miners would be offered those jobs, and I have asked for those assurances to be adhered to. Another worrying factor is that there appears to be a transfer of management responsibility for the Asfordby area to Nottingham.

Mr. Andy Stewart: A good decision.

Mr. Ashby: It may be a good decision, but it has an implication for management jobs in north-west Leicestershire and it puts the future of 471 jobs at the headquarters at Coleorton Hall in some doubt. That decision may be right, but it will be worrying for my constituents because of the job implications it will have. The Government have tackled the problems in constituencies such as mine with a great deal of sensitivity and generosity. Faced with the exhaustion of coal in coalfields, the Government introduced a generous redundancy scheme to implement a rundown of those mines.

I have been approached by many miners made redundant under mine closures implemented by the Labour Government who have said that they feel they were let down by the Labour Government because their terms were not as generous as the terms offered by the Conservative Government. In fact, the Labour Government had no schemes. They had no thought for the future and they closed pits left, right and centre. They had no thought for the future of those who lost their jobs. Necessary closures have taken place while the Conservative Government have been in office, but these have been accompanied by generous schemes and a great deal of care, sympathy and sensitivity. It is against that background that we have the carping of Labour Members.

Mr. Allen McKay: The hon. Gentleman should consider the facts that lie behind his remarks. He has referred to the closures that took place when the Labour Government were in office, but he should realise that there was a lot of space, as it were, and many collieries remained. The issue was how best to fill the remaining space. I worked on what was known as the A, B and C system, which hinged on a colliery closing itself as uneconomic.

[Mr. Allen McKay]

The hon. Gentleman has spoken of redundancy payments and it seems that he has not heard about buying out jobs. That is a Coal Board ploy. If the board does not want the trouble of running the colliery, it buys it out.

Mr. Ashby: I have heard a great deal of that sort of nonsense, but it must be remembered that the Labour Government closed more pits than the number that now exist. That is the way in which they treated miners, and there can be no excuse for that.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Ashby: I shall not give way, because I know that there are many others who wish to participate in the debate. I shall continue and finish my speech.

Having spoken about the future of the industry in the area which I represent, it must be remembered that the remaining collieries are likely to close in the 1990s. The redundancy scheme has affected predominantly those over 50 years of age, which means that younger people have been left in work. Future closures will mean that younger people will be leaving the industry on slightly less generous terms than those which have prevailed. As we know, the Government scheme has ended. This will result in a challenge to the local economy.

I have referred to the relative absence of alternative sources of employment. This problem must be addressed by every community that is faced with the closure of or rundown of an extraction industry. The resources of any such industry are finite and it is right that local authorities must plan to that end. They know that extraction industries are finite and that extraction will come to an end. They must plan well ahead of any closure. The turnround for any area must be about nine or 10 years. That is the position when any major industry closes. Local authorities should consider diversification at an early stage.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Ashby: I said that I would not give way, and I shall not. I am not giving way again. I shall continue and complete my speech.

Mr. Eric Illsley (Barnsley, Central): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Member for Leicester, North-West (Mr. Ashby) has said that he is not prepared to give way, and the hon. Member for Barnsley, Central (Mr. Illsley) must not persist.

Mr. Ashby: Local authorities must turn their minds to the diversification of industry. They must make contingency plans about 20 years before a closure is expected.

Many areas of the sort that I represent have had Labour-controlled local authorities. In so many areas such as mine, the local Labour party is dominated by miners. The Labour party in my constituency was miner-orientated and like many other Labour parties, positively discouraged investment in non-mining industries. It had a loyalty, and loyalty is strong in the mining industry, but it was misplaced. The position in my area is no different from that in any other area that faces the same problem.

In recent times, the local Labour party in my constituency has understood the problem, and real improvements have been made. There has been a reduction in unemployment, which now stands at 9·9 per cent. Many new factories have opened, and as a result there have been many new jobs in the constituency.

My local authority is Labour-controlled and like so many other Labour-controlled authorities, it depends on the Liberal party to support it. We know that throughout the country, the Labour and Liberal parties are in cahoots.

Mr. Rogers rose——

Mr. Ashby: It has looked for a diversification of jobs and for the provision of new industry. In many ways, it has positively discriminated for jobs and we have been able to work together regardless of our politics. We have been encouraging new industries.

There has been a substantial economic upturn in north-west Leicesterhire and we have been able to take advantage of the growth in the national economy. The national economy has had as much of an influence as the local economy. We have been able to use the national growth to improve the area and a combination of the national economy and local economy has been formidable.

The important fact is that we have been working to establish confidence in the community. We have been talking about successes. We have not been going around talking doom and gloom. We speak of ourselves as a golden triangle of communications. We have the M1, M42 and M6 nearby and there are airports and so on. We have been speaking in positive terms about the advantages in our area and we are trying hard to create an environment that will attract the private sector. The local Labour party recognises the need for the private sector.

We have been looking to provide suitable sites and premises. We have such sites and premises and often they are on ex-Coal Board land. Our consultants report that the private sector will not build advanced factory units and we have to take that into account. I see that the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) is not listening to me, but I am talking about the need for a combination of the private and public sectors. There is a need for some local authority investment as a primer for industrial estates and industries in the area. That must be recognised by the Government. However, such expenditure must not be at the expense of other important measures such as social measures, which are necessary in such areas.

The environment is equally important. As has been said, by their very nature pits are dirty places with ghastly spoil heaps and so on. Changes have been taking place but a great deal of help is needed. In the new mines such as Asfordby, great emphasis has been placed on environmental factors. However, we must be vigilant in coping with the problem. My area has not only working pits but derelict pit sites. It also has opencast sites and I agree with so much of what was said by the hon. Member for Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney (Mr. Rowlands). To place opencast sites on top of closed sites is adding to the dereliction. We have to be environmentally sensitive if we are to improve areas such as mine where there are pit closures. We must not add to the problem by having opencast sites in profusion. One site per area is the most that can be coped with.

We have to turn the areas around and make them attractive for investors. We have to prepare the derelict pit sites for a cleaner future. There is a need for close liaison between British Coal, the property owners and local authorities in that respect. We have to think ahead. We have to think positively and co-ordinate our future planning. We need greater Government appreciation of the problems of the environment and we have to realise that the private sector is the only sector that will truly improve the communities. The communities must be nourished and encouraged. We cannot go on preaching doom and gloom, because that only discourages private sector investors.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I repeat my plea for brief speeches.

Ms. Joan Walley (Stoke-on-Trent, North): I shall try to be brief, but I hope that all hon. Members understand my constituency's specific problems, which are reflected throughout the whole country. The problems deserve to be set out fairly and squarely in Hansard, in the hope that, in some way, the Government will respond. I address my comments to the Under-Secretary of State for Energy in particular, in the hope that he will pass them on, not only to British Coal, but to the Department of the Environment. The specific problems to which I shall refer relate equally to the Department of the Environment.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) on taking the initiative and bringing the issue before the House. If the Government are so concerned about what is happening to our coal mining communities, why did they not bring forward such a motion? We have heard from the hon. Member for Leicestershire, North-West (Mr. Ashby) that we should be concerned about the environment. I, too, am concerned about the environment, and so are my hon. Friends who represent north Staffordshire constituencies.

As in south Staffordshire, many pits in our area have closed down, but we face the threat of opencast coal mining, which will bring about one of the biggest environmental problems in our region. Incidentally, that issue has been singled out by the Council for the Protection of Rural England as one of the biggest dangers that we face. I take issue with the Coal Board. Opencast coal is not needed to sweeten high-chlorine coal.

Having said that, and having referred to the fact that we need to take account of many issues connected with coal mining communities — the issues have been most admirably covered by my hon. Friends — I shall concentrate on housing, and, in particular, on the problems that tenants, residents and owner-occupiers face in the Galleys Bank estate in Kidsgrove, Stoke-on-Trent.

For the benefit of those who are not aware of it, in the 1950s the Coal Board built 450 Shindler-type houses in Kidsgrove. In 1979 the Coal Board gave an undertaking to the coal miners, who had spent a lifetime working for the coal industry, that they would be well looked after in their old age. I was dismayed when I read the legal columns of our local newspaper, the Evening Sentinel. It was clear that the houses would be sold in job lots at an auction room down in London. Many people in my constituency have never even been to London.

We have just heard from the hon. Member for Leicestershire, North-West that the Government's view is that the private sector will solve our problems. The private sector and the sale of our former NCB council houses to absentee landlords are the main reasons why we have so many problems at the moment. I take great exception to the comments of the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart). He said that he took great pride in the fact that there was no reference to his constituency in the document issued by Shelter, "Pits and Mortar". Some Opposition Members cannot help that. The Coal Board has paid no attention to the needs of those whose lives have been devoted to the coal industry. I want the debate at least to change that. I wish to make sure that due discussion and consideration are given to the matter.

The sale of the houses took place in London. Only some weeks later was it discovered that, under the housing defects legislation, those homes were defective. British Coal had never informed the tenants of that fact. Tenants thought that their houses had been sold by British Coal on 6 August. They were then told that they would not be sold until 30 September and that they should carry on paying their rents to British Coal. They were then told, no, their houses had been sold off, 20 to a company here, and 20 to a company there.

Those companies, which include such names as Swillow and Bananabliss, which are a bit hard to swallow. Those homes were sold off to absentee landlords, who made no provision for the basics of housing management. They did not make any proper arrangements to issue rent books or to carry out housing repairs. They told elderly people and widows that they must telephone London to report any problems. Many of those people do not have telephones in their homes and could not afford out of their pensions and housing benefit the telephone costs that would have been involved if they had reported the housing repairs.

The position has probably improved somewhat since then, through the efforts of Newcastle council, which has had to spend an enormous amount of money giving support to the tenants and in attempts to get the proper legislation enforced locally. It is worthy of note that that money has not been given by central Government.

Another matter of great importance is the plight of those residents who purchased their homes from British Coal without knowing that they were defective under the terms of the housing defects legislation. Those people have discovered that they have missed the cut-off date, which means that they are facing undue hardship and misery. Not even the number of letters that they have written to British Coal and to the Department of the Environment has enabled them to receive proper compensation for what happened.

I could speak about this subject at great length, but I am aware that many other hon. Members wish to speak. In earlier contributions, especially in that from my hon. Friend the Member for St. Helens South (Mr. Bermingham), we heard of the importance of the coalfield communities and it was said that we should build on the many years that generation after generation has put in to improving the quality of life.

About 15 of the houses in my constituency that have been sold to absentee landlords are now empty and are not being relet. To add insult to injury, the new owners — the absentee landlords — have even attempted to carry out illegal evictions. I shall quote from a letter sent by Sir Robert Haslam of British Coal to councillors in my constituency.:

> "All the tenants of the houses sold to private landlords retain full security of tenure, which is unaffected by the change of ownership".

I should like to say a little about local democracy, because two councillors in my constituency, Councillor

[Ms. Joan Walley]

John Lockett and Councillor John Ellis, have worked unpaid day and night, week in week out, to do the jobs of the absentee landlords and to help the people who found themselves not knowing where or who to turn to, and in misery. Those councillors have done a remarkable job, but it is now up to the Department of the Environment, through representations from the Department of Energy, to ensure that all the people concerned get round the table to try to make good some of the harm that has been done.

I do not want the "Pits and Mortar" report to be put in a filing cabinet. Too many reports by voluntary organisations have not received the discussion that they merit. It is an excellent document, and I thank my hon. Friend the Member for Rother Valley for pointing it out to me.

It was because of my concern that one of the first things that I did when elected to the House in June of this year was to table an early-day motion to highlight the suffering caused by British Coal's sale of such houses and to demand a public inquiry. I want a public inquiry. I do not want just an early-day motion and for us to have today's debate and think that the problem will go away. It will not go away. Tenants, residents, owner-occupiers and local authorities, which are not getting the money that they deserve from the Government, and hon. Members who represent the constituencies concerned, will make sure, with the help of the Coalfield Communities Campaign, that the problem is not ignored.

We want the Government to set up a public inquiry as soon as possible. I should like British Coal to say that genuine hardship was caused to tenants in my constituency and that it will give them something in compensation. If British Coal paid the rents for the five weeks when the tenants did not know who their landlord was, that would not cost British Coal more than £5,000. However, it would be a tremendous boost to coal mining communities. My constituents would then think that somebody cared about what was happening to them.

As for the housing defects legislation, I want an extension of the power to make claims. I do not know why British Coal did not inform tenants that the legislation applied to their homes. I understand that discussions are taking place at the Department of the Environment, and I want the Minister to ensure that the terms of the Housing Defects Act 1984 are widened to incorporate owner-occupiers who at present cannot claim compensation. The Government should make available to local authorities in coal mining areas adequate financial resources so that they are able to rehabilitate or repurchase defective houses.

I do not intend to leave this issue alone. I shall continue to press the Government until I can return to my constituents and say that at last the Government recognise the problems that face not just my constituency but the contituencies of every Opposition Member.

12.35 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy (Mr. Michael Spicer): One of the problems about speaking at this time in the debate — I understand that it is because the Opposition want me to do so now — is that certain hon. Members whose questions I should have like to answer have left the Chamber. Through the columns of Hansard, I apologise to them. I shall do my best to answer the points that they have raised.

The hon. Member for Hemsworth (Mr. Buckley) is the first Opposition Member to whom I want to refer. I warmly congratulate him on the eloquent and moving maiden speech that he made on behalf of his constituents. It is very difficult to make a maiden speech, and it is always a relief to have got it off one's chest.

I thank the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) for moving the motion, and I welcome the opportunity that it provides for the House to debate the coalfield communities. However, my hon. Friends the Members for Elmet (Mr. Batiste), for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart), for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) and for Leicestershire, North-West (Mr. Ashby) have said that the coalfield communities cannot be considered without referring to the industry that serves them — the coal industry. We may hear more about this from Opposition Members, but I do not understand why they are so coy about the simple proposition that in order to debate the coalfield communities one has to refer to the coal industry.

Mr. Barron: Why should the Minister be so coy about it? During the year of the strike, and ever since, Ministers have stood at the Dispatch Box and said that the social consequences of colliery closures have nothing whatever to do with the Secretary of State for Energy. We are not being coy about it. We are looking at the problem in the way that the Government have been looking at it for many years.

Mr. Spicer: Reference has been made to the strike. I am not being coy. I intend to deal with the coalfield communities. I have my own ideas about why the Opposition are making such heavy weather of this and why they do not want to discuss the coal industry. In some strange way, they want to avoid debating the coal industry. If I am pressed to say what my own ideas are about that, I shall do so. However, I do not intend to embarrass the Opposition too greatly at this stage by saying why, in my view, they do not want to debate the coal industry. Certainly we want to debate the coalfield communities in the context of some assessment of what is going on in the coal industry. The debate has already vividly illustrated the nature of the crossroads at which the industry currently finds itself.

On the one hand — as has previously been said — enormous strides have been taken to repair the damage caused by the strike in 1985, the effects of which my right hon. Friend the Member for Selby (Mr. Alison) brilliantly described. Since that time, productivity has risen by 45 per cent., and that is contrary to the terms of the motion tabled by the hon. Member for Rother Valley, which talks about falling investment. It is strange that the hon. Gentleman says that we must not talk about investment, when his motion accuses the Government of subscribing to falling investment. Investment in new machinery — quite contrary to the hon. Gentleman's motion — especially heavy-duty equipment, has been maintained at a rate of £2 million every working day. Since 1979 an amount equal — this may interest the House — to one and a half times the present capital valuation of ICI has been injected into the industry.

New pits such as Selby and Adfordby are being developed. Selby is now producing coal at the rate of 16 tonnes per man shift, as against an industry average of——

Mr. Barron: What relationship has this to the coalfield communities?

Mr. Spicer: The hon. Gentleman need not worry; I shall come on to the relationship between this and the coalfield communities. Indeed, there is a clear relationship between what I am saying and those coalfield communities.

Mr. Cummings: The history of mining in Durham, is that we had 145 pits in 1948, but we now have five. Will the Minister explain the importance of investment in the coastal mines to the scores of coalfield communities in the west of the county? I have come here today to talk about coalfield communities. Investment for the industry is always welcome, but I fail to see the consequential effects upon communities in the west of my county.

Mr. Spicer: Is the hon. Member for Easington (Mr. Cummings) suggesting that there is no benefit accruing to the coalfield communities as a result of investment in the coal mining industry? I am not in any sense denying that there are separate and additional issues involved, but, first, I wish to establish firmly what is going on as regards current investment and development in the coal industry as a basis from which to discuss the communities. I think that that is a perfectly reasonable thing to do.

Large reserves, not only of deep-mined coal but of opencast coal, are resulting in the production of competitively priced coal. All that means that British Coal now has clearly in its sight the objective of breaking even next year. It all adds up to the prospect of a highly competitive British coal industry facing a secure future. If that comes about, it can only be of benefit to the coalfield communities.

So much for the good news. On the other hand—this may now be touching on some of the raw nerves of Opposition Members — negative and destructive attitudes, championed and personified for instance by the current president of the NUM, still persist. It may well be that the reason why sensible Opposition Members do not wish to focus attention on the coal industry at the moment is that they share a certain embarrassment about this matter.

Mr. Illsley: I am not embarrassed by the president of the National Union of Mineworkers. The Minister should remember that, before the strike, the president of the NUM said that 70,000 jobs would be lost and 70 pits closed. That is about to happen. In a recent Adjournment debate I highlighted the closure of Woolley and Redbrook collieries in my constituency. What Mr. Scargill said before the strike has come home to roost. He was correct.

Mr. Spicer: Does the hon. Gentleman believe that the strike assisted in that process? If we allowed similar attitudes again to dominate the industry, there is little doubt that its potential stability and security would be shattered, this time perhaps for ever, which would cause great damage to the coalfield communities.

British Coal must compete in a tough world market which shows every sign of getting tougher. The price of internationally traded coal has fallen steeply and may decline further with the fall in the value of the United States dollar.

Mr. Barron: What does this have to do with the coalfield communities?

Mr. Spicer: A tremendous amount, as I keep trying to impress upon the hon. Gentleman. The hon. Gentleman cannot say that this has nothing to do with our debate on the coalfield communities. The future of the industry is essential to the debate on the future of those communities.

Mr. Rogers: Does the Minister accept that we are frustrated by his attitude in response to the debate? As my hon. Friend the Member for Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney (Mr. Rowlands) said, there were 200 pits in south Wales; there are now 14. I accept that some were closed under Labour and some under Conservative Governments——

Mr. Batiste: Most under Labour.

Mr. Rogers: That is not my argument. It goes to show how stupid Conservative Members are. We should discuss the communities as they exist, not try to apportion blame. Those communities need help now.

Mr. Spicer: I share the hon. Gentleman's frustration, because I, too, want to discuss the present circumstances and future of the coal mining communities. But to do that I must first discuss the future of the coal industry.

There is intense competition from other fuels. Since April last year British Coal has lost about £500 million of potential income because it had to reduce its prices to maintain its business not only with the CEGB but with other customers. British Coal's average price to customers has fallen by 15 per cent. in real terms since March 1985, when the strike ended, and by 6·5 per cent. during the past year.

It must be said with pride that, to a large extent, the industry has managed to absorb those price reductions by increasing productivity and lowering costs. Productivity has increased dramatically—in the past year alone by 15 per cent. Since March 1985, colliery operating costs have been reduced by 23 per cent. As a result, last week British Coal's half-year results showed that its total deficit was lower and that its operating profit, before the payment of interest and restructuring costs, had doubled compared with the previous year. That is all to the great credit of those who work in the industry and to the great benefit of those who live in coal mining areas.

It must be said, however—this relates directly to the motion — that the greater part of the increased productivity has been achieved by re-equipping faces with heavy duty machinery, thus enabling coal to be cut more quickly and efficiently. That investment holds out the promise of even greater productivity. Contrary to the terms of the motion, since 1979 investment in coal has been more than 30 per cent. higher in real terms than during the period of the Labour Government.

If the new machinery is to provide the maximum return, which is one of the objectives that British Coal has been set, working practices must change. That is why we fully support the corporation in its wish to introduce flexible working in new mines such as Asfordby and Margam. Indeed, we see that as part of a wider strategy whereby the industry will need to concentrate on maximising profits and to focus on profitable production and marketing. There will be a growing need for each part of the corporation's operations to show a profit and generate a positive cash flow. There can be no certainty what that will mean for production targets.

Mr. Illsley rose—

Mr. Spicer: I should like to continue. I shall give way to the hon. Gentleman in a few moments. I must carry on, because I want to relate my speech to the motion.

[Mr. Spicer]

With a rising demand for coal as the CEGB builds more coal-fired power stations, there will be great opportunities for British Coal, so long as its production is competitive. But I have to tell the House that British Coal still has a long way to go to make itself fully competitive. Because of falling prices, British Coal is likely to have an increased cash requirement and has had to accelerate its restructuring. I am likely, therefore, to have to announce to the House soon a revised external financing limit for this year.

Because of increased redundancy costs and terminal depreciation, the level of deficit grant of £100 million is also likely to prove inadequate. We are talking about Government money and taxpayers' money coming through the coal industry to the communities, which is highly relevant. The deficit grant of £100 million available under the Coal Industry Act 1987 is increasable by order to a maximum of £200 million. Should it prove necessary, we would come to the House with the order for any increase that was required, together with a Supplementary Estimate for any additional payments this year.

Privatisation of the electricity supply industry will be the most important challenge to the coal industry and communities around it over the next few years—

Mr. Rowlands: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Spicer: I should like to continue, but I shall give way.

Mr. Rowlands: I am the one hon. Member who referred to restructuring and redundancies, so I feel that I am entitled to ask a question. I suspect that there will be a press release on that aspect of the Minister's speech. Am I right?

Mr. Spicer: Yes.

Mr. Rowlands: Good. In that case, how does the Minister square that with the statement by the Secretary of State for Wales, when he was Secretary of State for Energy, to all Welsh Members only a few months ago, that restructuring and rationalisation were virtually over in the Welsh coalfield, so we did not need a redundancy payments scheme. It is now being reintroduced. Does the Minister admit that there will be another major restructuring of the industry?

Mr. Spicer: The hon. Gentleman knows that there is an extension to the redundancy payments scheme. Currently, British Coal receives the most generous redundancy rate of all industries. The hon. Gentleman knows that as well as I do. There is certainly a renewal of the redundancy scheme, and that will be paid out of the restructuring grant.

Privatisation of the electricity supply industry will be the most important challenge to the coal industry over the next few years. Whatever structure we decide for the electricity industry, we believe that the coal industry will continue to be a large supplier to the electricity industry. However, a privatised electricity industry will be free to enter—[Interruption.] I am about to say something that is highly important—into commercial arrangements which it believes best suit its needs. Therefore, I cannot predict——

Mr. Bermingham: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I may not be the world's brightest, but I can read. The motion deals with the coalfield communities—that is, the communities in both former and present coalfield areas. What the Minister has to say about the proposed privatisation of the electricity industry surely is a matter for a different debate. There are many hon. Members—[Interruption.] I seek to make my point, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but the children are cackling on the Conservative Benches. Perhaps they will shut up. Will you tell the Minister that the right time for him to make his remarks is during an appropriate debate, not this one?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Order. The hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) tabled a wide motion and a wide debate is therefore in order. I have heard nothing out of order so far.

Mr. Spicer: I shall not weary the House by going into the reasons for discussing the electricity industry in the context of the coal communities.

Mr. Barron: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Today is set aside for private Members' motions which are of interest to hon. Members. Is it not an abuse for the Minister to read out a press release on electricity privatisation which has nothing to do with my motion?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister is responsible for his own speech. Hon. Members are taking up valuable time on points of order.

Mr. Spicer: The privatisation of the electricity industry will affect the coal industry, and the future of the coal industry is vital to the future of the coalfield communities.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Spicer: I shall not give way again.

It is sometimes suggested that we should privatise coal to expand production and so increase jobs in the coalfield communities. My hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, West reminded us that a Select Committee report suggested privatising the coal industry, but we have no present plans to privatise British Coal. We are giving priority to maintaining the present process of re-adjustment in the coal industry. In the meantime, we are committed to the development of a prosperous private sector for coal, which has substantial implications for the coalfield communities.

The licensed sector has expressed some concern about the statutory framework within which it operates. The Government are considering whether to raise the statutory limits applied to the licensed sector. If we decided to present such proposals to the House, legislation would take time. In the meantime, I have been discussing with Sir Robert Haslam the scope for greater flexibility and transparency.

Mr. Barron: What about jobs?

Mr. Spicer: The hon. Gentleman can make his own calculations but certainly there will be jobs. There is no doubt that there would be many more jobs if the private sector were given its head. Within the scope of the present law we want to discuss with Sir Robert Haslam what more can be done. For instance, it might be possible to speed up the issuing of licences and to give clearer guidance to potential licence applicants about the criteria that British Coal applies when deciding whether to grant a licence. I hope that we can reach some form of agreement before Christmas.

In addition, we must consider opencast mines which are worked by the private sector. I do not wish to go too deeply into that, except to remind hon. Members that it costs £1·03 per gigajoule to mine opencast coal, which is perhaps what the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) had in mind when considering the various balances. By comparison, it costs £1·60 per gigajoule on average, for deep-mined coal. Clearly, therefore, opencast coal—whether Opposition Members like it or not—has a part to play in the development of jobs in the coal industry, and because of the mix when it is blended with high chlorine deep-mined coal.

I entirely understand the objections and worries that have been raised about opencast mining. I shall do everything that I can to publicise the good things that British Coal has done to the land as a result of opencast mining, and the jobs that it has brought to the community. I shall also involve myself——

Mr. McLoughlin: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for pointing out that there can be difficulties. Is he aware, however, that opencast mining in this country has remained at a consistent level? In 1978-79 it amounted to 13·6 million tonnes, and last year the figure was 13·3 million, so there has been no huge increase in opencast mining since the Government came to power.

Mr. Spicer: That is correct, and I find it rather a sad figure. Nevertheless, I take on board some of the points that have been made about what has been done after opencast activity has taken place. As far as it is within my power to influence the matter, I intend to do so to the benefit of the communities. However, it must be said that some of the instances that have been given today are largely the fault of the local authorities and not that of British Coal. In addition to the substantial levels of investment in the coal industry, to which I have already referred, the Government have been generous in their financial support for the consequential restructuring costs, which amounted to almost £600 million in 1986-87 alone.

As we said in our response to the report by the Select Committee on Energy, a number of Government programmes provide help to mitigate the effects of unemployment. This Government were the first to respond to the special employment needs of coalfield areas, by setting out directly to provide them with new jobs through British Coal Enterprise Ltd. I want to discuss that company, because some spiteful, derogatory comments have been made about it by Opposition Members.

Assistance from British Coal Enterprise Ltd. aims to help the coalfield communities in precisely the way that the hon. Member for Rother Valley intends. The company's purpose is not only to find jobs for men leaving the industry on redundancy. It aims to provide a wide range of jobs—preferrably in manufacturing—that can give employment to all members of the community. It does so by supporting new and diverse businesses and industries and bringing new skills and opportunities to workers.

A measure of the company's success is that it has already committed funds to help to generate more than 20,000 new job opportunities in coalfield areas. Up to the end of October, BCEL had provided £36·5 million towards the cost of about 1,700 individual projects. Opposition Members seem to find that unsatisfactory or disagreeable in some way. BCEL is also funding only those projects that it considers have a good chance of long-term survival.

Mr. Illsley rose——

Mr. Spicer: I want to finish what I am saying about BCEL. These efforts should help to ensure that coalfield communities no longer depend on a single industry. If that is part of what the hon. Member for Rother Valley wants, it is also precisely what BCEL aims to do. Unconstructive criticisms such as we have heard from Opposition Members today are of no help to the communities that they profess to support and assist.

The Opposition have criticised the company on the extraordinary grounds that it has failed to publish a list of names of all the ex-miners employed in schemes that it has supported. The House well knows that BCEL is not able to breach the normal rules of commercial confidentiality that govern much of the assistance that has been given. However, where details can be given, they will be made freely available. I have listened to what Opposition hon. Gentlemen and hon. Ladies have said, and I shall see whether it is possible to provide more information in future without breaking those rules of commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Bermingham: Does the Minister agree that he has to assist not only companies in coalfield areas, but the areas themselves? In St. Helens there are development areas that are supported by other Government bodies and are in a wholly disadvantageous position compared to Liverpool, Warrington, and Stafford Park. Will the Minister take that on board in seeking to give extra assistance to the former miners in the St. Helens area?

Mr. Spicer: I understand the hon. Gentleman's point. Indeed, the question of the boundaries of the special assistance areas was raised by several hon. Members. This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. However, as hon. Members know, the Government have decided to maintain the present boundaries. We have very good reasons for that, because it gives some clarity and stability to those planning their investment decisions. We are constantly changing the rules and the boundaries of development areas. That may not do what the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) would like, which is to encourage long-term plans and investment decisions that bring forward jobs.

BCEL recently invited its external auditors to make a general check of its procedures for establishing, monitoring and recording job opportunities created. I am able to tell the House that the company's auditors found that its procedures were sound and were providing them with realistic data. They recommended some minor improvements, which the company has accepted. For example, it was suggested that the monitoring of actual jobs created, as opposed to estimates, should be done on a monthly rather than a quarterly basis. That suggestion has been accepted. I listened carefully to what hon. Members said about that. If hon. Gentlemen want to know more about BCEL's activities in their constituencies, I know that its chief executive will meet them and discuss examples. I shall look at the question of whether more information can be provided without revealing confidentialities.

Mrs. Llin Golding (Newcastle-under-Lyme): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is it in order for the Minister to refer to hon. Members as hon. Gentlemen?

[Mrs. Llin Golding]

There are ladies in the House who have been here from the beginning of the debate, and that is more than I can say for some Conservative Members.

Mr. Spicer: I apologise to the hon. Lady if I said that. If I did say it, I hope that I was addressing specific points raised by hon. Gentlemen. At one point in my speech I thought that the point I was speaking about had not been raised by hon. Ladies. Perhaps the hon. Lady was not here at the time, but if she looks at the record she will see that earlier in my speech I referred to hon. Ladies.

The hon. Member for Rother Valley, my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, West and other hon. Members spoke movingly about the effects on local communities of changes in the coal industry. The hon. Member for Easington will agree with my next point. I lived and worked for almost 10 years as a candidate in the coal mining area of Easington, and I know about the spirit and the sense of community and the changes that characterise today's mining areas. There is no doubt that the sense of community in the coal mining areas can be turned to great advantage in attracting industries.

It is this spirit, combined with the technical skills which undoubtedly go with coal mining, which in large part lay behind Nissan's decision to make a major investment in Durham. However, the coal mining industry cannot be totally insulated from wider economic and social changes. The Nottinghamshire miner who commutes long distances from a new housing estate is breaking old patterns for the industry, but he is in tune with modern ways of living.

I believe, and it has been confirmed by today's debate, that Labour Members sometimes seem to wish that the coal mining industry would remain forever captured in the ways of 50 years ago. The Government see British Coal as an essentially modern industry from which electricity, heat, and possibly gas will be derived well into the 21st century, and that is why I urge the House to reject the motion.

1.11 pm

Mr. Alexander Eadie (Midlothian): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) on initiating the debate. Judging from the exchanges, I think that all hon. Members appreciate the fact that he chose the topic that he did. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Hemsworth (Mr. Buckley) on his maiden speech. He made a very worthwhile contribution and Opposition Members look forward to hearing more from him. Judging from his well-articulated comments, he will be a great asset to us and to the House generally. He is a member of the miners parliamentary group and I believe that that will strengthen his activities in the House.

It is difficult to reply to the debate because I am racing against time and I know that other hon. Members wish to speak, but I can say shortly that the problem of coal communities was highlighted in 1985 when coal communities decided collectively to form the Coalfield Communities Campaign. That membership consists of 68 local authorities—18 communities from Wales; 14 from Scotland, plus one associated member; and 36 from England. I think it goes without saying that that sweep of organisations represents probably the biggest sweep of opinion that exists. It has been called an apolitical organisation. However, that does not mean to say that it has no political views.

Councillor Salt made clear the objects, activities and views of the CCC when he gave evidence to the Select Committee on Energy on 23 April 1986. He was asked by the Chairman of the Committee what its terms of reference were and he replied:

> "Our terms of reference are to carry on consultation on matters of common interest; to secure an effective flow of information between member local authorities, local government associations, the institutions of the EEC, Members of Parliament, the media, Government and Parliament itself and any other interested bodies."

The Chairman then asked Councillor Salt to state the CCC's key objectives. He replied:

> "Our key objectives are a significant increase in employment and job opportunities in our areas and safeguarding existing jobs; increased input of resources and investment from outside the coalfield communities into coalfield communities; legislation to protect and, where necessary, facilitate the improvement of the environment and of the living and working conditions of the peoples within the areas that we represent; and to give full consideration to coal as an energy source, leading to increased use of coal within the EEC and the United Kingdom in particular."

The CCC is fortunate to have someone of the calibre of Councillor Salt to lead it in its campaign.

The CCC has not been just another girning organisation. It has produced high-quality research papers, and its most recent effort is a report on opencast coal. A working party took evidence for eight months before the report was published. It is known already that British Coal's marketing director is not too pleased about its contents. I advise the CCC not to be too perturbed about that. The marketing director has a habit of speaking as if he were the chairman of British Coal. We can take our choice in deciding whether this is vanity or disloyalty. Perhaps he should be reminded of the post he holds and the work for which he is paid.

I have a constituency interest because Councillors Murray and Boyes, two of my constituents, are leading officers and activists of the CCC. They have sent me some documentation to which I shall refer briefly. I do that on the basis that if I change the name I could easily be referring to almost any coalfield community in our land because the problems stretch from Wales right up to Scotland.

The document says:

> "Coalmining has long played a major role in Midlothian's economy. Even 10 years ago when many of the older pits had already closed, the industry still employed around 6,000 people. Miners made up almost 40 per cent. of the male workforce. This was particularly significant in an area with a population of less than 85,000 people.
>
> Today, under 1,400 people are employed in the coal industry . . . In 10 years over three quarters of the coalmining jobs have gone. Two thirds of these job losses—3,000—have actually occurred in the last five years.
>
> The traumatic effect on the declining local economy was reinforced by the general economic recession during the early 1980s. The withdrawal of Assisted Area status from Midlothian has also made the task of attracting new companies to the area much more difficult. The most obvious effect has been the rise in unemployment. The total doubled in three years between 1979 and 1982 and has consistently remained at well over 4,000 during the past five years. This has made an enormous impact in a relatively small district like Midlothian, with the worst effects being felt in the mining communities, where male unemployment remains around 20 per cent.
>
> It has to be recognised that the coalfield communities have specific and unique problems, and comprehensive efforts are being made to expand and diversify the local economy. Joint action by the Local Authorities, the involvement of the > Scottish Development Agency, the establishment of an Enterprise Trust with private sector locally, and other measures have all been pursued.

>
> Progress has been achieved but it is not on a sufficiently large scale to address the problems of restructuring the economic base, retraining and providing new employment. The will, skill and direction are there — now the proper resources are needed to accelerate this progress."

I could be addressing myself to probably every area represented by my hon. Friends. Therefore, I take the liberty of referring to my area.

This has been a political debate and I want to deal with the politics. British Coal does not seem to be engaged in image building nowadays. I draw the House's attention to what the miners and the public read in their newspapers on 29 July 1987. The headline was:

> "£145,000 Haslam says he is employed on the cheap. British Coal chief paid 100 per cent. more than MacGregor."

The article then went on:

> "Since Sir Robert assumed responsibility, four full-time board members have been appointed at salaries between £65,000 to £70,000. They confirmed that their overall pay had increased by £50 a week. Stung by questions that they were high salaries in a politically-sensitive industry, Sir Robert led his colleagues in a stout defence of their earnings, and claimed that the miners were also well-paid."

I do not chastise anybody who wants to defend his level of salary. I an not concerned about that in this debate.

The article went on:

> "Sir Robert's deputy, Sir Kenneth Couzens, declared: 'Only a madman would accept these terms.' He pointed out that new board members had no security of tenure."

That statement has particular relevance to the work and objectives of the CCC. What security of tenure do miners have in the industry today? What about the coal communities, to which the CCC draws our attention? We have environmental dereliction, and our real unemployment level is amongst the highest in the land. Our kids cannot get jobs. We have a crisis. School leavers conduct fruitless quests for jobs.

I do not apologise for saying that. The article in The Guardian of 29 July 1987 angered me and many of my parliamentary colleagues. I am certain of one thing arising from the comment made by the vice-chairman of British Coal. It is not a good idea to make a retired civil servant, however senior, vice-chairman of British Coal. One could make some comment about the madman. It reminds me of the time, years ago, when I was a young editor of our constituency paper. I often wonder what my caption writer might have done with a statement like that. We might have had "Madman in Hobart House", or something like that.

I am reminded of a story that I shall relate to the House. We must have some humour at times, together with seriousness. I am reminded of the story of Lord Manny Shinwell who, incidentally, represented the constituency of my hon. Friend for Easington (Mr. Cummings). When Lord Shinwell was a young man—he was only about 87 years of age—he was cornered by the press in a corridor of the House of Commons. That day, there was a caption in the Glasgow Herald, which stated:

> "Stepbrother of Lord Shinwell is considering joining the Tory Party."

The press asked Lord Shinwell, "What do you have to say to that comment?" He reflected for a moment, as a young man of 87, and he said, "Well, insanity runs in every family."

Mr. Beith: Before the hon. Gentleman goes much further in his extraordinary attack on Sir Kenneth Couzens, I point out that Sir Kenneth was of considerable assistance to miners and ex-miners in my constituency who had a serious housing problem. They went to him — I accompanied them at the time — to raise the problem. He listened extremely sympathetically. Thanks to his efforts, the problem has been solved.

Mr. Cummings: I met Sir Kenneth Couzens, along with Sir Robert Haslam, with the Coalfield Communities Campaign in January of this year. Certain assurances were given. Within three or four days, they had reneged on their assurances. We were promised that the auctions would stop. Within three days, the auctions had recommenced in Nottinghamshire. So far as Sir Kenneth Couzens is concerned, I have not been dealing with an honourable gentleman at all.

Mr. Eadie: I probably made a mistake in giving way to the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith). If he wishes to defend Sir Kenneth Couzens, so be it. I have put on the record what he said. I could deal with the meetings that we had with him in relation to housing. He has not handled housing matters well. The hon. Gentleman's defence can be his own. I wish to get on with my speech. If the hon. Gentleman wishes to praise the vice-chairman of British Coal so be it. We have different views.

The House has debated the Select Committee on Energy report on the coal industry, which was published on 28 June 1987. My hon. Friend the Member for Rother Valley referred to the recommendation that was made in paragraph 207 that a Cabinet Committee should be set up to look at ways of helping the coalfield communities. It is fair to say that that recommendation was triggered by the written and oral evidence that was given to the Select Committee by the Coalfield Communities Campaign. If such a proposition was relevant way back on 29 January 1987 when the report was issued, it is even more urgent today.

We must consider the statement that was made by Sir Robert Haslam on 11 November 1987, some of which has been referred to in the debate. I have read all the press releases that were issued, including those issued by British Coal. I shall quote from one press comment because it is not only relevant but is the central thrust of today's debate:

> "Yesterday's bleak statement from Sir Robert based on the industry's half yearly figures could not hide the industry's perilous position. It has closed 66 collieries since the end of the miners' strike more than two years ago and it has reduced its workforce by 83,500 to 137,800 — without any compulsory redundancies — but its sword is still not in its sheath."

The report continues:

> "Sir Robert hid his words behind his hand but the mayhem is to continue. He has given the Government an undertaking that the industry will break even by 1988-89, but to do that there will have to be further redundancies."

Perhaps we had a trailer of that today when the Minister said that he will introduce an order on the external financing of the board later in this parliamentary Session.

The report continues:

> "In a way Sir Robert spelt it all out. 'In order to achieve our break-even objective next year, we will need to take further action to reduce remaining high cost capacity in the next six months . . .' If it is to achieve break even within the next 18 months, British Coal will have to close many more pits and make thousands of miners redundant . . . They are now disappearing at the rate of nearly 30 a year and Sir Robert and his senior colleagues admitted that at least another eight were in the pipeline. Before the end of the year, therefore, the pit total will almost certainly have fallen beneath the 100 total."

[Mr. Eadie]

The caption to the article, which was written on 12 November by one of the most experienced industrial reporters, Keith Harper, was:

"Sir Robert's ticking time-bomb in the pits".

Despite some of the sunshine stories that we have heard, and in the light of what has been said, not by us but by Sir Robert Haslam, the proposition that was made as a result of the 1987 report of the Select Committee on Energy, is even more relevant today. The Minister has made his speech but I hope that he will write to some of us to say that his Department will press for a special Cabinet Sub-Committee to consider the coalfield communities.

We should take this opportunity to consider some aspects of the mining industry and I shall do so quickly. Industrial relations in the industry were never poor. However, a complete botch was made of handling the new code of conduct and disciplinary procedure. If I had the time, I could back that assertion in detail. In too many areas, men are too willing to leave the industry, if they are given the opportunity to do so. The coal industry is far too important to allow that state of affairs to continue. It does not help the Coalfield Communities Campaign to carry out the objectives that I described at the beginning of my speech.

Yesterday I was informed that, as a matter of policy, British Coal is pursuing a form of insidious blackmail on pit closures. If a pit is confronted with partial closure and if the men threaten to use the agreed procedure of referring the matter to independent adjudication, British Coal tells them that if they do so it will not be a partial closure: it will close the entire pit. British Coal is riding roughshod over the agreed consultation and conciliation procedures.

The Minister referred to the investment in the coal industry, but some of that investment has already been abandoned because of the dramatic contraction of manpower and pit closures. This national energy resource — which all hon. Members agree is needed — is being vandalised. Compared with the financial advantage of coal, the Government's blatant preference for nuclear power cannot bear examination. The Government and the Treasury demand a rate of return on new coal mines of 10 per cent., but the Sizewell B pressurised water reactor is to be allowed a real rate of return of 5 per cent. Recent figures for coal research and development show an investment of £1·4 million, whereas research and development investment in the nuclear industry amounts to £173 million. The coal industry will receive £2·8 million in 1988-89, but the nuclear industry will receive £199·1 million.

Nuclear power has not delivered the cheap energy that was promised. The chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board, Lord Marsh, acknowledged on television that nuclear power is 7 per cent. more expensive than coal. The coal mining communities rightly feel aggrieved by what is happening today. That is putting it mildly. This is an important debate, and I have welcomed the opportunity to make a contribution to it.

Several Hon. Members rose —

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I remind the House that time is very limited and that many hon. Members still wish to speak in the debate. I suggest to those hon. Members who are called that short speeches can make a great impact and that they will win golden opinions with the House and the Chair.

1.37 pm

Mr. David Shaw (Dover): I begin by paying tribute to all those who work in the Kent coalfield. Many of them live in my constituency, where the coalfield is located, but many also live in the constituencies of my hon. Friends the Members for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale), for Canterbury (Mr. Brazier) and for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken) who have asked me, because they are detained elsewhere on urgent constituency business, to say on their behalf how much they would like to be associated with this tribute. In particular, my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South asked that particular reference should be made to, and that particular interest should be taken in, the fact that British Coal Enterprise Ltd. recently set up a venture in his constituency, about which he is very pleased.

The motion is not an accurate portrayal of the position in the coal industry and in the coalfield communities today. We are dealing with an industry that, under this Government, has become very nearly a success story. The price of the product has gone down, relative to inflation, it has made coal more competitive and it has provided new opportunities for coal.

Productivity has increased significantly and that has been achieved as a result of record investment levels. Since 1979 when the Government came to office some £5·5 billion of investment has been put into the British coal industry. Currently, that investment is running at nearly £800 million per annum—equivalent to some £6,000 per employee in the coalfields. Those figures are creditable by any industrial standard.

Therefore, we have the prospect of a thriving coal industry for the first time in many years. It was interesting to look at Lord Robens' book, "Ten Year Stint" a record of the time when he was running British Coal. I discovered from the book that the Labour Government promised 200 million tonnes of production a year, but when they left office in 1970, production was down to 145 million tonnes —more false promises. The coalfield communities have never suffered more than they suffered under Labour.

Our record also compares well with the position in 1978-79. Overall output is only slightly down today on the 1979 level, but overall output per man shift has significantly improved. Output has increased, but not at the expense of safety. In 1979, under the Labour Government, there were 72 fatalities in the coalfields. In 1986-87—the last year for which records have been kept — fatalities had gone down to 15. That is a major achievement.

Mr. Illsley: What about accidents?

Mr. Shaw: The hon. Member for Barnsley, Central (Mr. Illsley) knows that current figures and the way they are kept are not comparable to the way they were kept in the 1970s. Clearly, Opposition Members do not like the truth. Lord Robens identified that truth when he spoke about pit closures:

"In fact, under Labour, we shut pits at a faster rate than when the Conservatives were in office".

More than 200 collieries were shut under the Labour Government—a shameful record. I was pleased that my hon. Friend the Member for Leicestershire, North-West (Mr. Ashby) drew attention to that fact.

I believe that there are more opportunities for the coalfield communities under the Conservative Government, not just because we have looked after the coal industry far better than the Labour Party did, but because the economy is sound. Therefore, when British Coal Enterprise Ltd. puts money into new businesses in coalfield areas, those businesses have a much better likelihood of survival than they would under any Labour Government. The fact that we are doing so much more throughout the country for the economy brings me to my constituency and what is happening there.

The other day I was very pleased when the Minister kindly agreed to meet a group of representatives from the NUM. It was good that they had the opportunity to meet the Minister and hear the Government's views. It is extremely important that we should have dialogue with the union. It is especially unfortunate that the NUM is run by someone who cannot engage in such dialogue. He has destroyed mines. He claims that he speaks for the hearts and minds of the miners, but he puts nothing in mineworkers' stomachs.

The strike that damaged the coal industry and the country — Mr. Scargill's strike — also damaged my community in Kent. That was extremely upsetting. Those who supported Scargill lost all the way down the road. They lost money, food, welfare for their families; they lost everything.

I believe that there is a new realism among many miners. Indeed, in order to achieve such realism many of them have had to leave the NUM—they could not go on in that union — and they have set up their own union, which is a realistic union.

I am also concerned about the disruption caused by the current overtime ban. In my constituency, coal production has decreased from 10,000 tonnes a week to 3,500 tonnes a week. Mr. Scargill's overtime ban is damaging the industry yet again. Mr. Scargill's overtime ban will cause investment to stop. There will be no investment in coal mining while Mr. Scargill's overtime ban continues.

Mr. Allen McKay: The hon. Gentleman said that the overtime ban will close collieries, but he should realise that the ban is on the production of coal in overtime. Very little coal has ever been produced in overtime. It is one big con.

Mr. Shaw: I thank the hon. Gentleman for making that point, but he will appreciate that the coal industry has high fixed costs and it is important to produce the extra tonne of coal because the fixed costs will not change. The more coal that is produced, the more money will be available for bottom-line profit and investment. That is what the motion is about: whether we shall have investment in the coal industry or whether it will be destroyed by Mr. Arthur Scargill. The Government will not let Mr. Scargill destroy the coal industry.

Mr. Eadie: I am sure that the hon. Gentleman does not want to mislead the House by talking about Mr. Scargill's overtime ban. There was a ballot of miners, who voted 77·9 per cent.—the highest percentage ever recorded—in favour of the overtime ban. It had nothing to do with Mr. Scargill. It was the result of a resolution passed at the miners' conference in Rothesay, and its instigators were not from Yorkshire but from south Wales.

Mr. Shaw: I thank the hon. Gentleman, and I am flattered by the attentions of the Labour Front Bench. But Mr. Scargill's union is not the sole representative of workers in the industry, and those who voted for Mr. Scargill's overtime ban represent fewer than half the workers. The hon. Gentleman must appreciate that the overtime ban damages not only the pits whose workers are represented by the NUM, but those whose workers are represented by the Union of Democratic Mineworkers, because the resources are not available for investment.

Mr. Illsley: Will the hon. Gentleman explain his figures? How did he arrive at the statement that fewer than half the workers in the industry voted for the overtime ban?

Mr. Shaw: Many miners are now members of the UDM, and the fact that many members of Arthur Scargill's union did not support him means that almost half the people working in the industry did not want the ban.

Mr. Batiste: That is right.

Mr. Shaw: My hon. Friend confirms my figures. Whatever the figures are, we are not concerned with hearts and minds frauds. We are concerned about putting food in miners' bellies. That is what Arthur Scargill is taking away from people.

Dover district council has realised that the world moves on, whether in coal mining or any other industry. It knows that we need new businesses and industries, so it is pushing tourism for all it is worth. I hope—as many people in Kent want—that the pit that was closed at Tilmanstone will not become a rubbish dump. I hope that it will be used by the tourist industry and that jobs for miners and former miners will be created so that we can improve the economy in my constituency.

One thing is certain. The coal industry, the coalfield communities and the people who live and work in them will benefit more from the Conservative Government than they would from a Labour Government.

1.49 pm

Mr. Harry Barnes (Derbyshire, North-East): I am not particularly concerned about who caused the devastation in the coal industry, whether it was Labour or Conservative, or Labour and Conservative. There is devastation and a great social problem. We should direct our minds to how we are to tackle and handle that problem. That should be done by hon. Members on both sides of the House, not just Opposition Members.

The north Derbyshire coalfield covers Derbyshire North-East, the constituency that I represent, Chesterfield and Bolsover. In 1949, there were 37 deep mines there, employing 37,500 miners, but now, whatever the reasons, whatever the state of the world economy and technical change, whatever the political decisions, we are left with seven mines employing 7,000 men. Those mines are under threat, with some of the problems that have been discussed today.

From 1951 to 1971, when there was a Labour Government as well as a Conservative Government, there were seven collieries in the area to the south of north-east Derbyshire, near Bolsover, and in the Heath, Clay Cross, North Wingfield, Shirland, Pleasley and Morton—[HON. MEMBERS: "Where is the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner)?"] My illustrious constituent has other business, but I am sure that I have his full support in what I am saying.

[Mr. Harry Barnes]

In the past 10 years there has been an accelerated decline in the area. In 1983, Pleasley pit was closed and in 1984 Westhorpe pit closed with the loss of 640 jobs. Now the pit is being refurbished so that tourists can visit it in the same way as they visit areas such as Beamish. We need financial support for that. Whitwell was shut in 1986. Ireland linked with Markham is now under threat of early closure. Some 400 jobs were lost in the headquarters in Bolsover on that occasion.

Each of the pits that was shut in recent years could have been like Cortonwood and could have been the cause of action being taken because coal supplies were available in the area. In the past year alone, 1,341 jobs have been lost in mining in the north Derbyshire area, out of a total of 2,262 jobs, according to Government figures, which we know have been laundered and manipulated downwards, to try to ignore the true nature of what is happening.

In addition there are associated declines for political, economic, industrial and technological reasons. The railways have declined in the area. At the Staveley railway institute one tends to find only ex-railwaymen. Few railwaymen are employed in the area.

Iron foundries are being closed. In Dronfield in my constituency all that we have left of the oldest malleable iron foundry in the country is the entrance, which is now a monument. The steel industry has declined, not just in the south Yorkshire area, but in Staveley in my constituency. One thousand jobs were lost in the Staveley steelworks between 1980 and 1984.

Our debate goes wider than the coalfield communities. We are discussing what is associated with those communities and the problems of Britain's industrial decline. We must ask how we shall adapt ourselves and try to make improvements in the future.

All told, some 12,000 net losses have occurred in large firms in the north Derbyshire area since 1980. Not just the firms are affected but the numerous associated support industries such as machine producers and services — people working in garages, pubs and shops. Opportunities for young people in the area are no longer available. The hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) said that miners were concerned about their being no future for their children. At one time they were concerned about people not working in the pits. A dramatic change has taken place.

What jobs are available and what are the opportunities beyond existing schemes? Substitutes are being provided for the jobs lost in the area. What is the growth industry there? One is the citizens advice bureau, which needs funds to deal with debt problems and troubles with the DHSS. Law societies are established to deal with debt, desperation and DHSS problems. The DHSS itself has expanded. It is like an obstacle course for people who are trying to handle their problems and deal with their conditions.

The one serious growth area in the vicinity is in Sheffield. The Manpower Services Commission there caters for my unemployed constituents and workers coming from places such as Dronfield. It is concerned with YTS and community projects — matchstick jobs for real people. Those are the only efforts that the Government are making.

Mr. Irvine Patnick (Sheffield, Hallam): The hon. Gentleman talks about matchstick jobs. Real jobs exist. Jobs are available, but the workers are not correctly skilled for them. Opposition Members should accept that training is available for vacancies. They seem to derive spurious pleasure from saying that unemployment is insoluble. I do not accept that.

Mr. Barnes rose——

Mr. Patnick: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Barnes: I have not said anything yet.

Mr. Patnick rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is clear that the hon. Gentleman is not giving way.

Mr. Barnes: It is peculiar for the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Mr. Patnick) to ask me to give way before I have responded to his previous intervention, which I have now forgotten. The hon. Member for Hallam should visit North-East Derbyshire, which is not far from his home, and see for himself the dereliction and the problems which it causes. I suggest that he goes to Chesterfield, catches a No. 53 or 54 bus and travels through Tupton, Grassmoor, North Wingfield and the surrounding area. He would then see deprivation and disgraceful conditions. The area needs grants, assistance and local authority provision.

Mr. Patnick: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Barnes: No.

Massive dereliction exists in the area. It scars the landscape and causes masses of social problems. Arkwright pit near Bolsover, Ireland pit at the edge of north-east Derbyshire and Renishaw Park pit are threatened with closure. Renishaw Park pit is the subject of early-day motion No. 231. Initially it was given until the mid-1990s by British Coal. It has plenty of stock and great opportunities still exist. If jobs in the area are to go, plans should be made now to replace them.

Now, British Coal has given until March 1989 for the pit to be closed. It has threatened that, if the NUM insists on making use of the colliery review procedure—it was not exactly constructed by the NUM for its own benefit: it was the result of the strike—it will bring forward the date of closure by a year and people will lose jobs next March. British Coal then made the offers and bribes that were described earlier. We are dealing with bribery and corruption, which will create further unemployment in the Renishaw area. Even on the Government's own figures, there is 19 per cent. unemployment in Renishaw, and the neighbouring areas of Killomarsh and Eckington. What is being asked is that another 460 jobs — and the jobs associated with them — should be destroyed. In a short time, unemployment in that area will be doubled. Then the ripple effects will begin to be felt.

What should be done in the future? We have heard much about British Coal Enterprise Ltd. I was involved in the meeting that was described earlier by my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover and from which little hope was to be had. The Minister talked about 20,000 job opportunities being created by British Coal Enterprise Ltd. What is a job opportunity, as distinct from a job? The term is thrown about all the time by British Coal Enterprise Ltd. and the Minister. It is some sort of gobbledygook that hides the true position.

The British Coal Opencast Executive also has vast interests in north-east Derbyshire. I was interested to hear the various contributions about opencast mining. The Opencast Executive in north-east Derbyshire plans to add to its current operations in Poolsbrook, New Brimington and Barnabas in Clay Cross; and to go to old mining areas such as North Wingfield, Pilsley, Morton and Stonebroom, which it will re-work, disrupting those communities, which are adjusting after past pit closures. It plans also to move into areas of current mining, so when Arkwright, Renishaw and Ireland in the Staveley area are shut, it moves in right next door to them—sometimes on top of them—and starts to rip up the surface of those areas. The one pit that would then be left—High Moor—has opencast plans directly next to it.

On the western side of the constituency, which shares some of west Derbyshire's characteristics, there is the threat of opencast mining on the Dronfield green belt—it will become the Dronfield black belt—which separates Derbyshire from Sheffield. The National Farmers Union and residents of the rural areas of Barlow and Wingeworth are concerned about developments there, especially given that little is provided now in the way of decent facilities. We should be spending money on housing improvements, health, welfare and the social fabric and infrastructure of the community. That is what the debate should have been about.

2.3 pm

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim (Amber Valley): Thirty or 40 years ago my constituency depended on coal, which was its major industry and the greatest employer in the area. Since then 15 pits have gone, with a loss of about 14,000 jobs. I hope that Opposition Members will take this point in the way that it is intended. Most of those pits were closed by Labour Governments. I do not make that point in a cheap party political spirit, but merely to show that this Government do not have a monopoly of pit closures.

I still have a substantial number of miners in my constituency, who all have to travel considerable distances to the north Derbyshire coalfield or to the Nottingham coalfield to their jobs. Despite the steady loss of employment among miners in my constituency—it is still continuing—uneployment in the area, although still unacceptably high, is only at the national average.

The reason why the area has not been harder hit by unemployment as a result of the steady loss of jobs in the mining industry is that it has been extremely successful in attracting new industries. More important, it has been successful in encouraging people in the area to set up industries. One example is a company called Butterley Brick. One would not think that bricks are a growth area. Brick making is not a high-tech field or something that immediately jumps to mind when one thinks of growth industries. Butterley Brick was in substantial difficulties only a few years ago, and it was taken over by a multinational company called Hanson Trust.

I know that Hanson Trust has become synonymous to many people with asset-stripping and with milking companies dry, but the experience of Butterley Brick is that Hanson Trust came in, put the company on a sound financial footing and promoted the brighter members of the local management team. As a result, Butterley Brick is a highly successful company that is substantially increasing its output and its exports. Above all, it is increasing local jobs.

I have many other examples of local enterprise. We have Thornton's chocolate factory. This company, which has recently moved from Sheffield, produces an excellent range of products and has been increasing its work force. We also have a company called Alida which manufactures plastic bags. In the late 1970s it was in severe difficulties, but as a result of a management buy-out in the early 1980s it has been able to expand and win back the home market, and it has also increased its work force and offers good and well paid jobs. That buy-out was allowed under new legislation introduced by the Government. I could quote many more examples, but for obvious reasons I shall not do that.

We must ask ourselves why these companies have prospered. Why have they maintained, and in many instances created, jobs in an area that has suffered greatly from loss of jobs in the mining industry? They have succeeded primarily because they have had good managements and skilled work forces intent on producing goods that people want to buy. Producing such goods is the best guarantor of jobs.

I am happy to admit that the regional aid that the area received in the 1970s was a major factor in the restructuring of the area. It has not received such aid for some time. I pay tribute to the district council. For most of its life it was under Labour control, although I am glad to say that recently the Conservatives have taken control for the first time. Despite the fact that the district council was Labour for much of its life, it took a constructive and positive attitude towards local industry. That also helped.

Perhaps above all, the reason for the success of industry in this coalfield area is that the work ethic is strong and the area has a good body of skilled workers with a non-militant tradition. In short, it is a good area in which to do business and in which business men like to set up. In such an area people can prosper, and that leads to jobs. If hon. Members were to question the management of successful companies in my area about why they have prospered and been able to replace the jobs that were lost in the mining industry, they would find that most business men would point to Government policies. Some would say that low inflation has helped, while others would point to the economic stability and the steady growth that we have had in the last few years. The Government's general policies of encouraging enterprise have enormously helped those companies.

In common with many other coalfield areas, my area has not been helped by the sky-high rates that have depressed businesses. If the Opposition want to see more jobs in their areas, they should tell their district, county and metropolitan councils to look to the high burden of rates that depress industry and which make it harder for industry to invest and create jobs. Derbyshire has not been helped by the fact that the county council has refused a Government offer of an enterprise zone. At the expense of local people, that takes political antagonism to ridiculous levels.

Another thing that many people in the coalfield areas unfortunately find themselves manifesting is a fundamentally anti-business, anti-profit and anti-enterprise culture. Perhaps that is understandable in the light of the history of exploitation of business in the early days of the mining industry. However, whether it is understandable or not, it is totally out of date in the 1980s, and it is totally counter-productive. If those areas want to attract business and encourage their own people to set up industries and create jobs, they have to get away from those anti-business attitudes, which unfortunately are still too common.

[Mr. Phillip Oppenheim]

What definitely will not help the coalfield areas is to try to continue uneconomic mining. Mines were originally dug to supply economic needs. Those needs and the world have changed. Cheaper coal is available. There is nothing new about that. Mining areas have been restructuring since the turn of the century. Harold Wilson wrote in 1945 in "New Deal for Coal":

> "Taking the country as a whole, probably half the pits are kept in existence by the other half . . . in fact, by the end of 1944, economic laws had ceased to apply in the industry."

In 1945 there were 750,000 men in the mining industry. We now have 150,000. The world has changed, and Labour Governments recognised that, because it was during periods of Labour Governments that the bulk of those jobs were lost.

There is no point harking back to the past. The world has changed, and it will not help the coalfield areas to suggest that we can dig coal whatever the price. In those areas we have to rely on a medium-output, low-price, competitive, productive and profitable coal industry. That is the best guarantee for those remaining within the industry. To go to a high-output, high-price coal industry would just load costs on to other industries, especially energy-intensive industries.

It is no coincidence that many of the most energy-intensive industries are based in the coalfield areas—industries such as brickmaking, pottery and dyeing. When I visited a major dye works in my constituency, one of the main points that a shop steward made was that there was no future for his industry if there were high energy prices, as they would make the industry uncompetitive against foreign competition. By trying to encourage the Government to ensure jobs within the mining industry regardless of the cost of the coal that is dug out, what some Labour hon. Members are saying is that they are prepared to guarantee jobs in the mining industry at the expense of higher energy costs and the loss of jobs in other industries. That is no way to run the economy or the country.

Some Labour Members are out of touch with what many miners think. I can only speak for the miners in my constituency to whom I have talked, but I have found that consistently they want either a productive, competitive, high-paying coal industry that will pay the wages that they deserve for the work they do, or redundancy on fair terms. Some Labour Members sneer at the word "redundancy". Anybody who has been down a mine, even for a day or two, will know that it is still a dirty, difficult and unhealthy job. Anybody who has seen men working day in and day out in seams only 2 or 3 ft high, often during unsocial hours, will know that mining is still not a pleasant job, despite the fact that it has improved.

Mr. Meale: Will the hon. Member give way?

Mr. Oppenheim: I shall not give way, because time is pressing on. One miner in my constituency who received a redundancy payment—incidentally, he immediately got a job in another industry—now has more money than he had ever hoped to see. He even has enough money to invest, and for the first time in his life he has been able to take a holiday abroad with his family. He even took his mother.

Mr. Illsley rose—

Mr. Oppenheim: The mining industry is enjoying the best conditions that it has ever had. That must be contrasted with the bleak 1960s, when most of the mining jobs in my constituency were lost. That was the period when miners were sent on their way—often compulsorily, not voluntarily—with a pittance in the form of redundancy pay. Furthermore, many of them lost their concessionary coal into the bargain. It is all very well for Labour Members, who have comfortable jobs and lounge on pleasant green leather seats. They are relatively well paid. It is easy for them to suggest that we send men down dark, dirty holes in the ground to dig out coal at uneconomic prices. I hope that Labour Members will realise that many men do not want to work in the mines any more and that it is pointless to send them down below ground if they cannot do the job economically.

Of course there are problems in the coal area. The way in which we can help mining areas most effectively is by ensuring that we have a strong, healthy, competitive and productive coal industry that is able to pay wages that miners deserve for the hard work that they undertake. If we are to replace the jobs that have been lost, and those that may be lost, we must attract new businesses to the coalfield areas and others to spring up within them. That does not mean pouring Government money blindly into mining areas. Instead, the structure and foundation of these areas need to be changed.

If we are to effect the change that is needed, we must follow through our education and training reforms. For far too long we have seemed to pursue the unobtainable Holy Grail of equality rather than excellence. We are seeing the baleful results of that, with some companies finding it difficult to employ the right calibre of management to run our industries. We must follow through also our rate reform proposals, which will transfer £1 billion from businesses in the south to businesses in the north. We must pursue our policy of growth and stability. Above all, we must see an end to the anti-business sentiment that is so prevalent in many of the coalfield areas. Labour Members cannot sneer at success, pillory profit, attack enterprise and blast business men, only to complain about a lack of jobs in their areas.

The survival of the coalfield areas does not lie in my hands. It is not in the Government's hands, except that many of the reforms that the Government have carried out and are now proposing will help mining areas. At the end of the day, success in restructuring coalfield areas depends on a change of attitudes within these areas. Therefore, the salvation of the areas is in their own hands.

2.18 pm

Mr. Geoffrey Lofthouse (Pontefract and Castleford): I shall be brief because I have only two or three minutes at my disposal. It has been a wide-ranging debate, and in one respect that is regrettable. I fear that we have not placed our fingers on the real problems behind the motion.

In the few minutes available to me I can do no better than highlight the problems in my constituency. Since 1981, about 11,000 mining jobs have been lost in the Castleford travel-to-work area. There has been little job replacement. There is 16 per cent. unemployment within the travel-to-work area, but that is not the level in mining communities and mining black spots within the area.

Seven pits have been closed in Castleford since the miners' strike, and it is estimated that the unemployment rate is about 30 per cent. It is understood that 42 per cent. of the unemployed are under 24. Political arguments and personalities, such as Arthur Scargill, do not matter. We must concentrate instead on what we can do to assist mining communities that have been virtually wiped out. I regret that I do not have much time to suggest the approach that should be adopted.

With the exception of the hon. Member for Rochford (Dr. Clark), I am the only Member present who spent 15 months of hard work and research as a member of the Select Committee on Energy. Hon. Members on both sides of the Committee attempted to present an honest report and I believe that, to a great extent, we were united. From paragraph 31 to paragraph 144 the Committee addressed itself to the social consequences arising out of the rapid pit closure programme and made certain recommendations. —[Interruption.] The Government's response to that report is apparent because they took very little notice of it. In fact, Conservative Members are now taking much more interest in the suit of the hon. Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) than they are in my contribution.

Even though the Government's response to the Select Committee report was negative—that is not uncommon —I hope that they will rethink and look at areas such as my own, which do not have intermediate status and do not attract any grants from the Government or the EEC. The enterprise trust, which I have never knocked, has had some honest endeavour put into it. However, it has been able to create only four jobs in my constituency. The Government must address themselves to what they are going to do to assist mining communities such as mine. Whatever the economic argument — we shall differ on that—the problems have been created by the pit closure programme and there has been very little thought about alternative employment. The Select Committee recognises that and I hope that the Government will recognise it, too.

2.21 pm

Mr. Barron: I am grateful for the opportunity to mention some of the speeches that have been made. I thank Conservative Members for turning out to listen, if not to the debate, at least to the Minister's speech. It is a pity that the enthusiasm that has been shown at the end of this debate is not shown by the Government Departments that should be providing aid for the coalfield communities to help them overcome the problem of unemployment, especially the unemployment of young people, and the problems of poverty that have been mentioned in many speeches.

I add my warm congratulations to my hon. Friend the Member for Hemsworth (Mr. Buckley) on his maiden speech. He showed great knowledge of his constituency and I am sure that he will contribute to debates such as this for many years in the great Socialist tradition of south and west Yorkshire.

I thank the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) for his contribution and for his comments on the rundown of the coalfields in the north-east over the years and the need for other industries there.

My hon. Friend the Member for Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney (Mr. Rowlands) gave a good description of the scars on the community when coal mining, especially opencast mining, takes place. He also gave a good description of the replacement industries which try to help overcome the unemployment problems when coal mines are run down. He mentioned the way in which during a recession such as we have experienced under this Government, those replacement industries also disappear, which compounds the unemployment in the Welsh valleys.

My hon. Friend the Member for Blyth Valley (Mr. Campbell) gave a vivid description of what happens to a constituency when coal mining, which has been a major industry for many years, ceases, especially in the way that it did in his area. I am sure that all hon. Members recall that the independent review body said that, because of the social consequences, Bates's colliery should stay open for at least some time. The Coal Board ignored the details of the independent review body's proposals. Against that body's wishes and those of the local community and local authority, the Bates's colliery was closed. That only added to the massive unemployment problem in the constituency.

My hon. Friend the Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) highlighted the plight of those who live in Coal Board houses or ex-Coal Board houses, who have what can only be termed long-distance landlords, and the problems that they face in trying to find out who their landlords are and in getting problems solved in defective homes. They find it increasingly difficult to do so.

My hon. Friend the Member for Midlothian (Mr. Eadie) demonstrated his great knowledge and experience in the coal industry and of the Coalfield Communities Campaign and what it, as an all-party organisation, has done over the past two years to concentrate the minds not only of local government but of central Government on the plight of coalfield communities.

My hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) spoke with great knowledge about the closures that have occurred in his area which backs on to my constituency. He mentioned the scale of job losses in his constituency and said that the non-replacement of jobs in other parts of the region have created tremendous problems.

Mr. Andrew Mitchell (Gedling) rose—

Mr. Barron: I shall not give way. I am speaking now.

The right hon. Member for Selby (Mr. Alison) comes from the same coalfield as I do. He has a new-found interest in matters such as coal mines. I cannot remember the right hon. Gentleman making a speech in any coal debate over the past two years. Most coal debates have been instigated by the Opposition. I cannot recall any mining debate being instigated by Conservative Members. The right hon. Gentleman talked about the cost of the 1984 coal strike, and so on. For some strange reason, he did not wish to comment on the statistics that I mentioned about the lowering of regional aid. During the last year of the Labour Government, aid for Yorkshire and Humberside—the area which the right hon. Gentleman and I represent—amounted to £58 million. In 1986-87, under this Government, direct grant to that region has been cut to £21 million, although we have seen a rundown in coal and steel.

It is no good the right hon. Gentleman or the Minister saying that investment in new coal mines means a great future for coalfields and for coal mining. Even with new investment, the coalfields have poverty and unemployment at levels that have not been known in my lifetime. I do not know how many times we have to say that. The motion is about the effects of Government policies on the coal community. It has nothing to do with the coal industry.

Mr. McLoughlin rose in his place and claimed to move, That the Question be now put.

2.50 pm

Mr. Meale: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. During a long day discussing the coalfield communities, no one from the Opposition Benches who represents a Nottinghamshire coalfield seat was called. It was important that an Opposition Member with such a seat should be called because today is the day when the Housing Corporation's bid to British Coal to buy 2,000 homes in the Nottinghamshire coalfield finishes. Will the Minister instruct British Coal to sell those homes to the Housing Corporation, which will give—[Interruption.]

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it on the same point?

Several Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I shall deal with the point of order by the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) first.

I am sorry for the hon. Gentleman and other hon. Members on both sides of the House who were not called in the debate. The Chair made no fewer than four appeals for brevity. At the moment, there is no power to impose a time limit, so all that we can do is to appeal. I am sorry that some hon. Members on both sides of the House were disappointed as a result of some long speeches.

Mr. Barron: Further to the point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I seek your guidance. Is it in order that, when a private Member's motion is debated, which seeks to make the Government give assistance to the coalfield communities that are suffering from unemployment, poverty and so on, the Government should bring in the payroll vote, 80 per cent. of whom have not heard one word of the debate? Is it not a disgrace that private Members' motions can be taken over in that way and that Ministers can stand reading press releases from the Dispatch Box about something unconnected with the motion that was tabled?

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman knows that that is not a matter for the Chair.

Mr. Greg Knight (Derby, North): Further to the point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is it in order for Members of the House to accept the sponsorship of a trade union — the NUM — and then fail to turn up for today's proceedings? Is that not a case of obtaining money by false pretences?

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am getting the distinct impression that attempts are being made to carry on the debate, which has finished. I shall take points of order, but they must be genuine.

Mr. Andrew MacKay (Berkshire, East): Further to the point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I seek your guidance and advice. We have had a very important debate today on the coal mining industry. [HON. MEMBERS: "How do you know?"] There have been some notable absentees, including the Opposition Chief Whip and most of the other Opposition Whips. You will be aware, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that next Thursday there is a motion relating to financial assistance to Opposition parties. Yet again we have seen the Opposition in total disarray. A motion was tabled by the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron), which was voted on by only two Opposition Members — the hon. Members for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) and for Mansfield (Mr. Meale). Forty-six members of the Labour party represent coal mining constituencies—[HON. MEMBERS: "Where are they?"]— but only two actually voted. There was total disarray and an own goal was scored. I suggest that the motion to be debated next week should be withdrawn. The Opposition Whips have earned their money by false pretences.

Several Hon. Members: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Let me deal with one point of order at a time. The hon. Member for Berkshire, East (Mr. MacKay) seems to be anticipating the speech that he hopes to make on Thursday.

Mr. Beith: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Was it entirely in order for hon. Members, both Conservative and Labour, to secure a vote on a motion which was before the House? That having been done, however unwelcome it might have been to the mover of the motion, might it not have been better for him to have had either the courage of his convictions or the competence to prevent his lack of courage from being exposed, rather than leaving it to my right hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Dr. Owen) and myself to provide half the votes in the Opposition Lobby.

Several Hon. Members rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I can see that the House is enjoying these exchanges, but the debate and the vote are over and done with and we must now get on with the rest of the business before the House.

Mr. Ashby: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I seek your guidance because we have heard that only 20 out of 46 Labour Members representing mining constituencies were present for this very important debate. We have heard about the small number of votes.

Hansard will report some very important contributions from the Government Benches. I am sure that you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, will be anxious for hon. Members who were not present to have sight this weekend of what was said so that they can address themselves to their constituents, explain why they were not present and deal with the important matters which were raised. Can you arrange for the production of Hansard to be expedited so that hon. Members can do that?

Several Hon. Members rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am very relieved to say that the presence or absence of hon. Members at debates or in Divisions has nothing to do with the Chair. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman was not criticising Hansard and that the Official Report will be produced as quickly and efficiently as it usually is.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett (Pembroke): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Could you inquire into the distribution of Order Papers? It is clear that today's Order Paper was not distributed to Welsh Labour Members because they are noticeable by their absence. As the only Welsh Member of Parliament here, I suggest an inquiry so that hon. Members may be made aware of the subject for debate.

Since the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) and the right hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Dr. Owen) voted in favour of the motion tabled by the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron), perhaps notification of that could be sent to the NUM so that it can decide whether it would like to sponsor them.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We have had a good run. I remind the House that we have other business to transact and that an hon. Member is waiting for his valuable Adjournment debate.

Mr. Bermingham: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I shall be extremely brief. This has been an interesting day when we have witnessed kiss and make up in one part of the political scene, and we expect that there might be another split among the Social Democrats.

This is a serious matter affecting Private Members' business. When it came to the vote I found it interesting. Was it not convenient that, on the first vote there happened to be four Tellers waiting on the Government Benches, two of whom you refused—the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) and one other? When we came to the second vote, once again there happened conveniently to be four Tellers waiting. After the vote, suddenly hon. Members happened to be making points of order. One in particular, who was not here for the debate—the hon. Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight)—intervened on an almost asinine point. Does not that suggest, as my hon. Friend the Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) said a few moments ago, that there has been something of a put-up charade by the Conservative Members this afternoon? [Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. All I need say in answer to the hon. Gentleman is that I am aware of nothing out of order that has taken place.

EUROPEAN LEGISLATION

Ordered,

That Mr. Allan Rogers and Mr. Roland Boyes be discharged from the Select Committee on European Legislation, and Mr. Jimmy Wray and Mr. Jimmy Hood be added to the Committee.—[Mr. David Hunt.]

CONSOLIDATION, &c., BILLS (JOINT COMMITTEE)

Ordered,

That Mr. Peter L. Pike and Mr. Robert Litherland be discharged from the Joint Committee on Consolidation, &c, Bills and Mr. Frank Cook and Mr. Graham Allen be appointed to the Committee.—[Mr. David Hunt.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That, at the sitting on Thursday 26th November, the Motion in the name of Mr. John Wakeham relating to Financial Assistance for Opposition Parties may be proceeded with, though opposed, for one and a half hours after it has been entered upon; and if proceedings thereon have not been previously disposed of, Mr. Speaker shall then put the Question on any Amendment which may have been moved, and shall then put forthwith the Question on any other Amendments selected by him which may then be moved, and on the Main Question or the Main Question, as amended. —[Mr. David Hunt.]

Motion made, and Question put,

That, at the sitting on Tuesday 24th November, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1)(b) of Standing Order No. 14 (Exempted business), Mr. Speaker shall at Ten o'clock put any Questions necessary to dispose of the Motion in the name of the Prime Minister relating to Common Agricultural Policy reform and Agricultural Stabilisers, and on any Amendments thereto which have been selected by him and which may then be moved. —[Mr. David Hunt.]

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Objection taken.

Film Distribution and Exhibition

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Peter Lloyd.]

3.1 pm

Mr. Roger Gale (Thanet, North): I am grateful for the opportunity of raising briefly a matter that is of considerable local concern and national interest. This debate stems from the closure of the only picture house in Herne Bay in my constituency — the former Odeon cinema, which later became the Cannon cinema when that company took over the Odeon chain. The Cannon company has hit some financial difficulties and found it necessary to realise its assets. It is an undoubted fact that in recent years attendances at the cinema in Herne Bay have been falling. That is partly due to the lack of reinvestment in modern facilites of the kind that most modern cinemagoers want to enjoy as part of an evening out. The development value of the site in Herne Bay is probably about a quarter of a million pounds, and the annual profits from showing films were — I hazard a guess — no more than £10,000 a year, which is not good return on such an investment.

I do not quarrel with Cannon Cinemas' right to exercise its commercial judgment and close a cinema if it believes that it cannot make the cinema pay. However, it is a pity that the company has had so little regard for audiences —especially young audiences—in Herne Bay.

Just along the coast from Herne Bay is the small seaside town of Westgate-on-Sea, which has the Carlton cinema. It is an independent cinema run by a young entrepreneur who this year has won the independent cinema of the year award. He has made that cinema pay and he satisfies his audiences, as a result of his and his partner's hard work, and of a considerable investment of his own time and money in providing facilities that he believes his audiences want. Clearly he is right, because the audiences go to see the films that he is allowed to show. Having been to the trades disputes council of the Cinema Exhibitors Association he has won for himself the inalienable right to show one in three new films simultaneously with those being shown in Margate—he still cannot show anything before Margate — and he has to show the other two films after Margate.

That practice dates back to the historical alignment of the major movie-making companies with the two major cinema chains — the old ABC and Rank cinemas. As a result of that alignment, the exhibition agreements of most films — and certainly all popular films — contain what is known as a borrowing clause. The clause gives large town exhibitors the right to show a film for up to four weeks before it can be shown in an adjacent small town. That militates heavily against the independent operator, such as my friend in Westgate-on-Sea.

It is relevant to Herne Bay and other towns like it because there is an audience in Herne Bay that wants to go to the cinema and would be prepared to pay for seats so to do, and people such as my friend would be more than willing to run an independent cinema if they could get the films. Because of the barring clause, they cannot do that. As I have said I respect the commercial judgment of Cannon Cinemas. However, if Cannon has the right to close a cinema, then no one should have the right to prevent another operator from coming in and showing the latest films.

Many of the kids of my constituents go to school in Canterbury, where Cannon has a single-screen cinema in which it shows the latest films. Those young people meet their friends in class and, of course, they discuss the latest films. It is not surprising that my young constituents want to be able to compare like with like and to discuss the same films with their friends. For them to be able to do that, they now have to travel to Canterbury and on top of the £2 cinema seat they have to pay £2 for a return bus ticket from Herne Bay to Canterbury. This sort of thing takes place in small towns all over Britain: young people are effectively having the cost of their cinema tickets doubled. Many people say that most films are on video anyway, but as I have said in the past people cannot kiss and cuddle in the back row of a video. There is a social element to cinemagoing that not only the young enjoy.

At present, the single screen in Canterbury blocks one film from a potential exhibitor in Herne Bay. However, Cannon has said that it intends to put four screens into its cinema in Canterbury. The extrapolation of that is that Cannon will be able to block not one but four films.

Cannon and Rank have not thought this through. Where do we go next? Next we will have American multi-cinemas, Maybox and National Amusements installing what are called multiplex screens — 10 screens in one cinema. The buying power of these companies is colossal. At the moment their percentage of exhibition in the United Kingdom is small, but in America it is huge and the big film companies owe them tremendous allegiance. Therefore, those companies will call the tune.

It will not be long before Messrs Ranks and Messrs Cannon, with their four-screen cinemas, find themselves hollering the same cry that the independents are hollering now, and screaming foul. That is because the 10-screen cinemas will be showing films before the four-screen cinemas and Cannon and Rank will find themselves at this huge disadvantage. It will not be long before the good citizens of Canterbury, who are used to having everything first, will find that when AMC or Maybox choose to open 10 screens in Maidstone they will suddenly have to travel from Canterbury to Maidstone to see the films first.

What can we do about this? In fairness to the Cannon management, it telephoned my office and said it did not believe that there was a way forward without the publication of an Office of Fair Trading report. The Monopolies and Mergers Commission has made certain recommendations and they have been published. On the strength of those recommendations, the Office of Fair Trading has made certain other proposals in the form of a report that is lying with the Department of Trade and Industry. My message to my hon. Friend and to the House is quite simple. Please can that report now see the light of day before it is too late and before too many more cinemas close?

3.8 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (Mr. John Butcher): I thank my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) and congratulate him on the timelessness of the debate. He has defended with vigour the interests of his constituents and has raised a major policy issue which I shall address.

I can well understand that the closure of Cannon's cinema in Herne Bay in my hon. Friend's constituency is a sensitive matter as it may affect the leisure opportunities for all sections of the community. Many, though not all, will be able to go by car or use the public transport links to travel the eight miles or so to view the films that they want to see either at Cannon's twin-screen cinema in neighbouring Canterbury, at the independently run cinema in Margate or at that other excellently run independent cinema—the Carlton at Westgate-on-sea.

Indeed, I add my congratulations to those that my hon. Friend has offered to Mr. Vickers and all his staff at Westgate. To win the industry's "Cinema of the Year" award, as they have done this year for their successful marketing of their films and general high standards, is an achievement to be proud of. Their success will, I hope, attract even more people to attend the Carlton and thus encourage distributors to allow Mr. Vickers earlier access to prints of the films that he wishes to show there.

But primarily the closure—and opening—of cinemas must be a matter for the industry's commercial judgment. I understand that there is interest in reopening the Herne Bay cinema as an independent operation. I wish those discussions good fortune. Other small independent operations at attractive seaside resorts like Herne Bay have proved viable in recent years—I think particularly of Aldeburgh and Cromer—but it is important to identify and exploit the right market niche.

We are at the beginning of an era of considerable change in cinema going patterns. The last couple of years have seen a most welcome increase in the number of people attending cinemas. Making cinemas more attractive places for the public to go is—as the Carlton at Westgate has clearly demonstrated—one of the important steps in maintaining and further promoting the increase in the number of cinema admissions. However, the trend needs to gather considerably more strength before the industry can return to the halcyon days of 200 million-plus admissions a year. Such levels would mean profits for film makers, distributors and exhibitors, and hence more films.

I hope particularly to see more films that families can enjoy together. Although the number of films available for family viewing has changed little in recent years as a percentage of films released, I hope to see more frequent use of the practice of booking family films for matinees with different films run in the evening. I believe that that would increase cinema admissions to the benefit of the distributors, exhibitors and the public alike.

A second major trend that I perceive is people's willingness to travel to obtain the leisure facilities that they wish to enjoy, whether to the amusement park in Margate, which those of the generation of my hon. Friend and myself still know as "Dreamland", to concerts or the theatre in Margate or Canterbury or, increasingly, to a cinema.

I note that the new multiscreen cinemas are beginning to open throughout the United Kingdom. I welcome that trend, because it increases competition in a restricted market. Those cinemas lay considerable emphasis on good parking facilities for their patrons—a trend which my hon. Friend identified as one that affects competition. Their size inevitably requires them to draw audiences from a larger geographical area than has previously been the practice. As has long been the case in the United States, people are proving ready to travel greater distances than was traditional in the past. I know, for example, that many cinemagoers routinely drive 25 miles or more each way to see films at the attractive multiplex cinema in Milton Keynes.

While I accept that there is some loss of convenience to local residents with the closure of the cinema in Herne Bay, and even if the re-opening of the cinema there ultimately proves commercially non-viable, the continuing existence of attractive cinemas nearby in Margate, Westgate and Canterbury, all easily accessible by car or public transport, still allows Herne Bay residents to see the films they want to see.

The debate also provides me with a timely opportunity to describe our progress in considering the follow-up to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of films, which was completed by the commission in 1983. I recognise the concerns which have been expressed by my hon. Friend, arising from the long period for which a definitive Government statement on follow-up to that report has been awaited. I hope that my account of the report's findings and recommendations, and of our subsequent consideration of those conclusions will help to reassure my hon. Friend and those in the film industry, who have a quite understandable interest in the outcome, that the length of time that we and the Director General of Fair Trading have taken to reach the decision has been determined by our concern to reach a solution that more effectively ensures a competitive environment in the distribution and exhibition sectors of the film industry in the foreseeable future.

The MMC's report on the supply of films resulted from a monopoly reference made by the Director General of Fair Trading in December 1980. The MMC found that a complex monopoly situation existed between the major exhibitors, Thorn EMI—now Cannon—and Rank, and the two major distributors, Columbia-EMI-Warner and United International Pictures, which adopted the practice of barring. Barring is a system of exclusivity whereby the order in which cinemas get access to films is predetermined.

The commission took the view that this system of deciding exclusivity produced results that were determined largely by EMI and Rank, and did not achieve sufficient competition during the full period in which films were released. Taking into account factors such as the restriction of competition caused by the alignments, on which the places of EMI and Rank in the system of barring partly depend, the commission concluded that the present system of barring operated against the public interest. It felt that other arrangements should be made to determine exclusivity.

The commission made two recommendations designed to increase competition in the distribution of films to exhibitors. The first was that the current system of barring should be ended, and that distributors and exhibitors should in future conduct their business in such a way that provisions for exclusivity could be negotiated for each film hire agreement on a case-by-case basis.

The commission's second recommendation was designed to improve access of exhibitors, other than EMI and Rank, to popular films. It specified that a cinema should be allowed to exhibit a popular film—that is, a film for which 60 or more prints are, or have become, available in Great Britain—for more than four weeks only if, at the end of that period, it had been made available on normal terms to all other cinemas in effective competition with that cinema.

The publication of the MMC's report in 1983 occurred in a period of very rapid downturn in cinema admissions and receipts. During the consultation period following publication of the report, it was agreed that a pilot scheme should be set up on the effects of the MMC's two main recommendations on barring and on delays in the release of popular films.

In January 1985 it was announced that the director general was being asked to proceed with arrangements for the experiment. After further discussions between officials and representatives of the distributors and exhibitors, my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry asked the Director General of Fair Trading to seek from all the exhibitors and distributors concerned the undertakings that were necessary to conduct the experimental scheme.

The scheme was approved in two cities, Glasgow and Manchester, with Liverpool and Birmingham as control areas. It included all cinemas within a 14-mile radius of each of the four city centres. Questionnaires were completed by exhibitors and distributors, both in relation to the control areas of Birmingham and Liverpool, and to Manchester and Glasgow, where the experiment was actually conducted. The trial scheme ran for 52 weeks from 31 May 1985 to 29 May 1986.

The Director General of Fair Trading submitted his report on the results and these were provided to the then Under-Secretary of State for Corporate and Consumer Affairs on 16 March this year.

The period of the experiment coincided with an unexpected general upturn in cinema audiences. The OFT therefore thought it necessary, near the end of the experiment, to ask certain additional questions of the participants and to analyse the replies for inclusion in its report. I hope that my hon. Friend will bear with me while I present ths somewhat lengthy explanation of the background. He has rightly voiced anxiety about the delay.

Since the end of the experiment, we, together with the OFT, have been considering what action should be taken in the light both of the results of the films experiment and of developments in the industry since the MMC's report published in 1983. We have considered carefully the whole gamut of possibilities ranging from taking no action, as there are some signs that the industry has become a little more competitive over the past four years, through to the possibility of divestment, which a somewhat stronger economic climate in the industry might have justified. I stress that our objective remains the maximisation of competition within the film industry, consistent with maintaining healthy film distribution and exhibition sectors in the United Kingdom.

Consideration of these matters has been complex, but I and my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State propose to consult the industry shortly on the basis of the report of the Director General of Fair Trading on the experiment. I will, of course, ensure that copies of that report are then immediately placed in the Vote Office and the Library of the House.

It would be difficult to do justice to the experiment's results by attempting to summarise them in a few sentences. They have, however, contributed significantly to our understanding of competitive conditions in the industry. While they do not point conclusively in the direction of any particular course of action, they suggest that following the MMC's recommendations on barring and on the early release of popular films will pave the way for more competitive and flexible arrangements in the industry.

My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary and I are therefore minded, on the basis of the report's conclusions to make an order under the Fair Trading Act 1973. First, that might make unlawful any existing or future long-term arrangement between a distributor and a cinema operator to bar other local cinemas from showing the same film concurrently. Secondly, it might place a limit of four weeks on the length of time for which "first run" cinemas may exhibit a popular film, without making it available to competitors.

As I said earlier, we propose, before the end of this month, to begin a short and intensive period of consultation lasting until the end of January 1988 to seek the views of all those with an interest. As a result of the representations we receive, my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary and I will then finalise our views on the action that we intend to take.

I hope that what I have said will demonstrate the Government's concern to secure a more competitive environment in the film distribution and exhibition sectors. I hope too, that it will assist independent cinemas to compete more effectively with the major chains of exhibitors. I and my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary will look forward to hearing my hon. Friend's views and those of other hon. Members on the action that we are minded to take on the basis of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report.

I hope that in the light of what I have said, my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North will feel that he has elicited a statement which will be of some significance to the industry and, in particular, to that vigorous entrepreneur whose interests he has defended so well.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twenty-two minutes past Three o'clock.

Written Answers to Questions

PRIME MINISTER

United Democratic Front

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Prime Minister if she will publish in the Official Report the text of the letter from the United Democratic Front of South Africa announcing its intention to suspend relations with the British Government; and if she will also publish the reply.

The Prime Minister: To date, I have not received such a letter.

Mr. Frank Larsen

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Prime Minister what documents containing classified information concerning national security were found at the home of Mr. Frank Larsen; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement made by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General on Friday 23 October, at column 1095.

Ministers (Accommodation)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister which Ministers have accommodation provided for them out of public funds; and what has been the total cost in each year since 1979.

The Prime Minister: This information is not held centrally. On the costs of my own office, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies I gave him on 23 February 1987 at columns 53 and 54, and on 22 October at column 846.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

GCE and CSE (Easington)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the number of GCE and CSE passes in the district of Easington for the years 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Dunn: Information for the areas within local education authorities is not available centrally. Results for Durham local education authority and for England are as follows:

	Maintained school leavers (Percentages) Academic year
	1984-85		1985-86
	Durham	England	Durham	England
1 or more graded[1] results at O level/CSE	86·3	89·8	90·3	89·6
1 or more higher[2] grades at O level/CSE	48·3	52·2	50·3	51·9
5 or more higher[2] grades at O level/CSE	20·1	23·7	18·9	23·5
1 or more A level passes	12·1	13·9	9·0	13·6

Notes:

[1] Graded results defined as O level grades A-E and CSE grades 1-5.

[2] Higher graded results defined as O level grades A-C and CSE grade 1.

Core Curriculum

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding the inclusion of economics as a foundation subject in the proposed core curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have received many responses from individuals and organisations regarding time left by the national curriculum for additional subjects, and for topics and themes which are an important part of children's education at school. Organisations which have made such representations on economics and economic awareness include the Economics Association and the Economics Awareness Teacher Training Programme. Copies of those responses have been placed in the Library along with all other responses from organisations to our consultation document.

Schools (Opting-out Provisions)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has had any representations from school governors regarding the length of time proposed for objections by parents to opt-out proposals.

Mr. Dunn: I am not aware of any representations on this issue from school governors.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, when a particular school chooses to ballot all parents on the opt-out proposals, he will make additional funds available to cover the cost of the ballot; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: Yes. My right hon. Friend will be prepared to assist governing bodies with the cost of such ballots.

St. Andrews University

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total value of grants paid by the University Grants Committee to St. Andrews university for each of the last five years.

Mr. Jackson: Total recurrent and capital grants paid to St. Andrew's university on the advice of the University Grants Committee were as follows:

Academic Years	£000s Cash
1982-83	13,000
1983-84	12,931
1984-85	13,132
1985-86	14,372
1986-87	14,538

School Leavers (Qualifications)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what qualifications for school leavers are recognised by his Department other than O-levels; what proportion of pupils leaving school qualify in these examinations; what are the proportions for O-level; and if he will publish the most recent statistics for school leavers with a breakdown of the qualifications they gain.

Mr. Dunn: It is open to schools to offer courses leading to whichever qualifications they regard as appropriate. The main nationally recognised qualifications obtained by school leavers at 16 plus are GCE O level and CSE, which will be replaced by the general certificate of secondary education from summer 1988.

The proportions of school leavers in 1985-86 achieving graded results in the O-level/CSE examinations is just over 90 per cent. Further information on these qualifications is published in "Statistics of Education, Volume 2 (School Leavers CSE and GCE)", copies of which are in the Library.

Information from the youth cohort study indicates that approximately 15 per cent. of maintained school pupils in their last compulsory school year attempt examinations other than those offered by the CSE and GCE examination boards, mainly those offered by BTEC, RSA and CGLI.

Departmental Press Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science to what factors he attributes the increase between 1985-86 and 1986-87 in his Department's expenditure on press advertising.

Mrs. Rumbold: The increase in advertising spending between 1985-86 and 1986-87 was the result of two main factors: (1) setting out the facts about the Government's proposals on teachers' pay and conditions; and (2) attracting new recruits to teaching, particularly in the shortage subjects of maths, physics, CDT—craft design and technology—and business studies.

Rock Ferry School, Birkenhead

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to intervene in the dispute over admission to Rock Ferry school, Birkenhead; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: No. My right hon. Friend is satisfied that the Wirral LEA did not act unreasonably in its allocation of children to this school in September 1987.

Schools Outreach Project

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received in support of his Department funding the Schools Outreach project; and when he expects to decide on the Schools Outreach application for funding for the period 1988 to 1991.

Mr. Dunn: Twenty-three letters of support have been received in the Department. A decision on the proposals will be made as soon as possible.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to obtain a copy of the European Commission report on teachers' pay; and when he expects it to be published.

Mrs. Rumbold: The European Commission has not yet made the report available to member countries. I understand that it has yet to be translated from Dutch into the other Community languages.

Teachers' Negotiating Rights

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to respond to inquiries made by the International Labour Organisation on the matter of the unilateral withdrawal of teachers' negotiating rights in England and Wales.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government's response was sent to the ILO on 23 October. A supplementary response was sent on 29 October covering a copy of the Green Paper "Teachers' Pay and Conditions: A Consultative Document".

Student Grants

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing the income per student received from the University Grants Council by each university in the United Kingdom and from the National Advisory Body for each polytechnic in England and Wales in 1987-88 and how he expects these figures to change in the light of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Autumn Statement of 3 November 1987.

Mr. Jackson: Student enrolments for the academic year 1987-88 are not yet known. The funding increases announced in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Autumn Statement amount to 8 per cent. between the financial years 1987-88 and for 1988-89 for recurrent funding of the universities and 9 per cent. for polytechnics and colleges under local authority control.

Universities (Funding)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the percentage change in the funding of each university by the University Grants Committee between 1980-81 and 1987-88, excluding those amounts representing compensation for changes in home student fees, for redundancy and early retirement, changes to take account of minor capital works from the recurrent grant, change in the level of local authority rates, additions made for the information technology and new blood programmes;

(2) what is the percentage change in real terms, measured by the gross domestic product deflator, in the funding of each university by the University Grants

Committee between 1980-81 and 1987-88, excluding those amounts representing compensation for changes in home student fees, compensation for redundancy and early retirement, changes to take account of minor capital works from the recurrent grant and changes in the level of local authority rates (a) including and (b) excluding additions made for the information technology and new blood programmes.

Mr. Jackson: I shall write to the hon. Member.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Developing Countries (Debt)

75. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to meet Oxfam, War on Want and other aid agencies to discuss the international debt crisis and its impact on developing countries.

Mr. Chris Patten: I plan to meet the directors of several agencies including Oxfam in the next two months. Debt issues may be discussed.

Overseas Aid

76. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the overseas development budget has been spent on assisting British companies under the aid-trade provision over the last three years.

Mr. Chris Patten: ATP expenditure on grants to developing countries as a proportion of total gross public expenditure on overseas aid was 3·9 per cent. in 1984, 3·2 per cent. in 1985, and 5·8 per cent. in 1986.

77. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the size of the United Kingdom's aid budget.

Mr. Chris Patten: The net aid programme is planned to be £1,305 million in 1988-89, £1,375 million in 1989-90 and £1,420 million in 1990-91. Any costs arising from the debt initiative by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor will be additional to these figures. The Government are therefore planning for an aid programme that is growing in real terms. This is recognition of the value of a substantial and effective aid programme both to Britain and to developing countries.

79. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is satisfied with the effectiveness of the British aid programme.

Mr. Chris Patten: I am satisfied that we have an effective aid programme. More than ever, with a growing aid programme, I shall endeavour to get the best value for money for every pound spent.

Bangladesh

78. Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance Her Majesty's Government have provided to Bangladesh to help alleviate the impact of the recent floods in that country.

Mr. Chris Patten: Last week I returned from Bangladesh where I saw at first hand the effects of the recent flooding. During my visit I announced further flood relief assistance from Her Majesty's Government bringing our total response to date to nearly £10 million. I also signed a commodity aid agreement for £20 million which will be available to meet flood rehabilitation requirements, as well as normal import requirements, in the public and private sectors.

Indonesia

80. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in implementing projects financed under the £140 million concessional loans arrangement with Indonesia.

Mr. Chris Patten: I discussed progess on the concessional loan arrangement with Indonesian Ministers during my recent visit. We agreed there was a need to press on with implementation as quickly as possible. To date I have approved six proposals worth £124 million, the most recent being one for £7 million to provide diesel generators. Contracts in respect of two of these six have been signed and are being implemented; the others are at or near the contract negotiation stage or, in the case of the diesel generators, about to go to tender. Other projects which would fully utilise the facility are being considered.

Famine

81. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent initiatives Her Majesty's Government have taken with respect to famine in Africa.

Mr. Chris Patten: So far this year we have committed about £15 million from the bilateral programme for relief purposes in Mozambique, including 30,000 tonnes of food aid. About £10 million has been similarly committed to Ethiopia, including 27,000 tonnes of food aid. We have provided over £1 million of relief assistance to Sudan, and have also assisted Somalia, Botswana, Malawi and Zimbabwe. In addition, some £5·5 million has been provided to help control locusts and other pests.

83. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how he will be responding to the worsening prospects of famine in Ethiopia.

Mr. Chris Patten: On 26 October I announced the provision of £2·35 million in emergency relief for Ethiopia. This comprises 10,000 tonnes of food aid at a cost of £1·85 million and £500,000 to help with food distribution. This is in addition to the £1 million of assistance for transport and for refugees which I announced on 5 October.

Voluntary Agencies

82. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further support he plans to provide to British voluntary agencies working in developing countries.

Mr. Chris Patten: I propose, subject to parliamentary approval, to increase our support to voluntary agencies under the joint funding scheme by 50 per cent. next year to £9 million, and our support for the agencies sending volunteers overseas by more than 18 per cent. to £10·6 million. In addition, we remain ready to provide substantial support through the voluntary agencies for emergency and disaster relief.

84. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the level of aid for voluntary agencies through the joint funding scheme for the forthcoming year; and how it compares with present levels.

Mr. Chris Patten: I propose, subject to parliamentary approval, to increase next year's joint funding scheme budget to £9 million. That is an increase of 50 per cent. on this year's original allocation, which I have since increased by £0·5 million in recognition of the importance of the work of British voluntary agencies in developing countries.

Guatemala

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will suspend aid to Guatemala, in view of that Government's record on human rights.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Guatemalan Government have taken a number of steps to demonstrate their commitment to improve the human rights situation and this improvement has been recognised by the United Nations Human Rights Commission in 1986, and in March 1987. It would not, therefore, be appropriate to cancel our small aid programme.

Nicaragua

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to oppose European Community aid to the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua.

Mr. Chris Patten: A co-operation agreement between the European Community and the five Central American countries — together with Panama — signed in 1985 contains an undertaking to provide increased aid to Central America. An agreed objective is to encourage regional co-operation and the Community confirmed its intention to grant priority assistance for regional projects. The co-operation agreement is a practical demonstration of the Community's support for a peaceful solution to Central America's problems. The EC also provides food aid for humanitarian purposes.

ENVIRONMENT

Rating Reform

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to revise the rateable value limits for the purpose of enfranchisement under the Leasehold Reform Act 1967 (a) on the merits and (b) in the light of the proposed community charge.

Mr. Howard: I have no plans at this stage to extend the scope of leasehold enfranchisement for houses, but I propose to issue shortly a consultation paper on the implications for the Leasehold Reform Act 1967 and other landlord and tenant legislation of the proposed abolition of domestic rates.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give an estimate of the effect of a poll tax compared with domestic rates on the proportion of net income in households with incomes of (a) £50 to £150 per week and (b) £50 to £200 per week; and if he will give the proportion such households are of the total.

Mr. Howard: Based on data from the family expenditure survey in 1985-86 prices, households with a net income of between £50 and £150 per week in England would pay 3·9 per cent. of that income in rates. With the full community charge, this would fall to 3·6 per cent. With net incomes of between £50 and £200, the corresponding figures are 3·7 per cent. and 3·5 per cent. Fourty-three per cent. and 61 per cent. respectively of households fall within these income bands.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will limit the starting age for payment of poll tax to the same age as for entitlement to legal minimum rates of pay.

Mr. Howard: No.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what form of requirement will be placed upon landlords collecting inclusive rent and rates to disaggregate the rent element following the introduction of poll tax.

Mr. Howard: When the community charge is fully in place, domestic rates will have disappeared. The concept of "inclusive rent and rates" will, therefore, no longer apply.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing how his estimates for poll tax for each local authority are influenced by his proposals for a unified business rate, giving figures for poll tax with existing pattern of non-domestic rates and poll tax with a unified business rate.

Mr. Howard: It is a central feature of the new system that authorities spending at the level of their assessed need will be able to levy a common level of community charge, taking account of their income from grant and from the national non-domestic rate. If the uniform non-domestic rate poundage were not to apply — and it too is an essential part of the system — it would be necessary to adjust grant payments in order to preserve the position that variations in authorities' spending above or below the standard community charge were met entirely by residents.

Housing

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a full list of all those instances to date, under the terms of the Housing and Planning Act 1986, where a local authority has transferred management powers to a housing co-operative, housing association, or private landlord; and if he will indicate also all those instances where under the terms of the Act local authority tenants have organised themselves into a co-operative and requested recognition.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are 30 instances of a local authority transferring management powers to housing co-operatives within the terms of earlier legislation. Since the relevant section of the Housing and Planning Act 1986 came into force on 7 January 1987, nine applications have been made by local authorities seeking approval for the transfer of management powers to a housing co-operative, housing association or private landlord, of which two are for renewal of earlier approvals. All these applications are currently being considered under the terms of the 1986 Act and I expect the first approvals to be issued shortly.

The Act makes no provision for local authority tenants to request recognition as a co-operative.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list for the years 1979 and 1987 the number of housing association houses and flats, in villages in England with a population of 800 or below, with (a) one bedroom, (b) two bedrooms and (c) three or more bedrooms, and, of these, how many are (i) occupied, (ii) vacant prior to being let and (iii) vacant prior to being repaired or improved;

(2) if he will list for the years 1979 and 1987 the number of local authority houses and flats, in villages in England with a population of 800 or below, with (a) one bedroom, (b) two bedrooms and (c) three or more bedrooms and, of these, how many are (i) occupied, (ii) vacant prior to being let and (iii) vacant prior to being repaired or improved.

Mr. Waldegrave: Information is not collected for subdivisions of local authority areas.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of homes in England and Wales have central heating.

Mrs. Roe: The most recent available estimate is from the 1984 general household survey, which showed 67 per cent. of households in England and Wales had central heating.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has as to the percentage of dwellings in England and Wales which lack draught-stripping to doors and windows; and what is the total number of such dwellings;

(2) what is the number and percentage of dwellings in England and Wales that lack cavity wall insulation.

Mrs. Roe: The available figures are based on a sample survey conducted by Audits of Great Britain Ltd. in December 1986. It is estimated that 59 per cent. (11·2 million) of households in England and Wales lacked draught-stripping to doors and windows, although many doors and windows do not need draught-stripping to make them draught proof, and that 55 per cent. (10·4 million) of households had cavity walls that were not insulated.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest regulations regarding loft insulation; and what proportion of homes in the United Kingdom are insulated to this standard?

Mrs. Roe: The current building regulations require a U-value of 0·35 which is achieved by 100mm mat insulation or its equivalent; all new homes are insulated to this standard. It is estimated from a sample survey conducted by Audits of Great Britain Ltd., in December 1986, that 44 per cent. of housholds with access to loft spaces in Great Britain had 4in (approximately 100mm) or more of insulation.

Storm Damage

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to offer compensation from public funds to households in respect of storm damage on items like garden fences which could not be insured.

Mr. Chope: No. Although I have every sympathy for those who have suffered damage, the clearance and replacement of items that are not insured is financially a matter for individual property owners.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's latest estimate of the costs to London local authorities of the storm damage sustained in October.

Mr. Chope: We do not yet have sufficiently reliable information to provide the estimate requested.

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will increase the housing investment programme allocation to Wakefield metropolitan district council in order to enable it to fulfil its statutory obligations under the Housing Defects Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: Wakefield borough council has already received an additional allocation of £0·230 million this year for housing defects. My right hon. Friend announced on 3 November that £44·7 million will be made available for additional HIP allocations this year for various purposes, including assistance under the Housing Defects Act. We hope to make allocations very soon.

Housing Associations

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide direct assistance to the United Kingdom Housing Trust in line with the Government's commitment to housing associations and in view of the limited role of housing associations to date in the Wakefield district.

Mr. Waldegrave: The hon. Member may have in mind the proposed purchase by the United Kingdom Housing Trust of dwellings currently in the ownership of British Coal. I have now written to the hon. Member on that matter.

Council Rents

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportions of the council house rent arrears given in his answer to his hon. Friend the Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell) on 4 November represent (a) one payment, (b) two payments and (c) three or more payments.

Mr. Waldegrave: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council tenants are currently in rent arrears; and of these how many have been in arrears for less than six months.

Mrs. Roe: This information is not collected centrally.

Local Authority Services

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if any steps are being taken by his Department to ensure that all local authorities meet minimum and acceptable standards for the provision of essential services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Department is always concerned that local authorities comply with their statutory duties.

Basking Sharks

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Nature Conservancy Council first requested that basking sharks be brought within the terms of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; when he expects to announce his decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Nature Conservancy Council first requested that the basking shark should be brought within the terms of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in its "Quinquennial" review of species submitted to the Secretary of State in October 1986. The Secretary of State has consulted widely on the recommendations contained in the review and hopes shortly to announce his decision on all the species concerned.

Audit Commission

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will use his powers under section 21(7) of the Local Government Finance Act 1982 to prescribe that fees charged to local authority by the Audit Commission shall not be increased by a percentage greater than the increase of the cost of living index over the same period.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend is considering the increased scale of audit fees which the Audit Commission proposes to introduce from 1 November and whether it would be necessary or desirable in the public interest for him to prescribe a scale of fees in place of the scale prescribed by the commission.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amounts of nuclear waste were discharged into the Irish sea from Sellafield nuclear power station in the periods 1960 to 1970, 1970 to 1980 and 1980 to 1985.

Mr. Moynihan: The liquid effluent arising from Calder Hall nuclear power station forms part of the Sellafield site effluent which is collected in tanks for analysis prior to discharge to the Irish sea. Although analysis is carried out at source, the relevant information on activities discharged is obtained on the collection tanks as a whole.

Information for the period 1960-1985 is shown graphically in the figures shown in the report by Sir Douglas Black on "The Investigation of the Possible Increased Incidence of Cancer in West Cumbria" published by HMSO in 1985. Further information on the discharges from the site for the period 1972 – 1985 is available from the British Nuclear Fuel annual reports on radioactive discharges.

Palace of Westminster

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total identified cost of maintaining the Houses of Parliament for the financial years 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Chope: Expenditure charged to the parliamentary works subhead for the maintenance and running costs of the parliamentary estate was £7·612 million for 1985-86 and £7·492 million for 1986-87.

Defective Housing

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is intended for his Department to give technical advice to the Walsall metropolitan borough council regarding carrying out repairs to the Wimpey no fines properties in Walsall; and if he will make a statement;

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 2 November 1987]: It is for Walsall borough council to reach its own decisions on these matters. However, the Building Research Advisory Service can provide technical advice on repairs and improvements to Wimpey no fines properties, should this be requested by Walsall borough council.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if extra financial assistance will be given in the current financial year if requested by the Walsall metropolitan council for repairs to be carried out to the Wimpey no fines properties in the Blakenhall area of the borough; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 2 November 1987]: My right hon. Friend announced on 3 November that £44·7 million will be made available for additional HIP allocations this year, for various purposes; but no decisions have yet been made on the authorities which should receive them.

Homeless Families

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the comparative public sector costs of housing homeless families by (a) the provision of newly built dwellings, (b) the provision of dwellings acquired from the private sector and improved for letting and (c) the provision of bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Mrs. Roe [holding answer 6 November 1987]: The estimate capital costs per household of direct provision by local authorities in 1985-86 were as follows:

	Greater London £	Rest of England £
i. New build	55,700	32,600
ii. Acquisition and renovation	45,900	27,600

Bed and breakfast costs then averaged £30 and £15 respectively per household day.

But there are other ways of accommodating the homeless which are less expensive in public resources. Under the Government's mixed funding scheme to provide interim accommodation for homeless families through housing associations, for example, public sector costs would amount to no more than 50 per cent. and 30 per cent. respectively of the acquisition and renovation costs shown above.

Consultation Papers

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in respect of each of the consultation papers issued by his Department on (a) "Finance for Housing Associations", (b) the "Private Rented Sector: Legislative Proposals", (c) "Right to Buy: Legislative Proposals" and (d) "Housing Action Trusts", when the consultation paper was issued; to which organisations and individuals copies have been sent; by what date replies were required; how many replies were received by that date; and, of these, how many favoured the Government's proposals.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 6 November 1987]: The table provides details about each of these consultation documents.

	Sent out	Comments invited by	Number of comments received
Housing Associations	18 September	[1]30 October	110
Private rented sector (legislative)	2 October	30 October	108
Right to buy	2 October	30 October	94
Housing action trusts	8 October	6 November	[2]28

[1] For main comments; comments on points of detail by end of year.

[2] As at 4 November.

The documents were sent to all local authorities; each local authority association; leading organisations and bodies with an interest in, or involved in housing matters; and others who expressed an interest in each of these areas. In many instances, the responses received so far are detailed and extensive and are still being evaluated. It is too early to identify the position taken on each issue by all respondents.

Council House Sales

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects his current studies into portable discount schemes for council home tenants to be completed; when he expects the Government to come forward with proposals concerning portable discount schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 6 November 1987]: The schemes run by the London boroughs of Brent and Bromley have helped council tenants to buy homes of their own, and released vacancies for the homeless. The results of the studies of the schemes are still being assessed, and it has not yet been decided whether a wider scheme should be proposed.

Local Government Employees (Pay)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to change the method of pay negotiations for other groups of local government employees following the publication of "Teachers Pay and Conditions", Cm. 238.

Mr. Ridley: No.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of the age limits laid down in the supplementary benefit rules, his proposed rebate for poll tax will differentiate between people aged 18 to 25 years and people over 25 years earning the same wage and paying the same poll tax.

Mr. Scott: I have been asked to reply.

We expect community charge rebate to be provided through the housing benefit scheme, which from 1 April 1988 will assess needs on largely the same basis as the new income support scheme. The final details, however, have yet to be decided and will be the subject of consultation with the representatives of local authorities.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households will experience an increase of (a) 50 per cent. or more and (b) 80 per cent. or more in local tax bills under the poll tax proposals; and what proportion these numbers are of those in England.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 5 November 1987]: If local authorities continue to spend at present levels until the community charge is fully in place, then I estimate that 3·3 million households (19 per cent.) would face a one-off increase of more than 50 per cent. in their combined household bills; 2·2 million (12 per cent.) would face an increase of 80 per cent. or more. This outcome need not arise at all providing local authorities start now to reduce expenditure. There ard signs that many of even the highest spending authorities are starting to do so. In order to allow both local authorities and households time to adjust to the new regime we will be proposing transitional arrangements to moderate the rate of change.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of work undertaken since the publication of the White Paper "Rates", Cmnd. 9008, on applying to domestic properties valuation for rating purposes based on capital values.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 2 November 1987]: A note on the effect of capital value rates was placed in the Library by my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) on 23 July 1986. I have today placed in the Library a revised version of that note incorporating later house price information.

The conclusions are broadly unchanged.

(i) Because house prices vary more widely between regions than either existing rateable values or incomes, rates based on capital values would be even less well related to the ability to pay.

(ii) The effects would be different for different types of housing. Terraced houses on average would face increases everywhere except the midlands and the north-west. There would be 30 per cent. increases on average for detached houses in the south-east.

(iii) Some individual occupiers would face very large changes in liability. Nearly 15 per cent. of households would have had increases of more than 50 per cent. and 5 per cent. would have bills which had doubled had the change taken place at the end of 1986.

The note also shows that there are large changes in relative capital values on a cyclical basis so that were there to be regular revaluations on a capital basis, there would also be regular large changes in rate bills.

Capital value rates would, therefore, be more unfair, and more unstable than the present rating system. They would lead to large changes in household rate bills unrelated to the use of local services or ability to pay. They would do nothing to alter the fundamental weakness of accountability which exists under the present system and which our proposals specifically address.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Conveyancing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General how many licences have been issued by the Council for Licensed Conveyancers.

The Attorney-General: Two hundred and twenty three licences have been issued by the Council for Licensed Conveyancers.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General how many persons holding licences issued by the Council for Licensed Conveyancers are presently in practice as non-solicitor conveyancers offering conveyancing services to the general public.

The Attorney-General: Seventy-two persons holding licences issued by the Council for Licensed Conveyancers are presently in practice as non-solicitor conveyancers offering conveyancing services to the general public.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General how many solicitors presently hold licences issued by the Council for Licensed Conveyancers.

The Attorney-General: Twenty-one solicitors presently hold licences issued by the Council for Licensed Conveyancers.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General how many persons holding licences issued by the Council for Licensed Conveyancers are presently in the employment of solicitors.

The Attorney-General: Ninety-nine persons holding licences issued by the Council for Licensed Conveyancers are presently in the employment of solicitors.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General to what extent the costs of the Council for Licensed Conveyancers are still being met by public funds.

The Attorney-General: For the period 1 January 1986 to 31 March 1989 the Council for Licensed Conveyancers is in receipt of a total grant in aid of £200,000. For the current financial year £55,000 has been allocated.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the rules already made by the Council for Licensed Conveyancers with concurrence of the Lord Chancellor; and what other rules have been drafted by the Council for Licensed Conveyancers which are presently awaiting the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor.

The Attorney-General: Those rules which have been made by the Council for Licensed Conveyancers with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor are: the Council for Licensed Conveyancers' Licensing Rules 1987; the Licensed Conveyancers' Training Rules 1986; the Licensed Conveyancers' Practice Rules 1987; the Licensed Conveyancers' Accounts Rules 1986; the Licensed Conveyancers' Accounts (Deposit Interest) Rules 1986; the Accountants' Report Rules 1986; the Licensed Conveyancers' Indemnity Rules 1987; the Council for Licensed Conveyancers' Compensation Fund Rules 1987; the Investigating Committee and Discipline and Appeals Committee Rules 1987; the Licensed Conveyancers' Discipline and Appeals Committee (Procedure) Rules 1987.

The Lord Chancellor has also made the Licensed Conveyancers' Discipline and Appeals Committee (Legal Assessor) Rules 1987.

The rules which are outstanding are: the Council for Licensed Conveyancers' Recognised Bodies Rules 1987; the Council for Licensed Conveyancers' Recognised Bodies Practice Rules 1987, together with various consequential amendments to the rules already made.

Mr. Frank Larsen

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Attorney-General what instructions were given by the Crown prosecution service to counsel regarding the attitude to be taken to any request from defence counsel for proceedings involving Mr. Frank Larsen at Lambeth court on 22 October to be held in camera.

The Attorney-General: At the hearing to which the hon. Member refers the Crown prosecution service was not represented by counsel but by one of its own staff. His attitude was neutral: he neither supported the defence application, nor opposed it.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his statement to the House on Friday 23 October, Official Report, column 1095, what happened between 21 September and 7 October to convince the Director of Public Prosecutions that the case could not result in a conviction.

The Attorney-General: On 7 October the director's staff were advised by counsel that there was not a realistic prospect of the conviction of the remaining three defendants. They accepted that advice.

Terrorism (Prosecutions)

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Attorney-General how many times in the last three years a prosecution based on evidence procured by the anti-terrorist squad has been withdrawn by the Director of Public Prosecutions due to lack of evidence.

The Attorney-General: No separate records are kept by the Crown Prosecution Service of prosecutions arising from cases investigated by the anti-terrorist squad. Nor were separate records kept by the Director of Public Prosecutions before the inception of the Crown Prosecution Service. Therefore, it would not be possible to give an accurate answer to the hon. Member's question.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 2 November, how much of the Hong Kong exchange fund was used to provide support to the Hong Kong Futures Guarantee Corporation.

Mr. Eggar: Commitments from the Hong Kong exchange fund, in the form of two facilities of HK$1,000 million each, have been made in support of the Hong Kong Futures Guarantee Corporation. These are loan facilities, interest being charged at market rates. By 6 November the first facility has been drawn on by approximately HK$800 million.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to what firms are being sued by the Hong Kong Futures Guarantee Corporation and as to how much they are being sued for; whether any Hong Kong Government officials are alleged to be involved in any of these firms.

Mr. Eggar: The Hong Kong Futures Guarantee Corporation has issued writs against 33 firms alleged to have defaulted. The amount involved is approximately HK$1,800 million. These writs have been issued to protect the position of the guarantee corporation and the number of writs outstanding is liable to change as settlements are made. We are not aware of any Hong Kong Government official having any connection with the firms which are being sued.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to whether any Hong Kong stock exchange or financial futures exchange officials are alleged to be involved in any of the companies under investigation on the Hong Kong stock exchange.

Mr. Eggar: We are not aware of any allegations having been made against such officials, including the directors of the Hong Kong futures exchange, committee members of the Stock Exchange of Hong Kong Ltd. and staff employed by each exchange, of involvement with companies currently under surveillance by the Hong Kong stock exchange. Nor are we aware that any such officials are involved with any of the members or member firms which are currently under surveillance by the Hong Kong stock exchange or the futures exchange.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the names of the officials of (a) the Government and (b) the stock exchange who are alleged to be involved with companies being sued by the Hong Kong Futures Guarantee Corporation; and whether all these firms have been suspended from trading.

Mr. Eggar: We are not aware of any such officials. All firms which are being sued by the Futures Guarantee Corporation have been suspended from trading on the futures exchange.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the list held by the Hong Kong stock exchange officials of brokers in financial difficulties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: As far as we are aware, no such list exists. Seven firms have suspended trading at their own request, but not necessarily because they are in financial difficulties.

Colonel Robert Crowther

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the factors which dictated the timing of the end of the tour of duty of Colonel Robert Crowther, the South African defence attaché in London.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn) on 24 July 1987, at column 571.

Mr. Frank Larsen

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the nature of official communications between Mr. William Marsden, an official of his Department, and Mr. Frank Larsen over the past two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: There have been no official or other communications between Mr. Marsden and Mr. Larsen.

Iran-Iraq War

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise at the Security Council of the United Nations the question of amending motion No. 598 on the Iran/Iraq war in such a way as to make clear the responsibility of Iraq for starting the conflict by its invasion of Iranian territory; if he will make a statement; and if he will publish the text of the motion in the Official Report.

Mr. Mellor: Security Council resolution 598 was passed unanimously and represents a carefully balanced package which takes into account the concerns of each side in the conflict. The resolution calls inter alia for the establishment of an impartial body to inquire into responsibility for the conflict. The establishment of such a body is one of a number of elements of implemementation of the resolution currently under discussion. It would not be wise to pre-empt the work of the body.

Copies of the resolution have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his current assessment of the conditions which the Government of Iran have accepted as a basis for ending the war with Iraq.

Mr. Mellor: It is not up to the Government of either Iran or Iraq to impose conditions for ending the conflict. Both sides have a legal obligation to abide by Security Council resolution 598. The United Nations Secretary-General is discussing with the two sides implementation of the resolution. These discussions and the detailed positions of the two sides are confidential.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Post Office (Investment)

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what study he has made of the annual report of the Post Office Users National Council; and what has been his reponse to the criticism of the short-term view taken by Her Majesty's Government in planning or approving Post Office forward strategy and investment;

(2) what has been his response to the concern expressed in the annual report of the Post Office Users National Council that the planned investment levels in the next few years are too low.

Mr. Butcher: It is primarily for the Post Office to plan its forward strategy and investment, consistent with the general framework within which the Government expect the business to operate, including the long-term strategic objectives and the financial and other targets which we have set. We have considered the criticisms of the operation of the financial framework as it applies to the Post Office which the Post Office Users' National Council makes in its annual report. But, as the council is aware, most recently from my meeting with its chairman and secretary on 21 October, we do not accept the council's view, as set out in the report, that the arrangements for financing the Post Office are damaging and inappropriate to its long-term requirements.

However, I also indicated that the Post Office has not been constrained in recent public expenditure rounds from undertaking the level of investment that it considers necessary over the next few years.

British Airways-British Caledonian Merger

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, in the light of the proposed British Airways-British Caledonian merger, he has any plans to tighten the safeguards to prevent newly privatised industries from becoming monopolies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I see no need to introduce additional safeguards of this kind. Whether specific provisions are needed to deal with the possibility of takeover or monopoly abuse is considered in the context of individual privatisations. Except to the extent that any such specific provisions substitute for them, the provisions of competition law apply to privatised industries, as to other private sector businesses.

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will take into account the potential impact of a British airline industry dominated by one large carrier operating from both Heathrow and Gatwick, on the East Midlands and other regional airports before making his decision on the proposed takeover of British Caledonian by British Airways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Woodcock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy to take into account the interests of consumers in making his decision on the proposed British Airways/British Caledonian merger; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission has now submitted its report on this merger proposal to the Secretary of State. In view of the market-sensitive nature of the report, it is inappropriate for me to comment further until it is published, when an announcement will be made in the normal way on its conclusions and on what action, if any, arises from them.

FIMBRA

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will request Sir Kenneth Berrill of the Securities and Investments Board to reply forthwith to the letter dated 25 September from Commander Colin Cochrane concerning representation of category A firms on the council of FIMBRA.

Mr. Maude: I understand that Sir Kenneth replied on 2 November.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will publish in the Official Report the reply due from his Department to Commander Colin Cochrane, representing category A firms, concerning the representation of category A firms on the FIMBRA council; and whether he will withhold approval via the Securities and Investments Board of FIMBRA until and unless category A firms are represented pro rata on the FIMBRA council.

Mr. Maude: Commander Cochrane wrote to my Department on 29 October and was sent a reply on 30 October. The reply pointed out that it was for the Securities and Investments Board and not the Secretary of State to determine whether, in its view, FIMBRA satisfies the requirements for recognition under the Financial Services Act, and that the commander's views on this matter should therefore be addressed to the board. The letter explained that the Secretary of State's role, now that the recognition function has been transferred, is to consider the competition aspects of FIMBRA's (and other aspirant SROs') rules; and that when he does so he will take into account their effect on all businesses in the relevant sector, small and large.

One of the requirements for recognition of a self-regulating organisation under the Financial Services Act is that the arrangements of the organisation with respect to the appointment, removal from office and functions of the persons responsible for making or enforcing the rules of the organisation must be such as to secure a proper balance (a) between the interests of the different members of the organisation ; and (b) between the interests of the organisation or its members and the interests of the public. As noted above, it is for the Securities and Investments Board to satisfy itself whether this condition is met in particular cases.

Upholstery (Flammable Materials)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what effect the EEC moves to harmonise the internal market can be expected to have on consumer protection from the use of hazardous flammable materials in furniture upholstery.

Mr. Maude: I am considering remaking the 1980 Upholstered Furniture (Safety) Regulations, as furniture flammability is a significant consumer hazard. I am not aware of any Community proposals in this area.

Under the terms of directive 83/189, member states are required to notify the Commission of proposals for new regulations. A three-month period is then required for consideration of such proposals by the Commission and by member states: if any objection is raised the period of delay is extended to six months. Should the Commission put forward a proposal for a directive on the subject, national action may be delayed for 12 months from the date of notification.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Motorists (Breath Testing)

88. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy towards random breath testing for motorists.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Roland Boyes) on 5 November.

Football Violence

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with (a) the English Football Association, (b) the Professional Footballer's Association or (c) any other body over the guidelines which should be applied in considering whether a prosecution should arise from incidents during football matches.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. It is for the appropriate chief officer of police to decide whether criminal charges should be brought as a result of incidents during football matches. Any cases in which charges are made in England and Wales are then referred to the Crown prosecution service.

Bail

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, as a contribution to reducing the prison population, he will issue advice to magistrates to the effect that bail should be offered to those accused of non-violent offences who are currently on remand.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that my right hon. Friend gave him on 5 November at column 1051.

Prisoners (Nationality)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements he has made to ensure that individuals currently in prison are able to register under the British Nationality Act by 31 December 1987 should they wish to.

Mr. Renton: Circular instruction 24/87, a copy of which is in the Library, has been sent to governors of all prison service establishments with supplies of the free information leaflet "Your Right to British Citizenship", and posters to display to draw the attention of all inmates to the leaflet.

Immigration

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has yet reached a decision on the case of Mr. and Mrs. Masoud Taghinejadi in response to the letters to him from the hon. Member for Stockport of 7 September and 22 October.

Mr. Renton: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 4 November.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the results of the pilot trial involving the use of DNA techniques in immigration control; and whether the Government will use DNA, without charge to the applicant, as part of their entry clearance procedures.

Mr. Renton: The Department is awaiting the last few test results from cases in the pilot trial, and a report will then be prepared, a copy of which will be placed in the Library. We shall consider what part DNA testing might play in our entry control procedures and how it should be funded when we have studied the results of the pilot trial.

Press Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to what factors he attributes the increase between 1985-86 and 1986-87 in his Department's expenditure on press advertising.

Mr. Hurd: Overall advertising expenditure by the Home Office fell from £4 million in 1985-86 to £3·6 million in 1986-87. The increase in press advertising expenditure (to £1,150,000 in 1986-87, not £1,366,000 as incorrectly given in reply to the hon. Member on 3 November, at columns 622-23) was balanced by a reduction in television and other media expenditure. This change reflected the judgment of our advertising advisers on the usefulness of particular media for particular campaigns.

Colonel Robert Crowther

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the circumstances in which the anti-terrorist squads sought to interview Colonel Robert Crowther, South African defence attache in London, prior to 17 July.

Mr. Hurd: I understand that Colonel Robert Crowther has not been interviewed by the anti-terrorist branch.

Mr. Frank Larsen

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to when the anti-terrorist squad ceased its inquiries into the activities of Mr. Frank Larsen.

Mr. Hurd: I understand that the anti-terrorist branch ceased its enquiries into the activities of Mr. Frank Larsen on 22 October.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if any Minister in his Department had official communication with Mr. Frank Larsen over the past two years.

Mr. Hurd: No Home Office Minister can recall having any official communication with Mr. Frank Larsen over the past two years.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the nature of the correspondence taken by the police from Mr. Larsen's home.

Mr. Hurd: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General on Friday 23 October at column 1095.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to which (a) hon. Members and (b) civil servants were questioned by the police in their investigations into the recently abandoned case at Lambeth magistrates' court against Frank Larsen and others.

Mr. Hurd: I understand that six civil servants but no hon. Members were questioned by the police during their investigations into the activities of Mr. Frank Larsen and others.

Entertainment Certificates

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce legislation during the current Session of Parliament to allow local authorities to charge fees for the issue of certificates of suitability for entertainment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Licensing Bill, introduced on 29 October, includes provision, in clause 5, to enable local authorities to charge a reasonable fee on an application for the grant, renewal or variation of a certificate of suitability under section 79 of the Licensing Act 1964.

ENERGY

Coal Industry

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the increases in productivity in the coal mining industry over the last 12 months (a) as a total and (b) by British Coal area.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Average deep mined revenue output per man shift during the first six months of 1987-88 compared with the same period in 1986-87 is as follows:

	Tonnes 1986-87	1987-88	Per cent. Increase
Scotland	2·45	2·87	17·1
North East	2·84	3·33	17·3
North Yorkshire	3·48	4·28	23·0
South Yorkshire	3·43	3·60	5·0
Central	3·12	3·36	7·7
Nottinghamshire	3·29	3·82	16·1
Kent	1·71	2·06	20·5
Western	3·04	3·52	15·8
South Wales	2·28	2·43	6·6
Total Great Britain	3·06	3·52	15·0

Gas Disconnections

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many disconnections of gas supply there have been in the last 12 months; what the figures were in the two preceding 12-month periods; and what is the average length of time disconnected consumers remain without gas.

Mr. Peter Morrison: This is a matter for British Gas plc. I have asked the chairman of British Gas to write to the hon. Member with the information available.

Nuclear Inspectors

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the numbers of nuclear inspectors per reactor in the United Kingdom, West Germany, France, Sweden, Belgium, Italy and Spain.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am advised by the Health and Safety Executive that in the United Kingdom approximately 80 nuclear installations inspectors deal with 41 licensed commercial power reactors under construction and in operation, and five small research reactors. The number of inspectors assigned to any one reactor is decided on a basis of need.

Figures for overseas countries are not available and can be acquired only at disproportionate cost. The United Kingdom, however, has been instrumental in bringing about an IAEA review of regulatory practices in member states.

Electricity Industry

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to how manning levels in the electricity supply industry in England and Wales compare with those of other European Economic Community countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Some information is available from annual reports of electricity utilities. But comparisons are not straightforward because of the different ranges of activities undertaken and the extent of use of contractors.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much of the new electricity capacity planned for by the end of the century is to replace existing capacity.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter which falls within the management responsibility of the Central Electricity Generating Board and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member. The need to replace existing capacity and the growth in electricity demand result in a requirement for substantial investment in new generating capacity in the years ahead.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans have been made for the modernisation of the electricity transmission system; and how much money is allocated to this.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter which falls within the management responsibility of the Central Electricity Generating Board. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Sizewell B Power Station

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest estimate of the capital cost of the Sizewell B power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the hon. Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) to the hon. Member for Salford, East (Mr. Orme) on 27 April, at column 16.

Magnox Stations (Decommissioning)

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is his latest assessment of the cost of decommissioning a Magnox station;

(2) what is the time scale for the decommissioning of the Magnox stations;

(3) when he now expects the decommissioning of the older Magnox stations to commence.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter which falls within the management responsibility of the Central Electricity Generating Board. I shall ask the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Electricity Disconnections

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many households have had their electricity supply disconnected during the last 12 months.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the electricity supply industry. I have asked the chairman of the Electricity Council to write to the hon. Member with the information requested in respect of England and Wales. The question of electricity disconnections in Scotland should be pursued through my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

House Insulation

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the total funds available in the current financial year to help people on low incomes insulate their houses.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government provides assistance for this purpose through the Community Insulation Projects, which have to date provided free or low-cost basic insulation service for about 400,000 low income households; and the homes insulation scheme, which provides, alongside the general grant at 66 per cent., a means-tested grant at 90 per cent. restricted to certain categories of low-income household. Government funding for these schemes in 1987-88 is estimated as follows:

	£ million
Community Insulation Projects	45
Homes insulation scheme[1]:
England[2]	16·5
Scotland	2·1
Wales[3]	2·3
Total[4]	66

[1] Provisions for the HIS in the public expenditure survey.

[2] In addition, a number of English local authorities have decided, with the approval of the Department of the Environment, to use some of their housing investment programme allocations for the purpose of the homes insulation scheme. The Secretary of State for the Environment announced on 3 November his intention to make further capital allocations to local authorities for housing needs, including homes insulation.

[3] Net of local authority administration costs.

[4] Rounded.

Elderly Persons

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he has to help the elderly to use energy more efficiently.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 30 October 1987 to my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Mr. Bowden) at column 447.

Conservation (Investment Return)

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the rate of return of investment in energy conservation.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The rate of return of investment in energy conservation varies by type of conservation measure and sector in which it is applied. My Energy Efficiency Office has published results of assessments of rates of return or payback periods for a wide range of conservation measures in the domestic, industrial and commercial sectors. I am arranging for copies of examples to be placed in the Library of the House.

Sulphur Emissions

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the existing coal-fired power stations that are ~~to~~ be fitted with the technology to reduce sulphur emissions.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The CEGB plans to fit flue gas desulphurisation (FGD) equipment to coal-fired power stations at Drax in Yorkshire and Fiddler's Ferry in Cheshire to reduce emissions of sulphur dioxide.

Pressurised Water Reactors

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the average construction time for pressurised water reactors in the United States of America.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Information on the construction time of pressurised water reactors in the USA has been published by various organisations.

Detailed information was submitted as evidence to the Sizewell B inquiry by the CEGB and by objectors, and the matter is covered in chapters 67 and 69 of the inspector's report to the then Secretary of State. A copy of the inspector's report is in the Library.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many applications he has received from the Central Electricity Generating Board for the construction of pressurised water reactors; and when they were received.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department has received two applications from the Central Electricity Generating Board for the construction of pressurised water reactors. The application for the first, Sizewell B, was received on 30 January 1981 and consent was granted on 12 March 1987. The application for the second, Hinkley Point C, was received on 27 August 1987.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what further steps are being considered for the construction of pressurised water reactors.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is for the Central Electricity Generating Board to submit applications for new power stations in England and Wales. The board is at present investigating a number of possible sites for further nuclear development, including Wylfa and Trawsfynydd in north Wales, Winfrith in Dorset, Druridge in Northumberland and Dungeness in Kent.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the criteria used for the setting of both domestic and industrial tariffs on electricity prices by area boards.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The criteria for setting electricity tariffs are set out in the electricity statutes. As it is the responsibility of the industry to fulfil its requirements in the statutes, I have asked the chairman of the Electricity Council to write to the hon. Member.

British Coal Houses (Wakefield)

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has about the progress of the negotiations between British Coal and the United Kingdom Housing Trust over the sales of the remaining 850 British Coal houses in Wakefield metropolitan district.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The sale of British Coal houses is a matter for the corporation. I will ask the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Fuel Bills

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if the Energy Efficiency Office has estimated the annual savings on fuel bills that could be achieved in the public sector from investment in improved energy management and usage, which can be expected to have a pay back period of less than five years; and if he will apportion the prospective savings for each of the major sectors and Departments of State.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Energy Efficiency Office estimates that the annual bill for energy consumed in public sector buildings is about £2 billion. Available evidence indicates that the scope for saving through improved energy efficiency could amount to £400 to £500 million a year. It is also estimated that roughly half the savings opportunities in all sectors can be realised through cost-effective investment and half through successful good housekeeping practices.

I regret it is not possible for the Energy Efficiency Office to provide a comprehensive and consistent breakdown of prospective savings in individual public sector bodies.

SCOTLAND

Illegal Abortions

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of convictions in Scotland for procuring an illegal abortion in each year since 1957.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is given in the table:

Persons with charge proved of procuring an illegal abortion

Prisoners (Schizophrenia Psychosis)

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of those convicted of crimes in Scotland in each of the last five years had ever previously been admitted to National Health Service mental illness hospitals with a main diagnosis of schizophrenia psychosis.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available.

School Boards

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of submissions he has had on his proposals for school boards and the number opposed to the ceiling powers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have received some 6,500 submissions by the deadline date of 3 November. Many take the form of detailed comments on the proposals and it would not be possible to classify them in the form suggested.

Community Centres

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received representations from the chairman of Craigroyston community centre about the proposed privatisation of community centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have received no such representations.

Pupil Statistics

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total numbers of pupils on school rolls and the pupil to teacher ratio in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in the Glasgow, Central constituency area for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on schools in Glasgow, Central constituency can be obtained from Strathclyde regional council.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils in the Glasgow, Central constituency have obtained places in higher or further education in each year since 1979; and if he will express that number as a percentage of the age group for each year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not readily available.

AIDS

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the estimated number of carriers, cases and deaths due to HIV for Scotland and Fife, by age and sex, for 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of AIDS cases and deaths in Scotland in 1985 and 1986 reported to the Communicable Diseases (Scotland) Unit are set out in the table.

	AIDS cases		Deaths
	Male	Female	Male	Female
1985	4	—	1	—
1986	6	1	7	—

It is estimated that, at the end of 1986, there were 30,000 to 40,000 carriers of HIV infection in the United Kingdom, but the proportion of this range who were located in Scotland has not been estimated. Of those persons who had been tested for HIV infection in Scotland, the numbers found to be HIV positive are set out in the table below:

	Number
Persons tested and found to be positive from 1982 up to end of 1985	536
Persons tested and found to be positive in 1986	473
	1,009

Details of the ages of the persons concerned and of the numbers of each sex found to be HIV positive are not available. Since the figures of AIDS cases and deaths for particular regions may be very low, and their publication may in consequence endanger medical confidentiality, geographical breakdowns are not published. Geographical breakdowns of numbers of persons tested and found to be HIV positive in 1985 and 1986 are not available.

Development Areas

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest level of unemployment for those areas in Scotland still retaining development area status.

Mr. Lang: The level of unemployment on 10 September 1987 in each of the travel-to-work areas in Scotland which have development area status is shown in the table.

Travel-to-work areas	Percentage Unemployment Rate	Unemployed Claimants
Arbroath	19·5	1,622
Bathgate	17·4	8,603
Cumnock and Sanquhar	28·2	4,352
Dumbarton	20·0	5,458
Dundee	15·2	14,742
Glasgow	16·9	106,002
Greenock	19·3	9,047
Irvine	22·1	10,845
Kilmarnock	17·1	5,374
Lanarkshire	18·6	29,966

Stracathro Hospital Junction

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the flyover improvements at Stracathro hospital junction will be commenced; what further obstacles remain to be overcome; and what further approvals are required before the project can commence.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The economic appraisal of the scheme is currently under consideration. Once this has been completed the Scottish Development Department should be in a position to publish the draft statutory orders for the scheme. As with all trunk road projects, start dates are subject to the satisfactory completion of statutory procedures and the availability of finance.

School Leavers (Qualifications)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what qualifications for school leavers are recognised by his Department other than O-levels; what proportion of pupils leaving school qualify in these examinations; what are the proportions for O-level; and if he will publish the most recent statistics for school leavers with a breakdown of the qualifications they gain.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Education Department does not formally recognise specific qualifications. It is for the users of the certificates, such as employers or educational institutions, to determine the degree of recognition that they are prepared to give to the various qualifications held by school leavers. In Scotland, the great majority of school pupils seeking qualifications take Scottish certificate of education (SCE) ordinary, standard or higher grade examinations. Other examinations, such as the certificate of sixth year studies, general certificate of education (GCE) O-levels and A-levels, certificate of secondary education (CSE) and the SCOTVEC national certificate, are taken by some pupils.

Available information on the qualifications held by Scottish school leavers is published annually in an SED statistical bulletin, copies of which are held in the House of Commons Library. The most recent edition is No. 10/E2/1986.

Protected Birds

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce a compensation mechanism for crofters or farmers who suffer financial loss as a result of the presence of protected birds but whose land is not designated part of a site of special scientific interest.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We are currently considering a number of representations on this matter including representations from the Scottish Crofters Union and a number of hon. Members. I shall let the hon. Member know the outcome of our consideration in due course.

Regional Aid

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of RDG and RSA expenditure for 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89 at (a) current prices and (b) constant prices for 1987.

Mr. Lang: Total net expenditure by the Scottish Office on RDG and RSA — as defined for the public expenditure White Paper in 1986-87 is £206 million, £212 million at estimated 1987 prices. Current net provision for 1987-88 is £120 million—£119 million at estimated 1987 prices. As regards later years, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will announce his plans for spending on programmes within his responsibility in December.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of Scottish Development Agency spending in 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89 at (a) current and (b) constant prices for 1987.

Mr. Lang: The information for 1986-87 and 1987-88 is as follows:

Year	Outturn prices £ million	1987 prices £ million
1986-87	130·9	136·8
1987-88 (estimated)	136·0	136·0

My right hon. and learned Friend will announce his plans for public expenditure on programmes within his responsibility in the usual way in December.

Parole Board

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement regarding his future policy on parole and the future of the Parole Board.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has already made clear his intention to institute a thorough review of the workings of the parole system in Scotland. He is at present considering the best means of giving effect to that intention and a full statement will be made in due course.

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many months it now takes from the date on which a prisoner is referred to the Parole Board to the date on which a decision is made on that case; and if he will also list the time taken in each of the past seven years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A case would normally be referred to the Parole Board only towards the end of the review process. Once the Parole Board has made a recommendation the prisoner can expect to be informed of the Secretary of State's decision within three weeks. This has not varied over the past seven years.

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many cases have been considered by the Parole Board in each of the last seven years;

(2) how many prisoners have been referred to the Parole Board for information only in each of the last seven years to the nearest date;

(3) how many prisoners have been granted parole by the Parole Board in Scotland in each of the past seven years to the nearest date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is published in the annual report of the Parole Board for Scotland for 1986, copies of which are available in the Library. Information on the number of cases considered by the Parole Board and the number recommended for parole is set out in table one of appendix B of the report; information on the number of life sentence cases referred for information only is set out in table two.

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many prisoners appearing before the Parole Board in each of the past seven years have been refused parole on the second or subsequent consideration of their case;

(2) how many prisoners appeared before the Parole Board, having been refused parole on the first consideration of the case in each of the past seven years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average length of sentence now being served by prisoners appearing for parole before they are finally paroled; and what was the average length of sentence in each of the past seven years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on time spent in custody prior to release is set out, in respect of persons released from life sentences, in the table at appendix D of the annual report of the Parole Board for Scotland 1986, copies of which are available in the Library. Similar information in respect of persons released from fixed term sentences is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Forestry

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement concerning the environmental objectives of United Kingdom forestry policy.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under the Forestry Act 1967, as amended by the Wildlife and Countryside (Amendment) Act 1985, the forestry commissioners have a duty in discharging their functions to endeavour to achieve a reasonable balance between the development of afforestation, the management of forests and the production and supply of timber; and the conservation and enhancement of natural beauty and the conservation of flora, fauna and geological or physiographical features of special interest.

National Health Service (Expenditure)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing expenditure on hospital and community health services and its comparison with hospital and community health service inflation for each health board in Scotland since 1977 on the same basis as table F in paragraph 214 of the Scottish Health Service Planning Council's SHARPEN report.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Paragraph 214 of the working document on Scottish health authorities' review of priorities for the 1980s and 1990s, which is at present under consideration by the Scottish Health Service Planning Council, explains that the index of pay and prices used in table F is one which is compiled by DHSS for the hospital and community health services in England, and that it can serve to give some broad indication of the effect of pay and price changes in the equivalent services in Scotland. However, since the mix of staff and other inputs purchased by individual Scottish health boards varies, it would not be meaningful to apply the DHSS index to individual boards' recurrent expenditure.

Stoneyetts Hospital

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals Greater Glasgow health board has submitted to him about the future of Stoneyetts hospital; how he has responded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Greater Glasgow health board has not submitted any proposals to my right hon. and learned Friend about Stoneyetts hospital. The future of the hospital will depend on the outcome of the board's strategic review of its psychiatric services, about which a consultative document has recently been issued.

State Security

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations (a) the Crown Office (b) the procurators fiscal have received from BBC Scotland about the restitution of documents seized in relation to Zircon, on Sunday 1 February; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Between 18 March and 2 September the Procurator Fiscal, Glasgow, received four letters of representation from the solicitors acting for BBC Scotland. There have been no representations direct to Crown Office.

I have nothing further to add.

Restart

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have been interviewed in the Glasgow, Central travel-to-work area under the restart scheme; and how many have, following that interview, been refused benefit by the independent adjudication officer.

Mr. Cope: I have been asked to reply.

Information on interviews is not available in the precise form requested. However, in the employment service areas which include the Glasgow travel-to-work area, Glasgow, Lanark, Ayrshire, Dumfries, Galloway, Renfrew, Dumbarton and Argyleshire, 172,659 people have been interviewed since 1 July 1986 when the national restart programme began. Any refusal of benefit subsequent to a restart interview follows not from the interview itself but from the decision of an independent adjudication officer operating under longstanding legal rules adopted by successive Governments.

The numbers of such decisions which follow a restart interview cannot be separately identified within the total number of decisions which follow from referrals to adjudication officers from unemployment benefit offices.

Cabotage

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the effects of the eventual introduction of cabotage in 1992 in the heavy goods vehicle and public service vehicle industries in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply earlier today, and to the statement I made to the House on 28 October in replying to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Leith (Mr. Brown).

The introduction of cabotage under conditions of free and fair competition will provide increased business opportunities in Europe for United Kingdom goods and public service vehicle industries. These opportunities will be available to Scottish operators as to the rest of the United Kingdom. I expect that they will make the most of them.

DEFENCE

United States (Secretary for Defence)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to meet the Secretary for Defence of the United States of America.

Mr. Younger: I have frequent meetings with my United States colleague. I next expect to meet the American Defence Secretary at the NATO defence planning committee meeting in December.

Conventional Forces (Balance)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the balance of conventional forces between the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and the Warsaw pact countries.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I would refer my hon. Friend to paragraphs 107-109 and annex A of volume 1 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1987" (Cm 101-I).

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by what means the United Kingdom Government have calculated the size of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republic's stockpile of chemical weapons.

Mr. Ian Stewart: For reasons of security, it would not be prudent to disclose the means by which we calculate the size of the Soviet Union's stockpile of chemical agents and weapons.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications of the United States of America's contingency plan for the deployment of United States binary chemical munitions in Europe for the siting of such weapons in the United Kingdom in times of crisis.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member on 3 November 1987 at column 625.

Montebello Agreement

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on all measures taken to date by Her Majesty's Government arising from the Montebello agreement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the reply given to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence to my hon. Friend the Member for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith) on 23 July 1987 at column 390.

NH90 Helicopter

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost to the United Kingdom of the NH90 joint European helicopter project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 30 October at column 485.

Low-level Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total number of military low-level training sorties flown over the United Kingdom in each year since 1974, calculated by the pre-1985 method of logging movements between low flying areas.

Mr. Freeman: The information, calculated on the basis requested, is as follows:

Low-level sorties (ie below 2,000 feet) as calculated by pre-1985 method

	Number
1974	71,000
1975	78,000
1976	77,700
1977	76,000
1978	76,000
1979	108,860
1980	122,850
1981	131,840
1982	130,310
1983	128,000
1984	133,500
1985	134,247
1986	142,971
[1]1987	98,935

[1] Figure up to 30 September 1987.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a monthly breakdown of the figures for low-level military training sorties over the United Kingdom since 1974.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not available prior to 1979. Before 1985, sortie numbers were not recorded directly but calculated from movements. Also some monthly figures for 1983 and before were estimates, which were corrected on aggregation. Details for the years 1979-87 are as follows:

Month	Year
	1979	1980	1981
January	411	10,034	9,271

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the military low level training sorties flown over the United Kingdom in each year since 1974 took place wholly or partly between the hours of 11 pm and 7 am.

Mr. Freeman: We aim to complete low-level flying training before 11 pm wherever possible because we recognise that aircraft noise can be particularly intrusive at night, and we authorise no more activity than is absolutely necessary. The information requested is not, however, available, because military low-level flying is categorised either as day or night flying, and the latter category includes all flying during the period between sunset plus 30 minutes and sunrise minus 30 minutes.

Records of low-level flying at night, under this definition, are available from April 1984, and the proportion of night flying is as follows:

	per cent.
1984	[1] 3·8
1985	5·2
1986	4·9
1987	[2] 4·8

[1] For period 1 April to 31 December.

[2] Up to 30 September 1987.

A much smaller proportion of all low flying would have been authorised to take place between 11 pm and 7 am.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total number of low-level military training sorties flown by British military aircraft outside the United Kingdom in each year since 1974.

Mr. Freeman: We do not keep records of the total number of low-level military training sorties flown by British military aircraft outside the United Kingdom, and it would require disproportionate effort to obtain this information.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying sorties were undertaken over the United Kingdom in each year since 1985 by (a) C-141, (b) C-5, (c) B-52, (d) FB-111, (e) KC-135 and (f) KC-10 aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: Central records of low-flying sorties by these aircraft types are not kept and therefore details could not be provided without disproportionate effort.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many Skyguard radars are to be deployed to monitor adherence to low-flying regulations; and which Royal Air Force unit will be responsible for their operations;

(2) if the Skyguard radars being deployed to monitor adherence to low-flying regulations will also be used to provide mobile electronic countermeasures training facilities for low-flying aircraft;

(3) when the first Skyguard radars will be deployed to monitor adherence to low-flying regulations.

Mr. Freeman: Skyguard radars are currently in service with 2729 Squadron Royal Auxiliary Air Force Regiment to provide short range air defence (SHORAD) for RAF Coningsby. One system is also based at RAF Spadeadam for use as a threat simulator in electronic warfare training. The possibility of using a Skyguard system to monitor the heights of low-flying aircraft was the subject of a recent trial. The equipment's potential in this role will not be clear until the results of the trial have been fully assessed.

No. 2729 (City of Lincoln) Squadron

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes are currently being made, or are planned, to the personnel and equipment establishment and role of No. 2729 (City of Lincoln) Squadron, Royal Auxiliary Air Force Regiment.

Mr. Freeman: No changes are planned or currently being made to the personnel and equipment establishment and role of 2729 (City of Lincoln) squadron, Royal Auxiliary Air Force Regiment.

El Salvador (Military Cadets)

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Her Majesty's Government provide training to El Salvadorean military cadets.

Mr. Freeman: There are, at present, no members of the Salvadorean armed forces undergoing training at Ministry of Defence establishments in the United Kingdom.

Bullying and Brutality

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, in the light of further evidence, he will set up an inquiry headed by a High Court judge to investigate the problem of bullying in the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have considered very carefully with my military colleagues the merits of an independent inquiry into the incidence of bullying. We have concluded that responsibility for such matters must rest primarily with commanding officers and the chain of command, supported as necessary by the special investigation branch of the Royal Military police. I continue to be kept very closely in touch with the investigations currently in train.

Type 23 Order

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those yards invited to tender to the four type 23 order recently announced.

Mr. Sainsbury: The invitation to tender for up to four type 23 frigates has been sent to Yarrow Shipbuilders Ltd., Swan Hunter Shipbuilders Ltd., Vosper Thornycroft (UK) Ltd. and the VSEL-Cammell Laird Group.

Departmental Civilian Personnel

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilians are employed by his Department in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Wales and (c) Clwyd, how many civilians are active in his Department's establishments in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Wales and (c) Clwyd as contract cleaners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The total number of full-time equivalent civilian staff, excluding casual staff, employed by the Ministry of Defence on 1 October 1987 was 145,919 of whom 140,524 were based in the United Kingdom. Of these 5,947 were based in Wales and 1,236 in Clwyd.

The information requested on contract cleaners is not available; the numbers employed by the contractors concerned is their responsibility.

Swinnerton Camp

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those training exercises at Swinnerton training camp involving the use of radioactive contaminants which have been participated in by American military personnel.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is not our practice to give details of such exercises.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the training exercise at Swinnerton training camp next week involves (a) the use of radioactive contaminants and (b) American military personnel.

Mr. Ian Stewart: This is a routine exercise to test one of our contingency plans. It is not our policy to confirm or deny the use of radioactive contaminant in any particular exercise. No American military personnel will be taking part in the exercise, but some United States observers will be present.

General John Singlaub

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which British Army barracks United States General John Singlaub (rtd) visited in the last three years; and which serving British officers he met.

Mr. Freeman: Information on visits to every Army barracks by such private individuals is not held centrally and could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Household Cavalry (Hunting and Polo)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will give his estimate of the amount of duty-time spent by those Household Cavalry officers who participate regularly in hunting and polo in duty time on those activities;

(2) if he will give an estimate of the proportion of duty-time spent hunting and playing polo by soldiers in the Household Cavalry, as divided between officers and men.

Mr. Freeman: The amount of time spent by officers and soldiers of the Household Cavalry on each of their many and varied duties is not separately recorded. Hunting may be included as part of training in equestrian skills. Polo, as a mounted sport, also has undoubted equestrian training value, but although certain fixtures may be played within duty time, this sport is regarded principally as a recreational activity. Neither hunting nor polo is pursued in duty time to the detriment of any other more pressing military task.

Army (Equestrian Skills)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the relevance of equestrian skills to the United Kingdom's professional Army.

Mr. Freeman: In my reply to a question from my hon. Friend on 27 February 1987, at columns 212-13, I listed the corps and units holding Army horses. Those serving or likely to serve in those units require equestrian skills. In addition, encouraging participation in sporting activities is an important part of maintaining the well-being and physical efficiency of service personnel: equestrian skills are recognised as playing their part in this.

Contracts (Boeing)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on contracts arranged with the assistance of the strategic defence initiative participation office, involving the participation of British academic and industrial researchers in collaborative projects with Boeing Company, under the offset agreements.

Mr. Sainsbury: Several such business arrangements between Boeing and British academic researchers, other research organisations and companies are at various stages of pre-contract discussion, negotiation and preparation, or evaluation.

EMPLOYMENT

National Dock Labour Scheme

85. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will review the future of the national dock labour scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government made clear in the last Parliament that they had no plans to change the operation of the scheme. That remains the present position.

62. Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been made towards the abolition of the dock work labour scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government made clear in the last Parliament that they had no plans to change the operation of the dock labour scheme. That remains the present position.

Dockers (Take-home Pay)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate he has as to the average weekly take-home pay of dockers employed in each port who are not employed in the dock labour scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: I regret that this information is not available.

Health and Safety

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspectors were employed by the Health and Safety Executive during each of the past 10 years; and how many he expects to be employed on 1 January 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: The total number of inspectors employed by HSE during each of the past 10 years is as follows—1 April figures;

	Number
1977	1,352
1978	1,389
1979	1,424
1980	1,435
1981	1,404
1982	1,323
1983	1,276
1984	1,242
1985	1,266
1986	1,231
[1]1987	1,204

[1] On 1 April 1987 37 industrial air pollution inspectors were transferred from HSE to the Department of the Environment.

Figures for 1 January 1988 are not available.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from Leicester concerning the growth of sweatshops and of safety abuse.

Mr. Nicholls: None.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many complaints he has received from the Leicester Mercury during the past 12 months concerning alleged safety infringements in local businesses; and what steps have been taken as a result thereof.

Mr. Nicholls: The local office of the Health and Safety Executive in Leicester has recently received 28 complaints about local businesses from the Leicester Mercury. Those complaints relating to health and safety matters will be investigated as soon as possible. Complaints about other matters have been referred to the appropriate authorities.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report for each year since 1979 to the latest available date (a) the number of inspectors in each Health and Safety Executive Inspectorate, (b) the number of employees covered by each Health and Safety Inspectorate, (c) the number of inspectors per thousand employees covered by each Health and Safety Inspectorate and (d) the total numbers of (i) inspectors employed, (ii) employees covered and (iii) the number of inspectors per thousand employees covered by the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Fowler [holding answer 6 November 1987]: The number of inspectors in each HSE inspectorate; the total number of HSE inspectors; the approximate number of employees covered by all HSE inspectorates and the approximate number of HSE inspectors per thousand employees are as follows:

(1 April figures)	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	[1]1987

[1] To 1 October.

[2] Before April 1986 some inspectors now classed as specialists were categorised as general inspectors.

[3] Figures relate to inspectors employed in HSE as a whole, including specialists, and those inspectors employed outside their 'own' inspectorate.

[4] Her Majesty's Industrial Air Pollution Inspectorate transferred to the Department of the Environment on 1 April 1987.

Figures are not available for the number of employees covered by each HSE Inspectorate.

Job Advertisements (Age Requirements)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received requesting the prohibition of job advertisements that specify age requirements.

Mr. Lee: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many school leavers in Cleveland have remained unemployed for one year, two years and three years or more, respectively, since 1980.

Mr. Lee: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many men in Cleveland over (a) 40 years and (b) 50 years have been unemployed for (a) five years and (b) three years; and what is the average length of continuous unemployment for men aged over (1) 40 years and (2) 50 years in Cleveland.

Mr. Lee: Following is the latest information available:

Male unemployed claimants in Cleveland county—July 1987

	Aged 40 and over	Aged 50 and over
Number unemployed for over five years	2,955	1,645
Number unemployed for over three years	4,952	2,830
Median duration[1] (uncompleted spells)	106 weeks	111 weeks

[1] The median duration is the time spent unemployed exceeded by 50 per cent. of those unemployed on the count day. Mean durations of unemployment are not available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by how much unemployment has fallen in the last 12 months.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library: on 10 September 1987 the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom had fallen by 462,702 over the last 12 months.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, with regard to the 1986 labour force survey, if he will outline in detail, showing data for the northern region separately (a) the numbers out of work in each major occupational group and (b) the proportions of the economically active population that these figures represent.

Mr. Lee: The 1986 labour force survey estimates are as shown in the table.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the total employed labour force in each quarter since January 1970; what has been the total working population in each quarter over the same period; what has the former been as a percentage of the latter throughout this period; and what has been the size of the change in both the employed labour force and the total working population each quarter since 1970.

Mr. Fowler [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987, c. 742]: The figures are set out in the following table. Both the employed labour force and the working population have now been increasing for 17 successive quarters. The employed labour force has increased by 1·36 million since March 1983.

[1] Estimates for self-employed prior to 1971 were updated using national insurance cards. From 1971 estimates are updated using labour force survey. See Employment Gazette. February 1983. pps 55-56.

[2] These figures allow for changes in the coverage of the unemployment statistics from 1971 onwards. Figures before 1971 include those registered as unemployed at employment offices, whereas the figures used from 1971 onwards relate to claimants at unemployment benefit offices, estimated on the current definition.

Regional Tourist Boards

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of (a) county councils and (b) district councils have made a financial contribution to their regional tourist board.

Mr. Lee: Thirty-nine out of 40 county councils and 286 out of 332 district councils make financial contributions through membership of their regional tourist boards.

Women's Employment Rights

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether, in the light of the recommendations of the Women's National Commission, he will drop his proposals regarding employment protection rights for part-timers and pregnant women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I met the Women's National Commission on 5 November to discuss these proposals. We will be considering carefully the points they put.

Benefit Refusals

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of individuals who have been refused benefit as a result of the decisions of adjudication officers in each of the past six years in Dumbarton constituency.

Mr. Lee: Figures are not available by constituency of the number of claimants to unemployment benefit—to whom I take the hon. Member to be referring—who are refused unemployment benefit as a result of the decision of an adjudication officer.

However, in the 12 months ended 30 September 1987, the total number of disallowances made by adjudication officers arising on claims to unemployment benefit in the adjudication office area of Govan, which includes the Dumbarton constituency, was 12,902.

Figures relating to the last six years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in Scotland and in the Fife, Central constituency who have been refused benefit through the decision of an independent adjudication officer, following a restart interview, in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 5 November 1987]: Any refusal of benefit subsequent to a restart interview follows not from the interview itself but from the decision of an independent adjudication officer operating under long-standing legal rules adopted by successive Governments.

The numbers of such decisions which follow a restart interview cannot be separately identified within the total number of decisions which follow from referrals to adjudication officers from unemployment benefit offices.

Job Training Scheme

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which sections of the Sex Discrimination Act 1976 do not apply to people on the job training scheme.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 6 November 1987]: I have made a designation order under section 14(2)(d) of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 which applies all relevant sections of the Act to trainees in the job training scheme and new job training scheme. Those trainees are therefore in the same position with respect to the provisions of the Act as trainees in YTS.

Teachers (Unemployment Benefit)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many teachers are at present drawing unemployment benefit at each office and have declared themselves available for work.

Mr. Lee: The information is not available. Department records are not collated to identify the number of unemployed claimants in industrial occupations who have declared themselves available for work.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action is taken by his Department in respect of those people claiming unemployment benefit who declare themselves to be available for work in occupations where there are known manpower shortages in the area where the claimant resides.

Mr. Lee: All claimants to unemployment benefit, a fundamental condition for the receipt of which is that they must be available for work, are encouraged to make full use of jobcentre services so that they can be helped to secure suitable vacancies. In addition, both jobcentre staff and claimant advisers in UBOs make every effort to ensure that vacancies are brought to the attention of claimants whose skills are in particular demand locally.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many claimants receiving unemployment benefit in the Greater London travel-to-work areas have indicated that they are available for work in occupations relating to the operation of buses and trains.

Mr. Lee: The information is not available. Department records are not collated to identify occupational information on unemployed claimants.

Jobcentres (Greater London)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many vacancies have been notified to jobcentres in the Greater London travel-to-work areas by London Regional Transport and British Rail at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: This information is not available as no central record of vacancies held at jobcentres from individual employers is kept by the employment service in London. To keep such a record would not be cost-effective. I cannot therefore provide the information required except at disproportionate cost.

Settle-Carlisle Railway

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he is currently considering any schemes for the repair and development of the Settle to Carlisle railway using funds from the Manpower Services Commission and workers on community programme schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: J. Jarvis and Sons plc has been invited to conduct a feasibility study on the Settle-Carlisle corridor to consider its employment, training and enterprise potential and, if appropriate, to identify a range of self-contained projects which could be undertaken using the community programme. The Manpower Services Commission has contributed £5,000 towards the cost of the study and the completed report is expected by the end of January 1988.

Mr. John Craig

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow can expect to receive from the Under-Secretary of State for Employment a reply to his letter, dated 14 October, regarding Mr. John Craig of 53 Shore Street, Port Glasgow and other former employees of British Shipbuilders.

Mr. Lee: I will be writing to the hon. Member shortly.

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspectors have been recruited to the nuclear installations inspectorate in the current year.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

Since 1 January 1987 13 nuclear installations inspectors have joined the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate. Further recruitment is presently under way.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new staff are required to bring the nuclear installations inspectorate up to the numbers planned for 1987-88.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

Twelve nuclear installations inspectors are required to bring numbers up to the level planned for 1 April 1988. A continuous recruitment competition is in progress and five candidates are expected to take up post shortly. Further appointments are expected early in the new year.

Benefits (Glasgow, Pollok)

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of claimants in the Glasgow, Pollok constituency who have been refused benefit through the decision of an independent adjudication officer, following a restart interview, in each month since the commencement of the restart scheme.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 30 October 1987]: As my hon. Friend made clear in his reply on 26 October at column 32, any refusal of benefit subsequent to a restart interview follows not from the interview itself but from the decision of an independent adjudication officer operating under long-standing legal rules adopted by successive Governments.

The number of such decisions which follow a restart interview cannot be separately identified within the total number of decisions which follow from referrals to adjudication officers from unemployment benefit offices.

Coal Industry (Injuries)

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will hold an inquiry into why major injuries in the coal industry per 100,000 man shifts have trebled in the last seven years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 2 November 1987]: There are no plans to call an inquiry. Major injury rates over the last seven years are not comparable as two legislative changes widened the definition of major injury to include new categories of injury and these increased the number of accidents reported. The first change was on 1 January 1981 when the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 (NADO) came into force and the second on 1 April 1986 when the Reporting of Injuries Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 (RIDDOR) came into operation. A more accurate reflection of the accident rate is provided by fatal and total accidents which were unaffected by these changes. The coal mining fatal accidents rate has fallen in this period from 0·08 in 1980 per 100,000 manshifts to 0·05 in 1986-87. The total accident rate has also fallen from 72·66 in 1980 to 45·22 in 1986-87.

Job Training Scheme

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many (a) women and (b) men single parents are receiving child-care payments whilst participating on the job training scheme;

(2) whether he has any plans to expand the experimental scheme to the whole of England, Scotland and Wales whereby single parents on the job training scheme can receive payments for child care costs; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 5 November 1987]: The experimental scheme in question began in 10 areas during September. At the end of October, six women who are single parents were receiving child care payments. No men were receiving child care payments. The provision will be evaluated in the new year. It would not be appropriate to make decisions on the future of the scheme until that evaluation is complete.

Restart

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons, nationally and in each region, have been selected for interview under the restart programme in each month since the programme started, and cumulatively up to the latest date: and of these how many had their benefit stopped; how many were placed in a job; how many were placed in a training scheme or programme; and what percentage each of these represents of the total number selected for interview.

Mr. Fowler [pursuant to his reply, 23 October 1987, c. 922]: The number of people selected for interview under the restart programme in each month since the programme began is shown in the table.

The aim of the restart interview is to help an unemployed person into employment by selecting the best way open to them from the wide range of employment, training and job search opportunities available. Around nine out of 10 of those interviewed are made offers which might lead ultimately to employment and 70 per cent. agree to pursue the offer made to them at their restart interview. We do not know how many of those selected for interview are ultimately placed in a job or in a training scheme or programme.

No one can lose their benefit entitlement solely as a result of attending a restart interview.

Action for Jobs Campaign

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from the Liverpool Echo about its action for jobs campaign; what plans he has to deal with the problems it is highlighting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler [holding answer 2 November 1987]: I have received a letter from the editor of the Liverpool Daily Post and Liverpool Echo to which I will reply.

On 2 November I launched the action for jobs campaign which highlighted many enterprise, training and employment opportunities available in the region generally, including Liverpool.

Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list by port the number of dockers employed in the dock labour scheme for each year since 1970.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is as follows. The figures given are as at the end of each year.

Number of Registered Dock Workers

NORTHERN IRELAND

Conway Mill Education Project

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funding has been withdrawn or not renewed for educational initiatives at the Conway Mill education project; what were the reasons for the withdrawal or non-renewal of such funds; and what plans exist to provide alternative educational resources to replace any withdrawn.

Dr. Mawhinney: Educational funding has been withdrawn by the Belfast Education and Library Board in accordance with the Government's policy as stated in the reply given by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on 27 June 1985, at column 451.

Alternative provisions are now being made in a nearby school.

Housing

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give figures on the waiting lists in the areas covered by the following district offices: Downpatrick, Kilkeel, Banbridge, Newry district 1 and Newry district 2.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I am advised by the chairman that at 30 September 1987 the total numbers on the waiting lists and the numbers in the priority group A were as follows:

District Office	Numbers on Waiting List	Numbers in Priority Group A
Downpatrick	593	56
Kilkeel	110	35
Banbridge	413	97
Newry District 1	434	26
Newry District 2	299	29
Total	1,849	243

Prisons

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will make a statement about the seizure of Bibles distributed in Her Majesty's prison Maze by Cardinal O'Feaich;

(2) if he will explain the rules governing the playing of Gaelic and other sports in Her Majesty's prisons in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Stanley: The matters raised by my hon. Friend are the subject of a civil action in the county court in which judgment has not yet been given. It would not be appropriate for me to comment.

Border Incursions

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) on how many occasions since 15 November 1985 Gardai or troops from the Republic of Ireland have crossed the frontier into the United Kingdom; and what representations were made by Her Majesty's Government to the Government of the Republic of Ireland in respect of these incursions;

(2) on how many occasions since 15 November 1985 the Royal Ulster Constabulary and United Kingdom troops have crossed the frontier into the Republic of Ireland; and on how many occasions since 15 November 1985 the Government of the Republic of Ireland have protested to Her Majesty's Government about these occurrences.

Mr. Stanley: I understand how easy it is for members of the security forces operating near the border to make mistakes and accidentally stray outside their respective jurisdictions in the fight against the terrorists who are the common enemy. However, since 15 November 1985 and to date (5 November) the Government have brought to the attention of the Republic of Ireland 16 occasions on which members of the Irish security forces have allegedly crossed the border into Northern Ireland. Of these, the Irish authorities have admitted two, 13 have been denied and one is under investigation. During the same period the Irish Government have brought to our attention 84 occasions on which members of our security forces have allegedly crossed the border into the Republic of Ireland. Of these, the British authorities have admitted 52, 28 have been denied, one is under investigation, and three could not be pursued because of insufficient information.

Kilroot Project

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the implications of proceedings with the completion of the Kilroot phase II project; and if he is now able to announce the likely start date for the installation of plant and the expected completion date of conversion work.

Mr. Viggers: Evaluation of a number of future electricity generation options, including Kilroot phase II, is expected to be completed shortly. Decisions will be taken as quickly as possible, consistent with careful consideration of results.

Fuel Supplies (Disconnections)

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate the number of consumers disconnected by Northern Ireland Electricity in each quarter from the quarter ended 30 June 1981 through to the quarter ended 30 June 1987.

Mr. Viggers: The number of disconnections for debt during this period is as follows:

	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987
Quarter ended
30 June	855	783	298	414	493	716	638
30 September	634	218	231	401	401	687	—
30 December	743	356	284	440	469	654	—
31 March	667	298	335	344	495	562	—

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate the number of disconnections by Northern Ireland Electricity per year as a percentage of average domestic credit consumers for each of the years from the year ended 31 March 1987.

Mr. Viggers: The supply of electricity within Northern Ireland, and disconnection of supply, is the responsibility of Northern Ireland Electricity.

The information requested is as follows:

Year Ended	Percentage
31 March 1986	0·39
31 March 1987	0·54

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what information is available to indicate the numbers remaining disconnected by Northern Ireland Electricity for the year ending 31 March 1986 and 31 March 1987;

(2) what information is available to indicate the numbers remaining disconnected by Northern Ireland Electricity as a percentage of average domestic credit consumers for the year ending 31 March 1986 and 31 March 1987;

(3) what figures are available to indicate the number of consumers remaining disconnected for (a) more than one month and (b) more than three months in each of the years ending 31 March 1986 and 31 March 1987.

Mr. Viggers: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

"Ulster Year Book"

Mr. John David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why the "Ulster Year Book" was not published in the current year; when the next publication is planned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why the "Ulster Year Book" has not been published since 1985; what consultations take place in deciding the date of publication and with whom; and if he will ensure publication this year.

Dr. Mawhinney: The "Ulster Year Book" last appeared in 1985, and there are no plans for further editions.

In taking the decision to cease publication, my Department had regard to the value for money principle and to two factors in particular:

(i) the substantial cost of publication, particularly in terms of staff time, which could not be justified for a publication of which only 500 copies were actually purchased when last published;

(ii) the availability today, in many other forms, of the statistical and descriptive information contained in the year book; these were not available for much of the period during which it was published.

Roadworks (Comber)

Mr. John David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the present roadworks scheme at Comber, County Down, is due to be completed.

Mr. Needham: The reconstruction of Bridge street, Comber, was completed on 16 October 1987.

Education Statistics

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each education and library board in Northern Ireland pupil to teacher ratios, per capita costs and O and A-level pass rates.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 3 November 1987]: Figures relate to the 1985-86 school year and are as follows:

Education and Library Board	PTR for all Grant-aided Schools	per capita cost £
Belfast	17·0	1,300·49
Western	19·0	1,115·11
Northern-Eastern	18·5	1,145·30
South-Eastern	19·0	1,100,15
Southern	19·2	1,084·58

Details of the highest qualifications obtained by school leavers in 1985-86 are as follows:

Education and Library Board	Per cent. with 1 or more A levels	Per cent. with no A levels[1] but 1 or more higher grade O levels
Belfast	31·0	29·4
Western	21·6	33·3
North-Eastern	20·8	36·6
South-Eastern	20·2	35·7
Southern	23·6	35·4

[1] GCE O-level grades A-C and CGE grade 1

Prisoners (Transfers)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many requests have been made by prisoners serving sentences in Northern Ireland for transfer to prisons in Britain since 1968; and how many transfers have been made as a result of these requests.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 3 November 1987]: Reliable records are available only in respect of applications for transfer since June 1973. There has been a total of 113 such applications since then, of which 57 were granted. A number of prisoners have made more than one request.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farmers (Grants)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what grants are available to farmers (a) to maintain ancient hedgerows and (b) to plant new ones.

Mr. Gummer: Under the present farm capital grant scheme, the agriculture improvement scheme, grant is available for the provision, replacement or improvement of hedges, including hedgerow trees. The rates of grant are 60 per cent. in the less favoured areas and 30 per cent. elsewhere.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much grant has been paid out to date under the agriculture improvement scheme for the provision, replacement or improvement of (a) hedges, (b) walls, banks and dykes built of materials traditional to the area in question and (c) gates, stiles and footbridges on public rights of way.

Mr. Gummer: I regret that this information is not available in the form requested. The following are estimates of grant paid in the United Kingdom under the agriculture improvement scheme since 1 April 1986:

	£ million
Hedges and associated gates, stiles and foot bridges	1·4
Traditional walls, banks and dykes and associated gates, stiles and footbridges	1·1

Gates, stiles and foot bridges on public rights of way are not separately identified.

Grants for hedge planting and laying are also available under the agriculture and horticulture development scheme.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what grants are available to farmers (a) to maintain ancient stone walls and (b) to erect new ones.

Mr. Gummer: Under the present farm capital grant scheme, the agriculture improvement scheme, grant is available for the provision, replacement or improvement of walls built of materials traditional to the locality. The rates of grant are 60 per cent. in the less favoured areas and 30 per cent. elsewhere.

Pesticides

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy not to invoke the protection of the Official Secrets Act in relation to information supplied to his Department by chemical companies in connection with tests on pesticides and other hazardous substances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It is the Government's policy to make as much information as possible about pesticides and other substances available to the public. We use a variety of means including the reports of the expert, independent committees which advise Ministers on the safety of such substances. These are supplemented by arrangements for public access to summary evaluations and full study reports of pesticides, under certain safeguards. For food additives reports list references for published data. For unpublished data, arrangements have been made since the beginning of this year for them to be lodged with the British Library for public reference.

Fishing Grounds (Pollution)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department is currently sponsoring into the problem of pollution in the fishing grounds lying between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Gummer: My Department carries out extensive monitoring and research in the Irish sea to assess the effects on fishery resources and food pathways to man of both radioactive and non-radioactive discharges. These studies include assessment of water quality, the chemistry of contaminated sediments, the distribution of fish diseases, and the monitoring of fish and shellfish quality. Results indicate that discharges have no significant impact on fish stocks in the Irish sea.

Lambs (Skipton-Ilkley)

Mr. Curry: To ask the Minister of Agiculture, Fisheries and Food what are the results of his Department's further safety checks on lambs in the Skipton-Ilkley area.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Further to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 6 November, I have now arranged for further monitoring to be carried out in this area. Results of the monitoring of 185 live sheep and lambs from eight flocks in the Keighley, Ilkley, Otley and Skipton areas fall in the range of 0 to 310 Bq/kg total caesium with an average lying around 60 Bq/kg. This is well below the action level of 1000 Bq/kg for restriction on slaughter that we have applied in Cumbria. In addition, forage has been sampled. Thirteen grass samples have been taken from this area and the Harrogate area, all yielding results lower than 50 Bq/kg total caesium. Heather—from seven areas—and bilberries—from two areas—give higher results, up to 500 and 216 Bq/kg respectively though mostly much lower.

Finally, six milk samples from five areas have been analysed; in all cases the caesium levels were less than 20 Bq/litres. None of these results gives cause for concern. Further sampling and analysis is in progress and the results will be reported as soon as they become available. I will publish all results in detail when complete, and deposit them in the Library of the House.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Value Added Tax

86. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy towards value added tax on public transport fares.

Mr. Lilley: The Government's policy is to zero-rate passenger transport on the basis set out in group 10, schedule 5 to the VAT Act 1983.

87. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the European Court of Justice to announce its decision in the case taken by the European Economic Community Commission on 15 September against the United Kingdom regarding the levies of value added tax on new households, gas, electricity, water, sewerage and other services.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my hon. Friend the Paymaster General gave to his question answered on 2 November at column 511.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the net cost to the Exchequer in a full year if capital gains tax were abolished and replaced by the taxation of gains made in less than one year at income tax rates.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The yield of capital gains tax would be reduced by more than 90 per cent. There would be a comparable reduction in the yield of corporation tax on companies' capital gains if gains on assets held for over a year were exempted.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what extra revenue would result if all the indexation on capital gains tax was dropped.

Mr. Norman Lamont: About £600 million at the level of capital gains expected to be realised by individuals and trusts during 1987-88, as estimated for the 1987 Budget. If this change extended to companies' capital gains, there would also be an extra yield of corporation tax of some £500 million.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the revenue lost to the Exchequer in a full year if inheritance tax applied only to estates of over half a million pounds at a flat rate of 50 per cent.

Mr. Norman Lamont: About 80 per cent. of the yield would be lost in a full year at 1987-88 levels.

British Petroleum Share Offer

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total cost of advertising the BP share offer.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The cost to the Government of advertising the BP share offer is currently estimated to be about £18¼ million (excluding VAT).

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether BP shares purchased by the Bank of England will be liable for the second and third instalments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Yes.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether net purchase of BP shares by the Bank of England will be opened up to all part-paid shares, whether sold on or not; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Yes.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to announce the end date for the repurchase arrangement for BP shares.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the advertisement about the Bank scheme printed in the national press on 6 and 7 November.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the total possible liability of the Bank of England in its commitment to repurchase BP shares; if he will specify which department of the bank will finance the repurchase; where the money will come from and what charges will be payable by Her Majesty's Government for the service.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The theoretical maximum liability would arise if the Bank of England repurchased the 2,126 million partly paid shares in the original offer. On the other points, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Islington, South (Mr. Smith) on Thursday 5 November.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Inland Revenue plans to investigate the large bed-and-breakfast deals in BP shares intended to establish tax losses for capital gains tax purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I cannot comment on the tax affairs of individual companies.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he proposes to place any limits on the extent of share repurchase in the event of the market price of part-paid shares falling below 70p; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No; the arrangement is available for all partly paid BP shares.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what price per share Her Majesty's Government are now committed to pay for the BP rights issue.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 6 November 1987]: The subscription price for the new BP shares was £3·30 per share.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what special arrangements for advisory services he proposes for small shareholders who applied for BP shares before the closing date at a price higher than that available on the market.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 3 November 1987]: Small shareholders should seek general advice on their BP shareholdings from their own financial advisers. Small shareholders of part-paid BP shares will be eligible to take part in the special arrangements announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 29 October at column 540.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the loss incurred by underwriters and sub underwriters, less commission, and less allowances for bonus shares and interest on the instalments who sell block shares to the Bank of England as against the privatising price on Friday 30 October.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 3 November 1987]: The difference between the part-paid underwritten price of 120p and the Bank offer price for part-paid shares of 70p is 50p per BP share. The opening price of part-paid BP shares on 3 November was 81p. United Kingdom primary underwriters will receive aggregate underwriting commission of 0·018 per cent. and the United Kingdom sub-underwriters will receive 1 per cent. sub-underwriting commission at the fixed offer price of 330p for the underwritten shares: overseas underwriters received combined underwriting and selling commissions of 1·058 per cent. Any loss realised by any underwriter or sub-underwriter will depend on a combination of factors including commissions but particularly the price at which it sells any shares (if at all). Underwriters and sub-underwriters are not eligible for bonus shares.

Copies of the underwriting agreements have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether it is his intention to allow applicants who applied for a small number of BP shares at a price higher than the market price and who then try and cancel the cheques and applications to be sued.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 3 November 1987]: When they signed their application forms, applicants agreed not to revoke their application. Any applicants who have stopped their cheques will be asked to pay.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the effect of his decision to provide a floor for the BP share price on the willingness of foreign investors to buy the shares and on the proportion of BP shares held overseas.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 3 November 1987]: The purpose of the arrangements made with the Bank of England announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 29 October at column 540 is to ensure that there are orderly aftermarkets in BP shares. An orderly aftermarket will allow both overseas and domestic investors to take investment decisions on their merits.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the sums spent on advertising the BP share issue through (a) individual newspapers, (b) local radio stations, (c) television companies and (d) other media.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 30 October 1987]: The total cost to the Government of advertising the BP share offer is estimated to be about £18·25 million (excluding VAT) of which about £5·9 million is for newspaper advertising, including publication of the prospectus, about £6·5 million for television advertising, and about £0·95 million for other media. The balance is mainly for production costs. There was no advertising on local radio stations.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total cost to date of advertising and publicity associated with the sale of BP shares.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 2 November 1987]: The total United Kingdom marketing cost to the Government in the BP share sale is estimated at about £39 million (excluding VAT).

Savings Interest

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he plans to introduce legislation to enable him to deduct an amount equivalent to employee's national insurance contributions from interest on savings.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have no such plans at present.

Tax Evasion

Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many prosecutions there were in each of the past 11 years for tax evasion; and how many of these resulted in convictions.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Information concerning the Inland Revenue is available only in respect of the number of persons prosecuted. The details are:

	Number of persons prosecuted	Number of persons convicted
1976-77	326	317
1977-78	172	166
1978-79	188	180
1979-80	150	142
1980-81	189	172
1981-82	176	146

1984-85	239	233
1985-86	321	309
1986-87	326	314

These figures include convictions obtained by the police for tax frauds in connection with the construction industry tax deduction scheme. The numbers relating to this category were:

	Number
1976-77	149
1977-78	48
1978-79	22
1979-80	10
1980-81	15
1981-82	7
1982-83	3
1983-84	5
1984-85	8
1985-86	63
1986-87	89

These figures supersede those supplied in written replies to my hon. Friend on 25 July 1986 at columns 662-3 and to the hon. Member for Tyne Bridge (Mr. Clelland) on 2 March 1987 at columns 521.

The details in respect of VAT prosecutions are:

	Prosecutions	Convictions
1976-77	77	76
1977-78	142	135
1978-79	107	103

Sub-Saharan Africa

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been achieved in debts relief for sub-Saharan Africa following the recent annual meetings of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank.

Mr. Lilley: The United Kingdom has already converted aid loans to grants for 14 sub-Saharan African countries at a cost of £280 million and other countries are following suit. To date, six African countries have been granted longer grace and repayment periods by the Paris Club. Discussions with other creditors on interest rate reductions on officially guaranteed rescheduled debt are continuing.

EC Budget

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide details of the amounts attributed to each of the factors mentioned in the Autumn Statement which resulted in his increasing by £510 million his January 1987 estimate of the 1987-88 United Kingdom net contribution to the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Autumn Statement projection of net payments to Community institutions represents an entirely new forecast of all elements in our contributions to and receipts from Community institutions. The main reasons for the increase in the projected outturn for 1987-88, compared with the estimate in the last public expenditure White Paper, include a shortfall in agricultural receipts of a little over £200 million, higher than expected payments of agricultural levies and customs duties (£86 million), the payment on 1 August of a VAT adjustment in respect of earlier years (£84 million), and a £140 million payment of customs duties and agricultural levies advanced from next April to next March (and hence from 1988-89 into 1987-88).

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what manner the value added tax base of EEC contributions by the United Kingdom, referred to in the Autumn Statement, was reassessed; if a comparable reassessment of the value added tax base of other member states was also made by the Commission; and by what amount the United Kingdom value added tax contributions were increased in consequence of this reassessment.

Mr. Brooke: The Government make forecasts of the VAT base in both the United Kingdom and the Community as a whole in order to project the United Kingdom's likely VAT payments and VAT share in future years. The forecast for the United Kingdom's VAT base used when preparing the Autumn Statement projection of net payments to Community institutions was revised upwards quite substantially (compared with that underlying the projection in the last public expenditure White Paper) to take account of the buoyancy of VAT receipts in 1986 and 1987, and the likely growth of consumers' expenditure in the United Kingdom. Only relatively small changes were made to the forecast of the Community's VAT base. The increases in our projected VAT payments before abatement compared with those assumed in the last public expenditure White Paper are £3 million in 1987-88, £74 million in 1988-89 and £266 million in 1989-90.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer why he has revised upwards in the Autumn Statement his January 1987 estimates of the net contribution to be made by the United Kingdom to the EEC in the years 1988-89 and 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The main reason why the Autumn Statement projection of net payments to Community institutions in 1988-89 and 1989-90 is higher than that in the last public expenditure White Paper is that we have revised downwards our assumed share of agricultural receipts from 8½ per cent. to 6½ per cent., reducing receipts by over £300 million in each of the two years. In addition, we have revised upwards the estimate of our VAT payments before abatement (by £74 million in 1988-89 and £266 million in 1989-90), as well as our likely payments of agricultural levies and customs duties in both years. The underlying deterioration in our net payments in 1989-90 is partly offset by an assumed increase in our Fontainebleau abatement of around £250 million.

Rating Reform

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if employees paying poll tax for live-in employees will be entitled to charge such payments to business expenses.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Yes. An employer who pays the community charge for an employee as part of his remuneration package will normally be able to claim a deduction for tax purposes.

Information Services

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list by grade the personnel currently employed in the information division within Her Majesty's Treasury.

Mr. Brooke: On 1 November 1987, the personnel employed in the information division within Her Majesty's Treasury were:

Grade	Number
Grade 5	1
Grade 6	1
Grade 7 (Principal Information Officer)	2
Senior Information Officer	3
Senior Executive Officer	1
Executive Officer	1
Administrative Officer	4
Administrative Assistant	1
Personal Secretary	2
Typist	1

In addition, one Grade 6 (Chief Information Officer B) is assigned to Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency.

Residential Property

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any proposals to bring forward a tax on residential property.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 5 November 1987]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has no such proposals.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the present cost to central Government of maintaining lists of rateable values.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 5 November 1987]: Inland Revenue valuation officers are charged with the statutory duty of maintaining valuation lists of the rateable values of properties for each rating authority in England and Wales. This function involves them in all the valuation aspects of current rating and the running costs are about £56 million annually at current prices (Supply Estimates 1987-88, Class XIX, Vote 7).

Diplomats (Local Authority Services)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the contributions paid by each grouping of foreign diplomats to the cost of local authority services for the latest convenient period; how contributions are fixed; and what arrears are outstanding from any grouping.

Mr. Major [holding answer 5 November 1987]: I regret that this information cannot be provided without disproportionate cost.

Share Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the percentage decline in the share price of BP, other oil companies, and ICI from 8 October to 29 October which led him to place a floor under the BP price.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 3 November 1987]: The reasons for establishing arrangements, to be operated by the Bank of England, to ensure that there are orderly aftermarkets in BP shares were given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his statement on 29 October at column 540.

The information requested about share price is:

Company	Share price £ 8 October—29 October (SEAQ and NYSE close for United Kingdom and United States prices respectively)		Percentage change in price
1. BP	3·67	2·59	−29
2. Shell	13·50	10·38	−23
3. Texaco	24·14	17·18	−29
4. Burmah	5·52	3·68	−33
5. Britoil	3·20	2·06	−36
6. Exxon	28·36	23·88	−16
7. British Gas (part-paid)	1·72	1·45	−16
8. ICI	16·38	9·89	−40

Dividend Income

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each year since 1979 the number of persons reporting dividend income to the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 2 November 1987]: The number of single people and married couples reporting receipt of dividend income to the Inland Revenue in each year since 1979-80 is estimated to be in the region of 1½ million. The number of such reports depends upon the number of taxpayers who are asked to complete tax returns. Fewer taxpayers have been asked to complete tax returns in recent years. Since liability to income tax at the basic rate on United Kingdom dividend income is satisfied at source, an operational need for tax offices to know about the receipt of dividend income arises at present only in possible cases of liability to higher rate tax, restriction of age allowance, repayment of tax and certain other limited circumstances.

It is estimated from a Treasury-Stock Exchange survey that early this year there were 8½ million people holding shares—almost three times the number in 1979.

Property Relief

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make an estimate of the cost to public funds of extending 50 per cent. property relief to all unquoted company shareholdings.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 28 October 1987]: The cost of extending the 50 per cent. inheritance tax business relief to all unquoted company share holdings is estimated at £1 million-£2 million in the full year.

Poverty and Unemployment

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has that disincentive to work results from the poverty and unemployment traps.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 26 October 1987]: I have been asked to reply.

There is little doubt that the poverty and unemployment traps can influence decisions on work. In particular, the academic literature suggests that benefit levels can affect the time spent unemployed and that tax rates influence hours of work. The degree of such influence is a matter of continuing academic debate, but in general it appears that it varies according to a number of factors including age, gender and marital status. Up-to-date information on some of these issues will be obtained from a study the Department is currently conducting of people who became unemployed in the spring of 1987.

TRANSPORT

London Regional Transport

12. Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish his guidelines to London Regional Transport concerning future fare levels.

Mr. David Mitchell: New objectives for LRT will be announced shortly.

13. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects to hold a meeting with the chairman of London Regional Transport to discuss the future of London Regional Transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: I meet the chairman of London Regional Transport from time to time to discuss a range of issues.

20. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about fare rises on London Regional Transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: Since LRT announced its new fare levels from January 1988 the number of representations received by my right hon. Friend has been nil.

56. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce his new set of financial and performance objectives for London Regional Transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: Very shortly.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has regarding the costs of removing graffiti from London Regional Transport buses, trains and property in each of the last three years.

Mr. David Mitchell: London Regional Transport estimates that in the current year the cost of cleaning graffiti from Underground trains and structures will be about £750,000 million and that the cost in 1986-87 was about £500,000 million. No estimates are available for 1985-86. The cost of vandalism including graffiti to buses and structures owned by London Buses is estimated to be £1·75 million in 1987-88 and 1986-87, and £1·5 million in 1985-86.

Bus Services (Deregulation)

15. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the operation of bus services since deregulation.

16. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the operation of bus services since deregulation.

22. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the operation of bus services since deregulation.

54. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the effects of bus deregulation in urban areas.

Mr. David Mitchell: After some initial teething troubles when the policy was first implemented, representations have now declined to a trickle as operators have responded to the opportunities and the public have become accustomed to the new services.

47. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the first year of deregulated public passenger transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: Deregulation has got off to a very good start. As we envisaged, competition has caused operators to reduce costs while maintaining, and in many cases improving, the level of services. There are more operators than a year ago, bus mileage is up, the level of subsidy has been reduced, and the industry is now in a much better position to face the future.

57. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to make a further statement about bus deregulation in London.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am currently discussing with the chairman new objectives for London Regional Transport for the next three years. I expect those objectives to include further reference to our policy of extending the benefits of deregulation to bus users in London.

National Bus Company

55. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many companies have bought more than one National Bus Company subsidiary.

Mr. David Mitchell: Four.

61. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many National Bus Company companies have been sold.

50. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff or management buyouts have been approved in the sale of National Bus Company subsidiaries.

35. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of the sales of National Bus Company subsidiaries.

Mr. David Mitchell: Forty-nine of the National Bus Company's 72 subsidiaries have now been sold, 29 of them to management or employee teams.

NBC's report and accounts, which were published on 27 October, forecast that all sales will be completed well before the statutory deadline of January 1989, and that total proceeds will substantially exceed the book value of assets sold.

I congratulate NBC on the excellent progress it has made.

Network SouthEast

17. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the level and quality of services in British Rail's Network SouthEast.

Mr. David Mitchell: Over much of the south-east services are either meeting or approaching the quality of service targets. But there is room for improvement. I am monitoring the situation closely. Satisfactory standards on certain routes are dependent upon projected investment being completed.

45. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he proposes to take on the findings of the inquiry conducted by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission into Network SouthEast.

59. Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he proposes to take on the findings of the inquiry conducted by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission into Network SouthEast.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am discussing the report with British Rail, which will be making its formal response in the new year.

British Rail Engineering Ltd.

18. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will discuss with the chairman of British Rail the programme of redundancies recently announced by British Rail Engineering Limited; and if he will make a statement.

21. Miss Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has met the chairman of British Rail to discuss the programme of redundancies recently announced by British Rail Engineering Limited; and if he will make a statement.

41. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to discuss with the chairman of British Rail the recently announced redundancies by British Rail Engineering Limited; and if he will make a statement.

62. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has discussed the programme of redundancies recently announced by British Rail Engineering Limited with the chairman of British Rail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: No. The redundancies recently announced by BREL are management matters for them and the British Railways Board. The British Rail chairman has kept us informed of BREL's plans.

East Coast Main Line

19. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with the chairman of British Rail about the future of the east coast main line.

Mr. Channon: None.

49. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss the east coast rail electrification programme.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of British Rail from time to time to discuss a number of matters.

Roads (Maintenance Expenditure)

23. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the level of local authority expenditure on road maintenance.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 1986-87 we increased provision for local road maintenance by 15 per cent. and in 1987-88 by 13 per cent., but local authorities budgeted to spend £148 million less than planned in 1987-88. The spending plans for 1988-89, as announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer last Tuesday, includes £1,264 million for local highway maintenance, the same as for 1987-88. This will enable local authorities to increase their spending on roads maintenance by 13 per cent.

33. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the trend in expenditure on the capital maintenance of national roads since 1978-79.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Expenditure has increased from £46 million in 1978-79 to £220 million in 1986-87, an increase of nearly two and a half time in real terms. As well as keeping pace with current deterioration, we are catching up on the backlog of renewal work arising from earlier years.

Trees

24. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many trees his Department has planted since 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have planted 13 million trees and shrubs in this period along our motorways and other trunk roads.

Roads (Design Costs)

25. Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what have been the effects of fee competition for costs of design and supervision of roads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On average there has been a 25 per cent. reduction on the standard fee rates previously applying. This should mean that we will save about 15 per cent. on the total preparation and supervision costs for projects allocated through competitive tendering.

Motorways (Speed Limits)

26. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to review speed limits on motorways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The current normal maximum motorway speed limit was fully reviewed in 1984 and 1985. It was concluded that the 70 mph limit achieved the right balance between safety and the need for efficient and convenient travel. We have no plans to change the current normal maximum limit.

Transport Act 1985

27. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to review the working of the Transport Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Department will shortly be issuing a consultation document describing possible adjustments to the registration system suggested by experience during the first year of deregistration.

Air Traffic Control

28. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to accelerate the modernisation of the United Kingdom air traffic control systems.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible for managing and planning the improvement of the national air traffic services. Its latest corporate plan projects an increasing rate of investment in air traffic services over the next five years.

51. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning the safety standards of air traffic control at Heathrow airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Safety standards of air traffic control at Heathrow airport are the responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority who implements them in accordance with the standards set by the International Civil Aviation Organisation. We have full confidence that in discharging these duties the Civil Aviation Authority aims to achieve the highest levels of safety.

44. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received concerning the ability of United Kingdom air traffic control systems to meet the demands of United Kingdom civil aviation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) on 26 October at column.58.

Taxis

29. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to amend the present powers of local authorities to limit the number of taxi licences in their area.

Mr. David Mitchell: No.

Non-Passenger Train Services (Halifax)

30. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about British Rail's non-passenger train services through Halifax in Calderdale.

Mr. David Mitchell: None, but if the hon. Member is aware of a problem perhaps she will write to me.

Motorways

31. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement as to his programme of investment in the motorway network.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Since 1979, we have invested over £1·5 billion on new motorway construction schemes adding 285 miles to the network. Our forward programme provides further investment of some £1 billion in new motorway construction. These schemes will add a further 200 miles to the network when completed.

We intend that future renewal should keep pace with deterioration and provide for elimination of the backlog of repairs, built up during the 1970s, by the early 1990s. We expect to spend £128 million this year and similar amounts in future years.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the total amounts spent on repairs to the motorway system in England and Wales in each of the financial years from 1974-75 to date.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is not available for years prior to 1979. Figures for expenditure on structural repairs to motorways in England from 1979 onwards are given below. The motorway in Wales is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Wales.

Financial year	Expenditure £ million
1979-80	23·7
1980-81	49·4
1981-82	74·4
1982-83	95·3
1983-84	93·9
1984-85	122·9
1985-86	86·1
1986-87	[1]115·0

[1] Estimate.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what circumstances motorway lanes are closed, ostensibly for repairs, when no repairs are actually taking place.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Some lane closures are kept on overnight or during bad weather when no work is taking place if conditions are such that removal would endanger either workmen or road users. There are also cases in which work is proceeding but is not apparent, such as when concrete is hardening. The Department's instructions to its agents emphasise the need to minimise coning off and to complete the works and reopen lanes as soon as possible.

Public Transport (Fares)

32. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has issued advice to local authorities on the level of fares set by those authorities for public transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: Advice is contained in circular 5/85 concerning the Service Subsidy Agreements (Tendering) Regulations 1985.

Isabella Colliery, Blyth

34. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is yet in a position to issue a grant under the British Railways Act 1974, section 8, to upgrade a section of railway known as Isabella colliery, Blyth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: My Department is still awaiting adequately detailed information from British Coal. Until that is available, I am unable to judge the financial case for grant.

Lighthouse Tenderships

36. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the commissioners of the Northern Lighthouse Board concerning lighthouse tenderships.

Mr. David Mitchell: The board's lighthouse tender requirements—and those of the other general lighthouse authorities—were reviewed earlier this year by Arthur Young Management Consultants. They reported in June and my Department is discussing the implementation of their recommendations with each of the authorities.

European Air Fares

37. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the latest progress towards a freezer market in European air fares.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I hope that the EC aviation package, which includes measures to liberalise air fares, will be adopted at the next meeting of the Transport Council, scheduled for 7 December. We are doing all we can to achieve this.

British Airways (Merger)

38. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the implications for civil aviation policy of the proposed merger between British Airways and British Caledonian.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The proposed merger was referred by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, which has now submitted its report and recommendations to him. Members of Parliament, several airlines, other interested bodies and members of the public have made representations to my right hon. and noble Friend both before the referral and subsequently.

Cars and Motor Cycles (Headlights)

39. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy not to approve recommendations that drivers of cars and motor cycles should have their headlights on during the day.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Motor cyclists are difficult to see in traffic. Research clearly shows that they are more easily visible if they use one or more of the conspicuity aids available. We therefore recommend the use of dipped headlamps in daylight. For car drivers the advice is the same in conditions of poor visibility, not at other times.

Air Safety

40. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on current standards of air safety.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Aviation safety is the statutory responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority. Despite the increase in the number of air traffic movements over the past years, the number of incidents involving public transport aircraft in risk-bearing air misses has declined from 32 in 1977 to 12 in 1986.

Manchester International Airport

42. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the passenger growth at Manchester international airport in the last 12 months.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Civil Aviation Authority statistics show that the number of terminal passengers at Manchester airport increased by 19 per cent. in the period August 1986 to July 1987, compared with the previous 12 months.

British Rail

43. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the Government cash subsidies for British Rail for each year respectively, from 1979 to 1987.

Mr. David Mitchell: The figures for Government support for the British Railways Board taken from the final claims for grant in compensation for the public service obligation under EEC regulation 1191/69 and section 3 of the Railways Act 1974 and for level crossings grant under EC regulation 1192/69 from 1979 to 1987-88 are as follows:

	£ million
1979	498·1
1980	591·4
1981	766·6
1982	835·6
1983	873·0
1984-85	1088·9
1985-86	839·7
1986-87	733·4
1987-88	814·5

1984-85 is a 15-month period reflecting a change in the British Railways Board financial year. The figures for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 remain provisional; final claims have not yet been agreed. All figures are cash.

64. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will next be meeting the chairman of British Rail; and what will be discussed.

Mr. David Mitchell: I shall be having a discussion with Sir Robert Reid next week to discuss British Rail performance generally.

A642 (Oulton-Woodlesford Bypass)

46. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress made on the development of the A642 Oulton and Woodlesford bypass to the south of Leeds.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: An announcement will be made shortly about the outcome of the east of Leeds study. The study area includes the A642 from the M62 to the A1.

Channel Tunnel

48. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has had discussions with British Rail or Eurotunnel on the planning of through routes from regions such as south Wales to European Community capitals after the Channel tunnel is opened.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. The planning of Channel Tunnel rail services is a matter for British Rail. Section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act requires British Rail to prepare a plan by the end of 1989 setting out the measures it proposes to take in order to disperse rail traffic to different parts of the United Kingdom. British Rail intends to consult as widely as possible with interested parties in the preparation of this plan, and it has already collaborated with Eurotunnel on a regional survey of business opportunities.

London Underground Ltd.

52. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to privatise London Underground Ltd.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so at the moment.

M25

53. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the most recent figures for the volume of traffic using the M25 since it was completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The latest figures available are for September. The table below shows the average weekday flow for each section of the road.

M25 Traffic flows

Section	16-hour weekday flow
1-2	[1]81,400
2-3	[1]65,500
3-4	59,000
4-5	63,000
5-6	82,000
6-7	90,000
7-8	101,000
8-9	91,000
9-10	95,000
10-11	114,000
11-12	126,000
12-13	[1]119,400
13-14	140,000

[2] August average weekday flow (the automatic counting loop was out of action in September).

Roads (London)

58. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about plans and progress on new roads and an improved roads system within the metropolis.

63. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to relieve traffic congestion on roads in London for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The White Paper "Policy for Roads in England 1987" (Cm. 125) lists over 30 major trunk road improvement schemes in London with an estimated cost of about £1 billion. This includes about £600 million for improving the road system around docklands and in east London. Other major priorities are completing comprehensive improvement of the North Circular road and the A40 Western avenue.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport opened the A20 Sidcup bypass last week. The A406 south Woodford-Barking relief road and the Rochester way relief road are due to be completed early next year.

We are about to begin work on the second stage of the four London assessment studies.

A number of other studies are in hand, including a review of low cost, high value schemes with emphasis on accident prevention.

London boroughs are carrying out 30 major local road schemes costing over £300 million supported by transport supplementary grant, including seven new schemes costing £60 million added this year.

Road Links (Bristol)

60. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to improve road links between the south coast ports and Bristol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have nothing to add to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern) on Tuesday 3 November at column 655.

Pacer Trains (Sunderland-Newcastle)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will discuss with the chairman of British Rail the problems of running pacer trains between Sunderland and Newcastle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: It would not be appropriate to do this since it is an operational matter for British Rail.

A629/A650 (Airedale Route)

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make a further announcement about the section of the A629/A650 Airedale route between Cottingley Bar and the Shipley eastern bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: An announcement will be made as soon as possible. Alternative options are still being examined, following the public consultation exercise.

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make a further announcement about stage 3 of the A629/A650 Airedale route.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I hope to publish draft orders for stage 3 of the Airedale route early in the new year.

Motorway Safety

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further action he intends to take to improve safety on motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Motorways are Britain's safest roads carrying 14 per cent. of all traffic and accounting for only 2 per cent. of accidents.

We have a continuing research and development programme into safety fences and barriers, and we are closing cross over points where they are not essential.

Better control, communication, and signalling are being installed. We are monitoring systems of automatic incident detection.

We have developed fog detectors and are installing them on a trial basis on particular fog prone sections to warn motorists. We are experimenting with "Keep your distance" and "Keep left except when overtaking" signs to improve driving discipline, and planning an experiment with 70 mph signs on a short stretch of motorway to study its effect on drivers.

The Department will support the 1988 national motorway safety campaign by the police. We are discussing with the police wider use of mandatory speed limits at roadworks and experimenting with new technology for monitoring traffic.

The rate of injury accidents on motorways has fallen by one third over 15 years.

Most motorway crashes and collisions are caused by excessive speed, inadequate space between vehicles, inattention, alcohol and fatigue.

North Committee

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will consider the recommendations of the North committee on road safety; and what further consultations he expects to make on this subject.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: As soon as we receive the review's report, which we hope will be by the end of the year. We do not have specific plans for further consultation yet.

Double Decker Buses (Hirings)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the maximum weight restrictions and maximum passenger capacity over and above the maximum seating capacity of a double decker bus hired out for private charter; and how these limits are enforced.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The carrying capacity of a bus or coach used for hire or reward as a public service vehicle for both seated and standing passengers, as determined in accordance with regulations by one of the Department of Transport's certifying officers, must be marked on the vehicle. It is an offence to carry more passengers on a PSV than it has been certified to carry, except that three seated children, each of whom was under 14 at the beginning of the school year, may count as two passengers. Standing passengers are not allowed on the upper deck of a double-decked PSV. Enforcement is a matter for the Department's traffic examiners and the police.

The potential maximum operational weight of a PSV is taken into account by the certifying officer when determining its carrying capacity, so that under normal circumstances a PSV should never exceed whichever is the lower of either its maximum design weight or the national weight limits. Enforcement by means of in-use weight checks, other than the checks carried out at certification, has not been considered necessary.

Intersections (Congestion)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies he has undertaken to relieve congestion of traffic at road intersections where hold-ups regularly occur.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Studies are frequently undertaken to investigate the cause of traffic problems on the trunk road network, including congestion at interchanges, and to consider possible solutions. The scale and type of study carried out depends on the particular problem. A comprehensive list of studies previously undertaken is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Roads (Durability)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what comparisons have been undertaken of the durability of United Kingdom motorway and dual carriageway roads with those in other countries within the EEC.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Studies of this kind are of limited value. There are differences in climate and traffic characteristics. Attitudes to the economic appraisal of highway construction and maintenance also differ. We maintain, with our European partners, a continuous exchange of information on the design, construction and maintenance of national roads, including factors affecting durability.

London City Airport

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if it is intended that the British Aerospace 146 aircraft will be licensed to fly to London's City airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Runway limits and maximum permitted noise levels rule out the use of London City airport by BAe 146 aircraft. Changes to these constraints would require a planning applications.

Traffic Commissioners

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is satisfied that his Department employs enough traffic commissioners to ensure that local commercial bus services operate in accordance with registration particulars and other statutory requirements.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am satisfied that the traffic commissioners, who are appointed by the Secretary of State, are sufficient in number and have adequate resources to carry out their independent statutory duties.

Vehicle Inspectorate

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he has taken to strengthen the vehicle inspectorate since the enactment of the Transport Act 1985; and whether the Act has led to any increase in the need for corrective action by the inspectorate.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This year the vehicle inspectorate will do an extra 13 per cent. more work on public service vehicles, some of which will be corrective action.

Public Service Vehicle Drivers

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how his Department monitors the driving hours, breaks and rest periods of part-time public service vehicle drivers who may also undertake other driving or non-driving employment; and whether he is satisfied with the effectiveness of this monitoring.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Driving hours, breaks and rest periods of all PSV drivers, whether full-time or part-time, are subject to regular checks by the police and traffic examiners. Traffic examiners make roadside checks and also visit operators' premises to check tachograph charts and drivers work records. Batches of tachograph charts are also checked by the tachograph screening equipment in traffic area offices or computer bureaux. Any irregularities discovered are followed up and reported for possible prosecution.

About 100,000 PSV drivers tachograph charts will be checked in 1987-88 which is substantially more than the number checked in 1986-87.

Uncontrolled Air-space

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which commercial passenger airline flights regularly traverse uncontrolled United Kingdom air-space south of a line from the Severn to the Wash; and if he will name the airlines and airports concerned.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible, through the national air traffic services, for all aspects of United Kingdom air-space management. The authority has told me that the information requested is not readily available and could not be provided except at disproportionate expense.

East Leeds (Traffic)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the report on traffic in east Leeds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have received the report of the consultants. We hope to make an announcement soon.

Eurocity Express

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will call for a report from the Civil Aviation Authority as to why a dispensation was given to Eurocity Express to fly two Dash-7 aircraft from London City airport without certification of airworthiness; if these aircraft are still using the airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority, which is wholly responsible for aviation safety regulations, has told me that Eurocity Express Dash-7 aircraft were not given a dispensation to fly from London City airport without certification of airworthiness. Both aircraft were and are appropriately certificated.

Settle to Carlisle Line

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to make an announcement on the future of the Settle to Carlisle railway line.

Mr. David Mitchell: In due course.

Seafarers (Criminal Convictions)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether seafarers convicted while at sea for merchant shipping offences, and whose fines are consequently paid by shipping companies where such an offence is considered minor, will have a right of appeal against criminal record where future livelihood may be at stake.

Mr. David Mitchell [holding answer 6 November 1987]: Offences committed against the Merchant Shipping Acts are treated by the courts in the same manner as all other crimes of whatever magnitude and the rights of appeal against conviction are the same.

Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list at the latest available date by port the number of dockers employed under the dock labour scheme for whom no work exists.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that this information is not available in the form requested. The fact that a docker is declared to be surplus does not necessarily mean that no work exists.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Mr. M. C. Ward

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why the entitlement appeal lodged by Mr. M. C. Ward of Old Victoria, Sicklesmere, Bury St. Edmunds, Suffolk, in November 1986 has still not been dealt with; and if he will take steps to improve the arrangements for typing statements of case in his Department, in view of the fact that a statement of Mr. Ward's case, prepared by his Department, was ready for typing on 6 January but was not actually typed until April.

Mr. Portillo: Further medical evidence is required to deal with Mr. Ward's appeal. It will be obtained as quickly as possible, but is likely to take some time. I very much regret the delay in typing the statement of case. The typing difficulties at the time have now been resolved, and work is up to date.

Means-tested Benefits

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has made of the numbers of people who, but for child benefit, would be entitled to means-tested benefit; and what would be the number of their dependants.

Mr. Scott: On the basis of benefit rates from April 1988 and expected claiming patterns it is estimated that around 500,000 families with 1 million dependent children would, but for child benefit, be entitled to income-related benefits.

Banstead Mental Hospital

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans are envisaged for the future use of the Banstead mental illness hospital.

Mrs. Currie: Banstead was one of the first of the large Victorian mental illness institutions to close in 1986 when patients were either moved to community placements or other hospitals.

The North West Thames regional health authority is now in the process of seeking a buyer for the site and buildings.

Any disposal of the Banstead hospital site is the responsibility of the North West Thames regional health authority. For further information the hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the authority.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will review the proposal in the forthcoming housing benefit regulations not to allow users of community alarms for the elderly to claim benefit for the cost.

Mr. Portillo: The draft regulations for the reformed housing benefit scheme, laid before Parliament on 3 November 1987, ensure that housing benefit will continue to be available to help with the cost of emergency alarm systems provided in rented accommodation, where the accommodation is particularly suitable for and occupied by elderly, sick or disabled people.

Retirement Pension

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will estimate the average weekly state basic retirement pension in payment in 1979-80 and payable after the uprating in 1988-89, respectively, giving the number of retirement pensions in payment during these two years.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is included in the table. These figures differ from basic retirement pension levels because they include awards of retirement pension at less than 100 per cent. The average amount of basic retirement pension for women includes both pensions based on their own contributions, and pensions based on their husbands' contributions. The figures exclude pensioners living outside Great Britain.

	Average amount of basic RP-MEN £	Number of men paid a basic RP (Thousands)	Average amount of basic RP—Women £	Number of women paid a basic RP (Thousands)

April 1988-April 1989 (estimate)	40·80	3,225	38·40	6,123

Children (Hearing Impairment)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out in the Official Report the figures for children and young people who have suffered from (a) meningitis, (b) mumps or (c) measles for each of the years from 1981 to 1986; how many subsequently suffered from a permanent hearing impairment; and how many of these were identified as a result of routine audiological tests.

Mrs. Currie: The notifications for measles and acute meningitis are as set out. Mumps is not a notifiable disease and figures are not therefore available for it. However, mumps is known to lead to approximately 1,200 hospital admissions a year in England and Wales.

We do not collect statistics on hearing impairment as a result of these diseases, but a recent study demonstrated that hearing impairment as a result of bacterial meningitis occurred in 5 to 30 per cent. of cases.

Oswestry District General Hospital

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about proposed closure of Oswestry district general hospital by Shropshire health authority; and if he will sanction extra finance to avert the potentially deleterious effect on health services for the constituents of the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that Shropshire health authority is considering a number of proposals related to the opening of the new hospital at Telford in 1989. Any proposal involving the closure or change of use of an existing hospital must be subject to the usual consultation procedures. If the community health council objects to the closure, it can only be affected with the agreement of the regional health authority and Ministers. At that stage we would consider carefully all the representations that had been made to us.

Storm Damage

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what steps he is taking to fund the Brighton health authority to meet the £750,000 million cost of repair to buildings following recent hurricane storm damage which cannot by law be covered by insurance;

(2) what steps he is taking to fund the Brighton health authority to meet the cost of approximately £250,000 million of repair or replacement of its computer system following recent hurricane storm damage.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to compensate the Maidstone district health authority for the damage to National Health Service property incurred in the recent hurricane.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friends to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) on 4 November.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received about storm damage to National Health Service property in the South East Thames regional health authority area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Questions about storm damage in the South East Thames regional health authority area have been received from four hon. Members, and a further three right hon. or hon. Members have written to Ministers. The chairman of the regional health authority has also written.

As explained in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) on 4 November, information is being assessed and we shall be considering the position in the light of that assessment. I would take this opportunity to express my thanks to all the staff in the National Health Service and others whose efforts during that night and subsequently helped to minimise the effects on patients and services in very difficult and frightening conditions.

Hospital Staff (Attacks)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the figures for the total number of attacks by members of the public on National Health Service staff in hospitals for each region for the last five years; and if he will give the figure for each region for each of the last five years.

Mrs. Currie: This information is not held centrally.

AIDS

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the estimated number of carriers, cases and deaths due to infection with HIV, by region, age, and sex, for 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Newton: Cases of AIDS and positive results of HIV antibody tests are reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre for the United Kingdom, excluding Scotland. The Department of Health publishes monthly breakdowns of AIDS cases by patient characteristics and by region, and quarterly breakdowns of positive HIV antibody tests. Copies are in the Library.

It is not possible to make accurate estimates of the numbers of people infected with HIV for the reasons given in my reply of 26 October to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) at column 191.

Medical Service Cases

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what penalties have been imposed on general practitioners in medical service cases examined by family practitioner committees; how many general practitioners involved in medical service cases have previously been involved in such cases; and how many of these cases have been referred to the British Medical Association for disciplinary action;

(2) how many medical service cases have been dealt with by family practitioner committees nationally; and in how many of these cases allegations against doctors were found to be proven.

Mrs. Currie: Family practitioner committees may recommend to the Secretary of State that a medical practitioner found in breach of his terms of service (a) be warned to comply more closely with his terms of services in future; and/or (b) that an amount should be withheld from his remuneration.

In 1986, the Secretary of State disposed of 1,138 reports of formal investigations. Three hundred and nine practitioners were found in breach of their terms of service and the Secretary of State directed withholdings in 64 of these cases. Records are published in table 5.14 of the "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics", a copy of which is the Library. Figures are not available for the number of breach cases in which warnings are issued.

Information about the number of general medical practitioners who have been involved more than once in medical service committee cases is not analysed routinely; however, where a breach is established a practitioner's earlier record in this respect is ascertained and may be taken into account.

The General Medical Council is the regulatory body for general medical practitioners. The council is normally notified in cases where the Secretary of State directs a withholding.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will authorise the release of details concerning medical service case No. MS233, examined by the Cheshire family practitioner committee; and if he will also release details of any previous cases that the doctor in this case has been involved in.

Mrs. Currie: No. The Service Committee Regulations require that service committee reports should be sent only to the parties to the investigation and to the Secretary of State. As the reports often contain details of a confidential and personal nature, it would be in the interests of neither the complainant nor the practitioner for reports to be released.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance has been issued regarding National Health Service staff becoming involved in private nursing homes to which patients, originally under their care, are transferred.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 29 October at columns 416-17.

Maternity Benefits

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women received any kind of maternity benefits since October 1986.

Mr. Portillo: Information is not available in the precise form requested, but, from 21 October 1986 to 22 September 1987, 334,875 claims to maternity allowance were received.

In the period from 1 October 1986 to 29 September 1987, 270,565 awards of maternity grant were made. Maternity grant is no longer payable in respect of births occurring on or after 6 April 1987.

Information on the number of single payments for maternity needs from October 1986 to April 1987 is not available. Maternity payments from the social fund replaced single payments for maternity needs from 6 April 1987; 92,224 maternity payments from the social fund were made from 6 April 1987 to 22 September 1987.

Information on the number of recipients of statutory maternity pay since its introduction in April 1987 is not yet available. Statutory maternity pay replaced maternity pay, which was also paid by employers directly to their employees and was administered by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment under the employment protection Acts.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women received any kind of maternity allowances or benefits for each year since 1975 to 1985.

Mr. Portillo: Information is not available in the precise form requested, but in the 12 months ending 31 March in each year the following awards were made:

Maternity grant

Supplementary benefit single payments for maternity needs

	Thousands
1981	61
1982	101
1983	142
1984	188
1986	188

Note: Information on supplementary benefit single payments for maternity needs is taken from the Annual Statistical Enquiry (ASE) which was conducted in December of each year from 1981 to 1984 and relates to the number of payments made in the proceeding 12 months by those in receipt of supplementary benefit at the time of the inquiry. As a result, the record does not include all single payments made during the year. There was no inquiry in December 1985. The 1986 figures are taken from the ASE conducted in February that year and relate to payments made in the previous 12 months. Discrete information on supplementary benefit single payments for maternity needs prior to 1981 is not available.

In addition, between 1977 and 1985 employers were liable to pay qualifying employees maternity pay. This was administered by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment under the employment protection Acts.

Local Offices (Staffing)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of staffing levels at the local offices in Rusholme, Chorlton and Sale, broken down by type of work; how this compares with the position six months ago and 11 months ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The table details the number of staff in post on 1 November 1987, 1 May 1987 and 1 December 1986, at Rusholme, Chorlton and Sale local offices, and reflects organisational differences between the offices.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of staffing levels of (a) the Chorlton, (b) the Rusholme, and (c) the Sale offices of his Department dealing with appeals at present, six months ago and 12 months ago; and if he will give details of the other sections to or from which any personnel have been transferred.

Mr. Portillo: The staffing levels dealing with supplementary benefirt appeals for each of the offices are as follows:

	1 November 1987	1 May 1987	1 November 1986
Chorlton ILO	2	2	2
Rusholme ILO	5	3	2·5
Sale ILO	3·5	3	3

Since 1 November 1986 Chorlton ILO has not transferred any posts to or from the appeals section.

Since 1 November 1986 Rusholme ILO has transferred one post from the visiting section and one post from the single payment section to the appeals section. A part-time appeals officer has taken up full-time work in the appeals section.

Since 1 November 1986 Sale ILO has transferred a part-time post from the supplementary pensions section to the appeals section.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many old-age pensioners now receiving housing benefit will lose rights after the change in the social security system in April 1988.

Mr. Portillo: The estimated number of pensioner households (defined as those where either partner is aged 60 or over) who would be entitled to housing benefit, but for the changes next April, is 700,000.

South East Thames RHA

Mrs. Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on the administrative and travelling expenses incurred as a result of the South East Thames regional health authority's move to Bexhill;

(2) how much money the South East Thames regional health authority spent in rent on empty premises after the authority's move to Bexhill; and why.

Mrs. Currie: South East Thames regional health authority moved from its rented premises in Croydon to a purchased property in Bexhill. The RHA is required by the terms of its lease to pay rent until such time as the lease is disposed of or runs out.

There has been an intensive marketing exercise to dispose of the remainder of the lease and this is continuing. Further details may be obtained from the chairman of the South East Thames regional health authority.

Mrs. Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the reasons for the South East Thames regional health authority's change from resources allocation working party to the ACORN system of funding; and how this will affect the funding of the Maidstone district health authority.

Mrs. Currie: The resource allocation working party (RAWP) formula was developed to determine target allocations of funds to regional health authorities. It is open to regions to modify this approach to take account of local needs and circumstances in setting targets for district health authorities. South East Thames regional authority has refined its application of the RAWP formula by using ACORN (a classification of residential neighbourhoods) after consultation with districts. It did so because it considered this provided a more sensitive measurement of relative need for health care including social deprivation.

The overall effect on Maidstone, in cash terms at 1986-87 levels, will be to reduce its growth expectations over the period 1986-87 to 1993-94 from £2·6 million to £880,000, but the regional health authority has agreed to adjust the timing of these changes to assist Maidstone from 1988-89.

Mrs. Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money the South East Thames regional health authority has invested in information technology; what were the reasons behind the choice of system; when the system chosen was first marketed; what is its expected life span; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: This information is not held centrally. The regional health authority operates a number of information technology systems and my hon. Friend may wish to approach its chairman for available information on the money invested and the other details requested.

Abortions

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 29 October, at column 415, how many abortions in England and Wales performed upon resident women in the latest year for which figures are available were performed on women aged 41 years and over at 18 weeks or more gestation; and how many of these abortions were performed (a) for reason that the mother was carrying a seriously handicapped child, (b) in emergency to save the life of the mother and (c) for social reasons under Ground 2 of the Abortion Act.

Mr. Newton: The information is shown in the table:

Notifications of abortions performed on women aged 41 and over residents of England and Wales at 18 weeks or more gestation by statutory grounds (mentions), 1986

Statutory Grounds[1]	Number (mentions)
2	54
4	41

[1] The statutory grounds in the Abortion Act 1967 include: Ground 2 the continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk of injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman greater than if the pregnancy were terminated.

Ground 4—there is a substantial risk that if the child were born it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped.

Ground 5 — in emergency to save the life of the pregnant woman.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of abortions at 18 weeks or more gestation in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available was performed on overseas women; and what percentage of such abortions at 18 weeks or more gestation was performed in non-National Health Service facilities.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 26 October 1987]: The number of abortions at 18 weeks or more gestation carried out in England and Wales in 1986 was 8,276. Of these, 3,565 (43 per cent.) were to women usually resident in countries other than England, Wales or Scotland; and of the 3,565, 3,562 (99·9 per cent.) were performed in non-National Health Service facilities.

Telephone Exchange for the Deaf

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what further progress has been made in securing the future of the Royal National Institute for the Deaf telephone exchange for the deaf; what representations he has received on this subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what representations he has received regarding the telephone exchange for the deaf of the Royal National Institute for the Deaf in Gower street; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he intends to meet British Telecom concerning the future of the Royal National Institute for the Deaf's telephone exchange for the deaf; and when he will make a decision on its future funding and extension.

Mr. Scott: Officials from this Department met representatives of British Telecom, the Manpower Services Commission, the Department of Trade and Industry and OFTEL on 3 November to discuss the telephone exchange for the deaf. Further information is being provided by the Royal National Institute for the Deaf and a meeting is being arranged with its officials. In the meantime the Manpower Services Commission has offered to extend its present support until the end of February. We have received representations on this matter from 162 right hon. and hon. Members and 53 other people, and have also received two petitions.

NHS Property (Insurance)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to change the rules governing the insurance of National Health Service property; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: No.

Citizenship Registration

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will be in a position to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, dated 7 October, regarding claimants and fees for registration as British citizens.

Mr. Portillo: I will give the hon. Member a reply to his letter dated 7 October within the week.

Single People

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest estimate of the numbers of single people aged 18 to 59 years living with parents or relatives.

Mr. Portillo: The number of single people aged 18 to 59 years living with parents or relatives is estimated to have been just over 4 million in England and Wales in 1981, the latest year for which information is available.

Rate Rebates

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the take-up of rate rebates.

Mr. Portillo: A report was placed in the Library on 11 May 1987 presenting take-up estimates for housing benefit in 1984. These are the latest estimates. Full explanations are included of the methods and assumptions used in the estimates.

Washington Community Hospital

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when he expects building to start on the proposed community hospital in Washington;

(2) when he plans to commence building the proposed new district hospital to serve the people of the Houghton and Washington constituency.

Mrs. Currie: The timing of major capital developments is for the relevant regional health authority to determine in the light of local priorities and available resources. I understand that the Northern regional health authority is currently undertaking a detailed review of its capital programme and will be making firm decisions later this month. The hon. Member may therefore wish to write to the chairman of Northern regional health authority for further information.

Brighton Office

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the numbers and value of single payments paid by his Department's Brighton office for the most recent five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Portillo: The numbers and value of single payments made by the Department's Brighton local office are not available for any period before 10 May 1983. Figures for the period from then until 20 October 1987 are given in the following table:

Single payments made by Department of Health and Social Security Brighton local office—10 May 1983 to 20 October 1987

Period	Number of payments	Amount (£)
10 May 1983 to 10 April 1984	3,643	237,771
11 April 1984 to 9 April 1985	4,901	366,497
10 April 1985 to 8 April 1986	7,771	515,248
9 April 1986 to 7 April 1987	9,004	739,080
8 April 1987 to 20 October 1987	4,316	438,875

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what method will be used to establish priorities for the social fund administered by his Department's Brighton office for the first year of operation.

Mr. Portillo: This is a matter for the office's social fund officers to determine in the light of the guidance and directions. A copy of the social fund manual which sets out the guidance and directions is in the Library.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his best estimate of the number of loans and grants which will be made from the social fund by his Department's Brighton office during the first year of operation.

Mr. Portillo: The number of payments that will be made from the loans and grants budgets will depend upon the size of individual payments. This will be determined by the amounts applied for, and the decisions of individual social fund officers in accordance with the law and directions and in the light of the guidance. No firm estimates can therefore be given until the new scheme is in operation.

Social Fund

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what method will be used to establish the size of the budget for the social fund administered by his Department's Brighton office; what will be the budget for the fund for the first year of operation; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if it is his intention to allocate funds to the social fund for (a) Greenock, (b) Port Glasgow, (c) Strathclyde and (d) Scotland as a whole, in line with the total of single payments made in the financial year, 1986-87; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The grants and loans budgets for all offices were listed in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 4 November. The allocations are based largely on single payment expenditure in the latter part of 1986-87 but also reflect estimates of the need for social fund grants and loans based on the number and type of benefit recipients in each office.

London Lighthouse

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will be able to announce whether he will be allocating additional funding to allow London Lighthouse to complete its building programme.

Mr. Newton: We have already approved a capital grant of £500,000 to London Lighthouse. The Department is considering urgently the request for further support, and we shall announce a decision as soon as possible.

Benefits (Delays)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services in which areas on Merseyside claimants are not receiving girocheques from his Department as a result of the postal dispute; and what steps are being taken by his Department to ensure claimants receive their benefits on time.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that Post Office staff stopped work for only a short period of time and returned at 10 pm on 4 November. Normal delivery services have resumed and disruption to the payment of benefit was minimal.

Fuel-Direct Payments

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants are on fuel-direct payments.

Mr. Portillo: In February 1986 there were 178,500 direct payment arrangements for electricity and 132,000 for gas. These figures, which are the most recent available, are taken from the annual statistical inquiry. Some people will have had both their electricity and gas paid directly and will therefore be included in both figures.

Citizens Advice Bureaux

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what leaflets and other information concerning the availability of his Department's benefits are available for citizens advice bureaux to distribute to their clients.

Mr. Portillo: There are 70 leaflets covering all specific social security benefits. In addition there are 16 "client group" leaflets aimed at particular groups which provide details of all benefits for each group.

The whole range of leaflets is being amended to take account of changes in benefits and new leaflets are being produced to cover income support, family credit and the social fund. The Department is also assisting the National Association of Citizens' Advice Bureaux in the updating and amendment of its own information packs which it issues to all citizens advice bureaux.

Leukaemia

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any information on links between cases of leukaemia amongst children in the northern area of Southport and contamination of Southport beaches by discharges of nuclear waste from Sellafield nuclear power stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The latest available information in relation to the incidence of childhood leukaemia in the area served by Southport and Formby district health authority suggests no unusual trend. However, more recent data have been requested and I shall let the hon. Member have a further reply when these are received.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will express the value in real terms of the 1987 pensioners' Christmas bonus compared with its value in 1972, based upon movements in (a) the retail prices index and (b) average wages.

Mr. Scott: It is not yet possible to determine the real value of the 1987 Christmas bonus as compared with the 1972 bonus. At December 1986 prices, the 1972 Christmas bonus would have been worth £44·29. If increased in line with the increase in average male manual earnings, the 1972 bonus would have been worth £49·56 at December 1986.

Severe Disability Premium

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make renal dialysis a qualifying condition for the proposed severe disability premium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 2 November at columns 564-65.

Benefit Regulations (Interpretation)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance the Chief Adjudication Officer has issued on the meaning of adult in paragraph 18 of schedule 4 to the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements) Regulations 1983.

Mr. Portillo: The Chief Adjudication Officer's guidance on paragraph 18 of schedule 4 is contained in circular S 42/85, a copy of which is in the Library. Paragraph 1 of the circular says that any person aged 16 or over should be regarded as an adult.

Hospitals (Birmingham)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the future of regional specialties of hospitals in Birmingham.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 21 October 1987, c. 805]: The development of regional specialties is the responsibility of the regional health authority working where appropriate within guidelines set down by the Department. I understand that the West Midlands regional health authority is currently reviewing its mechanism for identifying and funding regional specialties, to enable it to achieve the maximum possible benefit from the resources available. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority for further information.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. John: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of claims for invalid care allowance are abated wholly or partly by receipt of other state benefits.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 2 November 1987]: About 2·7 per cent.

Mr. John: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims from married women, cohabiting women and women separated from their husbands have been refused because the overlapping benefit they receive exceeds the amount they would have received in invalid care allowance.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 2 November 1987]: I regret that the requested information is not available. Since June 1986, when the allowance was extended to married and cohabiting women, some 2,270 claims from women have been disallowed on account of the payment of other social security benefits which equal or exceed the weekly rate of invalid care allowance.

Mr. John: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the additional cost to the public funds of paying invalid care allowance in full to all successful claimants, irrespective of what other state benefits they receive.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 2 November 1987]: I regret that information on which an estimate could be made is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Nurses (Salaries)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current average salary of a National Health Service nurse; and how much is spent on average, per annum, on hiring a private or agency nurse.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 4 November 1987]: Information in the form requested is not available. The current basic salary scale for staff nurses, for example, is £7,300 to £8,600, and in addition they receive additional payments mainly for working overtime and unsocial hours. Present average earnings (excluding London weighting) of full-time staff nurses are estimated to be about 17 per cent. greater than basic pay. However, the maximum payment to a nurses' agency for work undertaken by an agency nurse is calculated on the mean of the appropriate NHS nursing and midwifery staffs' pay scale plus the agency's commission and employees' national insurance contribution, but information on additional payments made to such staff is not available and a direct comparison with a NHS nursing staff is not therefore possible. Moreover, agencies' commission varies and a number of assumptions have to be made, for example, as to the benefit to NHS staff of annual leave, sick leave, public holidays, uniforms and also additional management and administrative costs. Taking these factors into account it has been estimated in very broad terms that the cost of an agency staff nurse would be little different from that of a NHS staff nurse on the mid point of the pay scale and in some circumstances could be up to 12 per cent. less.

Blood

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many units of blood have been supplied by the National Blood Transfusion Service to non-National Health Service hospitals for each year since 1982.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 6 November 1987]: From 1982 the total number of units of blood supplied by regional transfusion centres to non-National Health Service hospitals is as follows:

	Number
1982	31,437
1983	40,786
1984	49,232
1985	54,327
1986	64,040

Social Security Bill 1987

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what the status of women aged 16 to 18 years who are also parents will be under clause 4 of the Social Security Bill 1987.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 6 November 1987]: Whilst clause 4 of the Social Security Bill 1987 removes general entitlement to income support from persons under the age of 18 it provides that, in prescribed circumstances, certain persons of or over the age of 16 are to be entitled. We intend that regulation will provide that a lone parent responsible for a child who is a member of his/her household will be entitled (as now) to benefit. The regulations will provide that, for couples, under 18, with a child, income support will be payable for the family group subject to the normal conditions of availability applying to one of the couple. Benefit will cease (as now) if the partner finds full-time work but will continue as a supplement to the training allowance if a YTS place is taken and the family income supplement is insufficient to meet its requirements by income support standards.

The status of women, under 18, who are also parents will not therefore be altered by the Bill.

Written Answers to Questions

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid to Africa

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in view of the United Nations Food and Agricultural Organisation's report that, for survival in 1987-88, Africa will need substantially more food aid, he will ensure that the percentage of gross national product which the United Kingdom spends on overseas aid is restored to 1970 levels by the end of the current financial year.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have seen the FAO report and agree that the problem of hunger in Africa remains. We have already provided relief assistance of over £25 million, including some £10 million of bilateral food aid to Africa. In addition, there is our substantial share of the European Community's food aid programme. The Government stand ready to respond swiftly and generously to appeals for further emergency assistance from within the substantial and growing aid programme announced last week.

ENVIRONMENT

Nuclear Waste

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites in England, Scotland and Wales are licensed for the dumping of radioactive materials; where they are located; and which local authorities are responsible for their safety.

Mr. Moynihan: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Green and White Papers

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department uses any guidelines when issuing Green and White Papers, in deciding whether or not to invite respondents to allow their submissions to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Ridley: Yes. It is the Department's policy that on all major consultation exercises on matters of general public interest respondents are explicitly asked whether they agree that copies of their responses may be placed in the Libraries of both Houses and in the departmental library.

Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the effects of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 (a) in absolute terms and (b) as a proportion of each work force on the numbers of people of the following categories: women, black and coloured, mentally disabled, physically disabled, and over 50 years of age, employed by each authority to which the provisions of that Act apply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Department does not have this information.

Street Lighting (Luton)

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to respond favourably to any requests from Bedfordshire county council for funds from the urban aid programme to improve street lighting in Luton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Luton district council and Bedfordshire county council are not among the authorities invited to submit proposals for urban programme funding. Street lighting expenditure would not normally be eligible for support except as part of an innovative scheme contributing to crime prevention.

Council House Sales

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will seek to extend statutory discounts to householders who are purchasing their homes under local authority equity sharing schemes.

Mr. Waldegrave: Secure public sector tenants who have the right to buy but cannot afford to buy outright already qualify for statutory discounts under the right to shared ownership. Local authorities may also offer substantial discounts to first-time buyers and other priority purchasers under voluntary equity-sharing schemes, but it would not seem appropriate to require a local authority to grant discount in a voluntary disposal.

Rateable Values

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the rateable value limits for the purpose of the Leasehold Reform Act 1967 as a consequence of his proposals to replace domestic rates with the community charge in the light of the recent decision of the European Court.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have no plans at this stage to extend the scope of leasehold enfranchisement for houses, but I propose to issue shortly a consultation paper on the implications for the Leasehold Reform Act 1967 and other landlord and tenant legislation of the proposed abolition of domestic rates.

Rural Housing

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's rural housing policy.

Mr. Waldegrave: The proposals in the White Paper "Housing: the Government's Proposals" (Cm. 214) will provide opportunities for improving housing in both rural and urban areas. I have had a useful discussion with interested groups on the implications for rural areas; and will take them into account as the new approach is developed.

Rural Areas

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all areas in England which he has designated as 'rural'.

Mr. Moynihan: The areas of the following district councils have been designated, in whole or part, under section 157 of the Housing Act 1985 as rural areas:

Alnwick District Council
Berwick upon Tweed Borough Council
Caradon District Council
Carrick District Council
East Devon District Council
Eden District Council
Kerrier District Council
Mid Devon District Council
New Forest District Council
North Cornwall District Council
North Devon District Council
North Norfolk District Council
Penwith District Council
Purbeck District Council
Restormel Borough Council
Scarborough Borough Council
South Hams District Council
South Lakeland District Council
Teignbridge District Council
Torridge District Council
West Dorset District Council
West Somerset District Council

The areas are specified in the following orders:

The Housing (Right to Buy) (Designated Rural Areas and Designated Regions) (England) Order 1981, S.I. 1980 No. 397;
The Housing (Right to Buy) (Designated Rural Areas and Designated Regions) (England) (No. 2) Order 1981, S.I. 1981 No. 940;
The Housing (Right to Buy) (Designated Rural Areas and Designated Regions) (England) Order 1982, S.I. 1982 No. 21;
The Housing (Right to Buy) (Designated Rural Areas and Designated Regions) (England) (No. 2) Order 1982, S.I. 1982 No. 187;
The Housing (Right to Buy) (Designated Rural Areas and Designated Regions) (England) Order 1986, S.I. 1986 No. 1695.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether there is a formal methodology for identifying and assessing deprivation as appropriate to rural situations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government do not use any specific methodology for identifying and assessing deprivation in rural areas. However, the Development Commission is required to target its activities on those areas, referred to as "rural development areas", which it regards as having the greatest concentrations of problems, and to select such areas by having regard to the following criteria:

(i) above average unemployment;
(ii) inadequate or unsatisfactory range of employment opportunities;
(iii) adverse effect from population decline or sparsity of population;
(iv) net outward migration of people of working age;
(v) age structure biased towards elderly people;
(vi) poor access to services and facilities.

The Housing Corporation has targeted its resources for rural housing on "rural stress areas". In identifying such areas, one of the criteria the corporation has used is location within a rural development area.

A study of rural deprivation, jointly commissioned by the Department of the Environment and the Development Commission, was completed in 1986 by Brian McLaughlin (then at the Essex Institute of Higher Education), and copies are in the House of Commons Library and in the Department's library.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria are employed following application from a local authority in considering an area for designation as 'rural'.

Mr. Moynihan: Applications are considered on their merits, with particular regard being paid to population density and the number of second homes in the area.

Spectrum Arena

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations have taken place between his Department and the Warrington and Runcorn development corporation concerning the Spectrum arena within the last month; and with what results.

Mrs. Roe: The Department has recently confirmed to the Development Corporation that consent would not be given under the New Towns Act for a disposal of the Spectrum building at less than the best consideration reasonably obtainable.

Inland Waterways

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the level of Government grant in real terms to inland waterways for every year from 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Moynihan: The table shows in cash terms and 1987-88 prices Government grant to the British Waterways Board in the years 1979-80 to 1987-88 together with the board's external financing limit (EFL), which comprises both the grant and an element of borrowing from the national loans fund.

	Grant (cash) £m	Grant (1987-88 prices) £m	EFL (cash) £m	EFL (1987-88 prices) £m
1979-80	22·8	39·6	25·7	44·6
1980-81	25·6	37·5	30·0	43·9
1981-82	28·4	37·9	31·6	42·1
1982-83	37·6	46·8	39·3	48·9
1983-84	39·8	47·3	40·8	48·5
1984-85	41·8	47·6	42·8	48·7
1985-86	43·5	46·7	44·1	47·4
1986-87	43·9	45·8	45·0	46·9
1987-88	44·0	44·0	45·0	45·0

As a result of this year's public expenditure round, BWB's EFL will be £46·8 million in 1988-89 with guideline figures of £47·9 million and £49·1 million for the following two years.

Archaeological Heritage

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to strengthen planning powers of local councils to ensure that Britain's archaeological heritage is protected and rescued when planning permissions are granted to developers.

Mr. Moynihan: No. I see no need to increase the powers of local planning authorities, which are already able to take into consideration the effect of a proposed development upon an ancient monument and its setting, and to impose appropriate conditions. Development affecting scheduled monuments also requires the consent of the Secretary of State, as well as planning permission.

Rating Reform

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if, pursuant to his answer of 26 October, columns 39-40, he will reproduce the table on the impact of the community charge in England using figures for 1984-85;

(2) if, pursuant to his answer of 26 October, columns 37-38, he will reproduce the table on the regional impact of the community charge in England using figures for 1984-85.

Mr. Howard: No. I have already given my latest estimates in respect of these matters based on 1985-86 information. I intend shortly to publish further and more up-to-date estimates.

AIDS

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is aware of any research associating the contamination of drinking water by the AIDS virus with the flushing of used condoms into the sewerage system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I am not aware of any such research. I am advised that there is no risk of contracting AIDS from drinking water because the disease is not spread by ingestion and the virus is inactivated by chlorination and removed by water treatment.

Used Condoms

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has had any discussions with manufacturers of condoms concerning the possibility of including the Keep Britain Tidy symbol on the packets of those products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand there have been discussions between the Keep Britain Tidy Group and the main manufacturers, and that the company has agreed to print the Keep Britain Tidy symbol on its packaging.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has given any advice on the environmental aspects of suitable methods of disposal of used condoms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: No. The Department's advice to local authorities and other waste disposal agencies on the disposal of clinical waste is contained in waste management paper No. 25, published in 1983. This does not deal specifically with the question raised, but the general principles of safe handling will apply. The need for Government advice to the users of condoms is a policy matter for the Department of Health and Social Security.

Hedgerows and Stone Walls

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to reduce the loss of hedgerows and stone walls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Hedgerows and stone walls are a dominant feature of the landscape in most parts of the country and it is the Government's policy to encourage their retention wherever practicable. Losses do, however, occur for a variety of reasons including, for example, the recent storm damage. When losses occur, grant aid is available from the Countryside Commission for replanting or reinstatement. Grants are also available to farmers from my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, at the rate of 60 per cent. in less-favoured areas and 30 per cent. elsewhere, for hedge planting and laying and the erection of traditional stone walls.

Portraits

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the whereabouts of the portraits of the first chair of the London county council and the last chair of the Greater London council; and if he will arrange for the portraits to be displayed within the precincts of the House.

Mr. Chope: The portraits are in secure storage within the care of the London residuary body. Any question of displaying them within the precincts of the House of Commons would be a matter for the authorities of the House in consultation with the London residuary body.

Mobile Homes

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he considers, within the terms of his advice in the code of guidance issued under the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977, that park (mobile) homes provide satisfactory accommodation for housing homeless families with children; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: The improved design and construction of modern park (mobile) homes can make them suitable for the accommodation of homeless families with children. My Department intends to discuss with the local authority associations and voluntary bodies the possibility of modifying the advice in the code on this.

Rented Housing

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is satisfied that housing associations will be able to raise sufficient private finance to make full use of the new arrangements under which they can provide housing for rent using a mixture of private and public funds.

Mr. Ridley: I believe the potential for housing associations to raise private finance will be greatly enhanced by the formation of a new body called the Housing Finance Corporation. This has been set up on the initiative of the Housing Corporation, the National Federation of Housing Associations and a number of City interests. I understand it will have as a primary object the giving of assistance in providing finance for registered housing associations. This is an objective the Government whole heartedly support as a means of bringing additional non-public sector resources into housing associations.

Until the development of the Government's new private finance initiatives, registered housing associations have been very largely dependent upon finance from the Exchequer for their development and renovation work.

This has been in the form of loans from the Housing Corporation and local authorities, partially refinanced by housing association grant (HAG) paid by the Exchequer. In future the Government hope that an increasing proportion of the loan finance needed by housing associations will come from the private sector. But Exchequer grant support will clearly continue to be necessary in many cases as well in order to enable registered housing associations to charge rents at a reasonably affordable level for their tenants, most of whom have low incomes. In future, therefore, a growing number of registered associations will need to look to mixed sources of finance to support their work, partly public and partly private.

The Housing Corporation is a non-departmental public sector body whose members I appoint. It already carries out certain functions in connection with the payment of public sector grants to registered housing associations and I intend that this role should be expanded under provisions to be included in forthcoming legislation. I commend the initiative of the Housing Corporation in helping to promote the formation of the Housing Finance Corporation as one particular vehicle to help raise private finance for registered housing associations. I know they have been able to rely in their endeavours upon valuable advice and assistance from CIPFA Services Ltd. and James Capel and Co. I understand that it is intended that the Housing Finance Corporation will have a particular role in assisting some of the smaller associations which may initially need more help in this matter.

I understand that the Housing Finance Corporation expects to operate by raising loan finance in the capital markets in substantial tranches and then lending to individual registered housing associations for identified schemes and programmes. In lending to housing associations it and other providers of loan finance will need security from the associations concerned, which will often take the form of charges upon the associations' assets, most of which are the housing they own. The Housing Corporation will need to approve the giving of such charges under its powers under section 9 of the Housing Associations Act 1985. I am asking the Housing Corporation to satisfy itself that associations do not over-commit their assets as security for private sector development loans, and to use its best endeavours to ensure that associations plan to generate sufficient income to service their loans and maintain their property adequately. On this understanding I have indicated that I am content that charges can be given by associations and approved by the Housing Corporation and that recovery of housing association grants will be subordinated to the private sector charges.

The Housing Corporation has proposed that it should be a member of the Housing Finance Corporation, and that the chief executive of the Housing Corporation should be one of its directors. It has proposed this in view of the importance of developing new channels of private finance for registered housing associations, and of ensuring that these are well harmonised with the Housing Corporation's own supervisory and grant functions. The Housing Corporation has, however, made clear that its involvement with the Housing Finance Corporation in no way implies any preferential treatment by it of housing associations dealing with the Housing Finance Corporation as against any other providers of private finance to housing associations, nor any financial liability towards it other than a £1 nominal shareholding. On that understanding, and having regard to the particular attention to be given to the needs of smaller associations, I have approved Housing Corporation participation initially on the basis proposed.

The Housing Finance Corporation has also asked me to approve the appointment of David Hopkinson as its first chairman. Mr. Hopkinson was formerly chief executive of the M and G Group and is currently a member of the Housing Corporation. He combines great knowledge and experience of finance and housing. I believe that he will be an excellent chairman, and I have gladly approved his appointment.

The Government welcome the creation of the Housing Finance Corporation and support its objectives. I am particularly glad that the new body is being established as a purely private sector body, formally constituted as an industrial and provident society. It will make its own commercial judgments about its borrowing and lending. It will not receive any grants or subsidies from the Housing Corporation or the Government; and neither the Government nor the Housing Corporation are guaranteeing or standing behind its operations in any way. It will not distribute any profits it makes, but I understand it will aim to build up some surpluses over time to enable it to expand further its support for housing associations.

I welcome this expression of confidence by the private sector interests involved in the prospects of the housing association movement and the potential for investment in it. I hope that increasingly other lenders will also come forward to support the expansion and diversification of housing associations.

Local Authorities (Financial Management)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for strengthening the financial management of local authorities.

Mr. Howard: My Department has today written to the local authority associations, the Audit Commission and the relevant accountancy bodies, explaining the action the Government propose to take on two related measures to extend the powers and duties of local authority treasurers and auditors.

Following the proposals in the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government", we propose that the local authority treasurer should be required by law to hold a specified professional qualification, and that he should have a duty to report to his council if in his opinion it is proposing to make an unlawful payment or incur an unlawful loss or deficiency, or if its proposed expenditure is likely to exceed its available resources for the year in question. The council will be obliged to consider this report at a meeting held within 21 days of the sending of the report, and determine what action it proposes to take. It will be prohibited from proceeding with the actions which are the subject of a report, or from incurring new contractual commitments if the report concerns prospective overspending, until it has held such a meeting.

My Department has also issued a consultation document on proposals to enable auditors of local authorities to take early action to secure compliance by authorities with the law governing their financial affairs. Copies of this document have been placed in the Library.

These proposals are based on recommendations made by the Widdicombe committee and on proposals for changes in audit legislation submitted by the Audit Commission.

I believe these proposals will strengthen the position of the treasurer and the auditor, and thereby discourage imprudent behaviour and prevent the erosion of sound financial management practices in local government. It is our intention to introduce provisions to this effect during the present Session of Parliament.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the date of expiration of the terms of office of the chief executive and deputy chief executive of the London Docklands development corporation, respectively, the dates when he expects reappointments to be completed in each case and the expected dates when they will be in post.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer, 9 November 1987]: The chief executive's term of office expires formally on 1 January 1988. The deputy chief executive's departure date is to be in February next year.

I am advised that the dates on which successors will be appointed and take up post are not yet fixed.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Modern Language Teaching

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his Department's policy on the use of satellites in the teaching of modern languages.

Mrs. Rumbold: We encourage school teachers to make creative use of authentic foreign language materials, including sound recordings and broadcasts. The Council for Educational Technology is also currently examining the potential of satellite broadcasting for enhancing the primary and secondary curriculum, including the teaching of modern languages.

Universities (Funding)

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, in the light of the increased university funding forecast in the Chancellor's Autumn Statement, he will indicate what increase in funding will be proposed by the University Grants Committee for the University of East Anglia for 1988-89 and 1989-90; and what have been the reductions in funding received by this university in the last three years.

Mr. Jackson: Provisional allocations of basic recurrent grant to universities for the academic years 1988-89 and 1989-90 were announced on 19 February 1987. The University Grants Committee will be considering over the next few months the development of a targeted restructuring programme to meet the Government's objectives as set out by my right hon. Friend on 3 November, at columns 798-99 and the adjustments to be made to the recurrent grant allocations of individual universities. Recurrent grant allocated to the University of East Anglia over the last three years is as follows:

	£ million
1984-85	15·0
1985-86	14·7
1986-87	15·0

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Norwich, South on 3 November at columns 798-99, what will be the real percentage increase in university funding in 1988-89 and 1989-90; and what have been the reductions in this funding since 1981.

Mr. Jackson: Provision is being made to increase recurrent grant paid to universities on the advice of the University Grants Committee by 8 per cent. in cash terms or 3·5 per cent. in real terms taking account of the GDP deflator between the financial years 1987-88 and 1988-89, and to remain about level in real terms for 1989-90. Recurrent grant to the universities increased by 5 per cent. in real terms between 1980-81 and 1987-88. Such grant amounts to just over half universities' total recurrent income which, from the latest figures available, increased by 7·7 per cent. in real terms between the academic years 1980-81 ad 1985-86.

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Norwich, South on 3 November at columns 798-99, what procedures he has in mind to establish whether or not universities are run properly.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend agreed an appropriate programme of action with the University Grants Committee and the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals in November 1986. This makes provision for regular reports on post-Jarratt efficiency gains, and other steps to encourage better management, including improved accounting procedures. In addition, the UGC now has each university's financial forecasts and academic plans, which enable the committee to take a view on institutions' financial prospects and the realism of their plans.

Access Courses

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to increase the funding available for access courses to higher education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Government attach importance to the broadening of access to higher education. The White Paper "Higher Education: Meeting the Challenge" (Cm. 114) set out the Government's approach, which was reflected in the Government's expenditure plans announced by my right hon. Friend on 3 November. My right hon. Friend looks to local education authorities and institutions of higher education to take action within the resources available.

Financial Management Skills

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, when he will publish proposals for the training of head teachers in financial management skills; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend is considering the most useful way forward having regard in particular to the
